OUR attention has been called to the fact that in our acknowledgments of contributions for Chinese famine relief, a gift of $14.00 was credited to R. C. Roe, Texas, whereas it should have been credited as follows: "Maybell Roe, $4.00 R. C. Roe, $5.00, R. W. Roe, $5.00. We also find that we failed to include a gift of $25.00 from the Northminster Chinese Sunday School of Baltimore, Md., and the Chinese Christian Service of Baltimore contributed $162.48, which was not properly credited. We are glad to make these corrections.

Pastor Paul Kanamori, the great Japanese Christian evangelist, writes to the Christian Herald telling of a happy reunion of his family at which Mrs. Kanamori and all the children were present, and which was held to celebrate his return to Japan after two years of absence. He is now preparing a spiritual appeal with which he hopes to reach at least 100,000 Japanese. The great burden of his prayer is that it may be made an entering wedge which will result in giving the Gospel message to the whole nation of sixty millions.

A. Q. Phoenix, Ariz., writes of the Disarmament Conference: "The great meeting is endeavoring, in the same path as the League of Nations, to do some great thing for the welfare of the human race without taking counsel of God. No man or number of men ever will do what it is attempted, except the one Man, Christ Jesus. If the limitation of armaments means simply a few less guns or vessels, then I for one shall not say a word for it. . . . Let the Church pray, and the Christian Herald and all preachers preach, until Christ with peace comes to rule the whole earth."

The Church and its allied forces are not only praying that the Conference may, from the very outset, seek to be led in accordance with the Divine will, but that it may be made the means of inducing the leading nations to avoid war, to reduce materially their costly armaments and to settle their differences by means of peaceful arbitration. Its immediate aim is by limitation of armies and navies to lighten the oppressive burdens, and further to bind the co-operating nations to adjust their differences by arbitration. The purpose is one which should commend itself to all right thinking people. Human power can not of itself bring about world peace, but it can work in line with God's purposes.

Miss R. H., Kansas City, Kan. The history of the origin of speech is largely speculative. Gen. 2: 19 is held by some authorities to indicate that speech was coeval with the creation of the first human being, and that he was endowed with reason and the capacity of vocal utterance or expression. Many writers have endeavored to trace the beginnings and growth of human speech and the origin of languages, but few agree. Trench, in his notable little volume on "The Study of Words," holds that "God gave man language, just as He gave him reason and just because He gave him reason, for what is man's word but his reason, coming forth that it may behold itself? He gave it to him because he could not be man that is be a social being, without it."

"Troubled Soul," St. Louis, Mo. Remember that even Jesus Himself was "tempted in all things as we are." In your hours of trial, keep on praying, and you will be delivered from the tormenting thoughts that assail you. Never forget that God hears and answers the prayer of the faithful heart. He does not suffer us to be tempted beyond what we are able. We have sent your letter to the Prayer League and they will make it a subject of special appeal.

Reader. We can not conceive of a minister of the Gospel using the phrase, "If there is a God," as the expression of his own personal doubt. It is quite possible that it may have been used in some way to illustrate the condition of a soul in doubt and travail, or as an expression wrung from some one in sore trouble and groping in the dark. Rather than run the risk of doing him an injustice, why not ask him personally how he intended these words in his sermon to be understood and applied? If he is a Christian pastor, he will willingly explain. As to your other question, we have no personal knowledge of the facts, so can not discuss them.

Mrs. C. M. J., Bronx, N. Y. The passage in Matt. 5: 25 refers to the settlement of disputes over matters that are cognizable by law, but without going to court about it. The advice is to agree quickly on a settlement, as, when once in the hands of the court, you may lose much more than you bargain for. The object of Jesus in giving this advice was that they might learn to settle their disputes privately and as between brethren in the faith, instead of stirring up bitterness by a legal wrangle.

I. S. H., Winterset, Ia. If a book is worth reading, it should be read thoroughly, so as to be rightly understood and appreciated. We have no commendation for the lightning reader who disposes of a book of 240 pages in 40 minutes—six pages to the minute—whether he be bishop or layman. Some people can glance through a book and get at the object of the writer at express speed; but it is the virtue of a good reader that he is thorough, and gives intelligent attention to the author's argument or narrative. One who "skips" all but the action of a story may easily grasp a general impression of a book in the time you mention, but he can hardly be said to have read it.

C. C., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Having read with interest your article on disarmament, I agree that church members should pray for peace. But the Bible says, 'faith without works is dead.' So why should not this great nation, with its forty million church members take the first step toward bringing about peace? All thinking people realize that there are two things which cause nearly all wars: protection of foreign interests and protection of foreign trade. There is probably not more than one person out of every ten thousand who has foreign interests. These investments are not only a great expense to the mass of the people, but are one of the most active causes of war. So why can we not withdraw our national protection from those investments after giving the investors a limited time in which to dispose of their interests, as government protection was withdrawn from the liquor traffic when we found it a detriment to the welfare of the people?"

J. B. S., Woodstock, Ill., writes: "Why are not the catechism and Apostles' Creed taught more generally in the Sunday schools? There is scarcely a child who has been taught the Catechism and but few can repeat the Creed, yet these are the fundamentals of all Christian faith and belief. We read a great deal about the Home Altar being overthrown, but the Church does nothing to keep up the Home Altar. Life is so full of work, worry and trouble, that the head of the household has little time to think, and formulate a prayer for morning or evening sacrifice. What I would like to suggest is this: Let the Christian Herald get up a Family Prayer-book, giving a short prayer, prefaced by a Scripture verse, for three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, and for both morning and evening, with form for saying grace at the table. Then let it carry the Catechism into every household where it goes, prefaced by the Ten Commandments, the Apostles' Creed and the Lord's Prayer. It should be published like a pocket testament, small enough to be carried in one's pocket. I think many would be pleased to have a Prayer-book to help them out at Family Altar worship, for there are few that are able to formulate a morning and evening prayer. Of course, the book should be undenominational, so that all Christians can use it. Next to the Bible, it would be the greatest book sent out of that great house, that has done so much good throughout the world."

J. R. G., Blooming Glen, Pa. The only remedy to prevent the use of slang among the little folks is to take no paper into the home that makes slang a feature. There are fortunately some dailies and weeklies that are comparatively free from this disturbing quality, and which print articles that will entertain and instruct the youthful minds without vulgarizing them.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by the Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President; Rae D. Henkle, Secretary. SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittance should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald. FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed to Canada, add fifty cents; outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price. Canadian remittances accepted at par.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least three weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. For example, Dec. 21 signifies that subscription expires with the last issue of December 1921.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address. LETTERS should be addressed, the CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Copyright, 1921, the Christian Herald. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post-Office Department, Ottawa, Canada.

Be Well and Strong

Improve Your Figure

BE what Nature intended you to be—a normal, healthy, energetic and attractive woman. If you are not perfectly well, get at the cause.

Are you too thin?
Are you too fleshy?
Is your figure attractive?

Let me teach you how to regain health and figure. I've instructed over 100,000 women; have had 20 years' experience; have successfully treated the most stubborn ailments. Physicians endorse my work.

I teach you by personal letters. You devote but a few minutes daily to the work in your room. Results are quick and permanent. Tell me your height, weight and ailments. I will respect your confidence and tell you what you need. Then you can engage my services if you wish. Write me now—today—don't forget it.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 18

1819 Broadway, New York

KONDON'S CATARRHAL JELLY

is guaranteed by 30 years service to millions of Americans. Kondon's works wonders for your cold, sneezing, cough, chronic catarrh, headache, sore nose, etc.

FREE 20 Treatments on receipt of your name and address
KONDON
Minneapolis, Minn.

Druggists have it 30¢

MOTION PICTURE USERS

CHURCHES, Schools, Institutions, and other non-theatrical users, contemplating the purchase of motion picture machines and films, should obtain a booklet of valuable information which is supplied without cost by

THE ASSOCIATED MANUFACTURERS OF SAFETY STANDARD FILMS & PROJECTORS
440 Fourth Avenue Suite 1413 New York City

RESINOL

Soothing and Healing
Stops Itching
and Promptly Relieves
Skin Disorders

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your home 30 days. Should you not like it return at our expense. Million members of families now using Hoosier Stoves, best made, the latest design and guaranteed for two years. Ask your dealer to show you "Hoosiers" or write us for our big free book showing photographs. Large assortment and sizes at a big saving. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St. Marion, Ind.

No Soap Better —For Your Skin— Than Cuticura

Sample each (Soap, Ointment, Talcum) free of Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

Books & Bibles at Cut Prices

Send for our large illustrated free catalogue showing thousands of different books, Bibles, Scripture post cards and wall mottoes at cut prices. Splendid line of Christmas Books, post cards and greeting cards. Salesmen wanted. Liberal commission. Turn your spare hours into money.

SHAW PUBLISHING COMPANY
24 W. Washington St., Dept. 110, Chicago, Ill.

WILL BE A LASTING JOY TO ALL BOYS AND GIRLS WHO MAY OWN THEM

THE WONDER
BOOK OF

WHY & WHAT?

CHILDREN'S STORIES

From the Bible

With 48 Superb Bible Pictures in Colors by

HARRY G. THEAKER

A BOOK that every boy or girl will want and every parent be glad to see. It answers hundreds of the questions that little Miss "Wants-to-Know" and her Brother, "I-Wonder," are constantly asking.

The book is not a dictionary, nor an encyclopædia, but a bright, readable volume, every page of which is full of interest and entertainment. There are HUNDREDS OF PICTURES, amusing, quaint and instructive, that are alone well worth the price of the volume.

The COLOR PLATES, each taking a whole page, are specially prepared, and are dainty works of art, at once pleasing and educational.

List of Color Plates

Sections of an Atlantic Liner Favourite Dogs
The Races of Mankind
An Iceberg
A Volcano in Eruption
A Wonderful Mountain Railway

Some Favourite Birds
An Atlantic Airship
Animal Helpers of Man
The World's Most Wonderful Viewpoint
A Blast Furnace
A Giant Crane at Work

Size 10x7½ inches—256 pages, large clear type

Size 8½x6½ inches—344 pages, large clear type

These two fine books will be the gift supreme for many boys and girls

THE BOOK THAT ANSWERS CHILDREN'S QUESTIONS

with beautiful illustrations on nearly every page

A Few of the Chapters

|                                    |                               |                         |
|------------------------------------|-------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Aircraft                           | Glaciers                      | How we See              |
| Animals of Long Ago                | Houses of all kinds           | Ice                     |
| Animals that Help Man              | How a Motor Car Works         | Machinery, Wonders of   |
| Astronomy                          | How our Food comes to us      | Mountains, How Formed   |
| Bees and their Work                | How Pins and Needles are made | Polar Exploration       |
| Blood, Circulation of the          | How the Clock Works           | Snow                    |
| Can we always believe our Eyes?    | How we get our Clothes        | Trees                   |
| Caves, Wonderful                   | How we get our News-papers    | Waterfalls, Great       |
| Coal; what it means to us          | How we get Candy and Biscuits | What are Comets?        |
| Cranes that build houses and ships | How we Hear                   | What is a Cinema?       |
| Fire and what it does              | How we Move and Work          | What is Glass?          |
| Flowers, Wild                      | and scores of others          | What is inside a Watch? |
|                                    |                               | What is the Sun?        |
|                                    |                               | Winter Sports           |

But what a lot there is to learn! No wonder children are forever asking "Why?" and "What?" and "How?" and Daddy sometimes wears a puzzled look.

Special Combination Offer

The Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and a copy of "Why & What" both postpaid for..... $3.50
The book, sold separately, postpaid for..... $2.00

The list of colored illustrations is too lengthy to print here, but they are all Bible subjects selected with special care to illustrate the text.

This is the book that parents have long wanted to read to their children.

It is ideal in size, contents and beautiful colored illustrations, and we anticipate a large demand especially from those who have already written to us to find such a book and offer it to Christian Herald readers.

These two excellent volumes will be a welcome addition to any boy's and girl's home collection of good books. They are not only entertaining, but thoroughly educational. They are marvels of quality when the low price is considered. The 48 fine colored illustrations in "Children's Stories from the Bible" are well worth the price asked for the complete book. Order early so that there may be no disappointment in having delivery on time.

Special Combination Offer

The Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and a copy of "Children's Stories from the Bible," both postpaid for.... $3.50
The book, sold separately, postpaid for..... $2.00

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD : : BIBLE HOUSE : : NEW YORK

For the sake of your health, take care of your teeth

COLGATE'S Ribbon Dental Cream is safe. It contains no dangerous acids, no harsh grit. Through the double-action of its chief constituents (chalk and soap) it cleans thoroughly. The fine precipitated chalk loosens deposits upon the teeth. At the same time, the pure vegetable oil soap washes away the loosened particles.

Always brush the upper teeth downward; the lower teeth upward.

Use Colgate's every morning, and especially at night before retiring.

Bad teeth endanger the health, often being responsible for rheumatism, indigestion, heart troubles, impairment of sight, etc. Regular brushing twice a day with a safe dentifrice, and examination twice a year by a dentist are necessary to keep your teeth in good condition.

Many people are suffering unnecessary pain and regret because they have failed to observe these simple rules.

Don't let your teeth ache before you begin to take care of them. Protect them now, no matter how strong and sound you think they are.

Colgate's Ribbon Dental Cream has no druggy taste; its flavor is delicious. Children like it on this account, and easily form the habit of using it regularly. Colgate's makes care of the teeth a pleasure—not a task.

One Druggist writes us: "People take up fads, but they always come back to Colgate's."

COLGATE & CO. Est. 1806 NEW YORK
In Canada: 137 McGill Street, Montreal

Colgate's is recommended by more dentists than any other dentifrice

CHRISTIAN HERALD

An Illustrated Weekly for the Home

An Indian Woman of South America

GOLD DUST

N. K. F. Co.
1921

Every kitchen shelf should have its package of Gold Dust ready for helpful, every-day use. Look for the Twins on the package. Be sure it is the real Gold Dust you buy.

Shining, Spotless Kitchens

FOR Big Kitchens. For Little Kitchens. For every Kitchen—Gold Dust! Gold Dust—soft and soapy—and oh, so “sweet-cleansing!”

Here's what the matron of a Children's Home—a Home noted for its shining Kitchen and fresh, clean Dormitories—has to say about Gold Dust:

“Every Monday morning we make a soft soap of Gold Dust, using four heaping tablespoonfuls to every quart of boiling water. When cool, the ‘soap’ is ready for use. And it is so cleansing. So quick in sanitary results. So easy to clean with. With this Gold Dust soft soap every corner of our ‘Home’ is kept sweet and sanitary—and our big Kitchen spotless and shining.”

Gold Dust contains more soap than ordinary washing powders—makes the quickest, soapiest, most cleansing “soap jelly” you can use!

See! Gold Dust dissolves completely. That is why Gold Dust rinses away perfectly and leaves only wholesome cleanliness.

Let the Gold Dust

Twins do your work

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

(IN WHICH IS INCORPORATED WORLD OUTLOOK)

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

GRAHAM PATTERSON, PUBLISHER

"CONTENT with what we have, we seek nothing that is another's. We only wish to do with you that finer, nobler thing which no nation can do alone. I can speak officially only for the United States. OUR HUNDRED MILLIONS FRANKLY WANT LESS OF ARMAMENT AND NONE OF WAR."—President Harding addressing the Opening Session of the Washington Conference.

A New Day for the World

America's Proposal at the Opening of Washington Conference Blazes Way for Human Method of Dealing with Human Needs

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

IN COMPANY with a large number of newspaper correspondents and also of notables from many lands I was unable to secure a seat in the conference chamber at the first meeting of the Conference on Limitation of Armament and Far Eastern Questions, but I did get near enough to the door to catch what I like to believe was sufficient to the real spirit of the historic occasion, and to compare my impressions with those of the fortunate few who were present.

And it is an astonishing fact that the one point which all made, the one thing which created the most comment was the marked difference between this Conference and the one at Paris.

The Conference opened with a prayer by Dr. Abernathy, a Baptist minister, and the President's own pastor. What could be more natural or more to be expected! And yet several of the delegates from foreign countries expressed great astonishment that if a prayer was offered it was not offered by some great ecclesiastic or at least with greater formality. It was very noticeable, however, in spite of this very small quantity of criticism, the gathering seemed to accept the prayer as a most NECESSARY part of the Conference. It would not have opened in the right way without a prayer.

Then the proceedings went forward without any unnecessary formality or delay. The President's address of welcome was a noble utterance, anticipating in its language the immediate challenge laid down on the table by Secretary Hughes.

There was no gilded hall surrounding the delegates. No tapestries nor ancient paintings. There was a big business-like U-shaped table around which the delegates of the different nations sat in a very business-like way, and a green rug on the floor, very plain and office looking.

It is worth while to remember what was the important sentence or the group of sentences in the President's address. As for example:

"The United States welcomes you with unselfish hands. We harbor no fears; we have no sordid ends to serve; we suspect no enemy; we contemplate or apprehend no conquest. Content with what we have, we seek nothing which is another's. We only wish to do with you that finer, nobler thing which no nation can do alone. I can speak officially only for our United States. OUR HUNDRED MILLIONS FRANKLY WANT LESS OF ARMAMENT AND NONE OF WAR."

WITH those words the President for the American people voiced the feeling of the people. And he was followed in a remarkably business-like statement from the Secretary of State, openly and without concealment, proposing to the other powers to cut the navies by a regular and systematic reduction in a proportion measured by the respective naval units of each country represented in the Conference.

Under the American plan there would be a ten-year naval holiday, with the United States, Great Britain and Japan scrapping at once sixty-six capital ships, aggregating 1,878,043 tons. The United States would scrap thirty vessels, aggregating 843,740 tons; Great Britain nineteen, aggregating 583,375 tons, and Japan seventeen, aggregating 448,928 tons. Within three months after the conclusion of an agreement the United States would have eighteen capital ships, Great Britain twenty-two and Japan ten. The tonnage of the three nations would be 500,650, 604,450 and 299,700, respectively.

In detail the American project is as follows:

That for not less than ten years competitive naval building shall by agreement cease as between Great Britain, the United States and Japan.

That all capital ships, building or planned, shall be scrapped and a few, recently placed in the water, be destroyed within three months of ratification of the agreement.

That older ships also shall be destroyed, reducing the British battleship force to twenty-two, the American to eighteen and the Japanese to ten, each ship to be retained being specifically named.

That during the agreement no capital craft shall be laid down except under a detailed replacement scheme, which would provide for ultimate equality of the British and American fleets and for a Japanese force at 60 per cent. of the strength of either of the others.

That all other naval craft shall be similarly provided for in the same ratio, specific figures for the aggregate tonnage in each class being stated.

That no capital ships hereafter laid down shall exceed 35,000 tons.

That the life of a battleship shall be fixed at twenty years and that ships to be replaced shall be destroyed before the replacement vessel is more than three months past completion.

That no battleship replacement whatever shall be undertaken for ten years from date of the agreement.

That no naval building of any character shall be undertaken in any of the three countries on foreign account during the life of the agreement.

That no combat craft shall be acquired except by construction, and none shall be so disposed of that it might become part of another navy.

That naval aircraft shall be disregarded in the scaling down processes, as a problem incapable of solution owing to the convertibility of commercial aircraft for war purposes.

That regulations to govern conversion of merchant craft for war purposes shall be drawn up, because of the importance of the merchant marine "in inverse ratio to the size of naval armaments."

THIS method of doing business without the customary diplomatic sparring and formal proceedings known to all diplomatic circles in Europe for centuries took away the breath of the foreign delegates. As one of the large London dailies said, commenting on the first day of the Conference: "It was the climax of a week of moral wonders." The simple fact that out at Arlington, at the burial of the Unknown Soldier the President of the United States had led the great multitude in saying the Lord's Prayer, seemed to stun some of the high and mighty from overseas. The plunging at once into the subject by the Secretary of State bewildered the foreign delegates. They were expecting the regular diplomatic and European tactics, to occupy at least the greater part of a week before anything vital was suggested.

But if these men only knew Secretary Hughes as I knew him when we were students together in Brown University, they would not have wondered at the way

THEY SPEAK FOR FRANCE AT THE ARMS PARLEY

Left to right: Albert Sarraut, Minister of Colonies; Premier Briand; and former Premier Viviani

ITALY'S CHIEF DELEGATES AT THE CONFERENCE

Left to right: Senator Albertini; Senator Schanzer, head of the delegation; and Ambassador Ricci

he proceeded to get down to real business. For one of the characteristics of the Secretary as I remember him was an impatience with mere formality and a readiness to go right at the task in hand without wasting time or words.

"Gentlemen," he seemed to say, "we have met to discuss limitation of armaments, not to compliment one another. Let us therefore discuss limitation of armaments so that you can get home in some sort of decent time without running up too big a hotel bill or getting so tired of the whole thing that you will want to adjourn without really doing anything."

That is the way the Hughes I knew in Brown was in the habit of acting, and I, for one, was not at all surprised to see him act that way the first day of the Conference. But to nearly all the delegates from abroad his proposal fell like a "bomb" in the midst.

"Good!" I found myself saying. "I am in favor of bombs of that sort. Let them fall in large quantity, until the old diplomacy and delay and sparring of the European method is smashed to smithereens." This is not Paris nor Europe, but the United States, and this Conference is not servilely copying any custom made sacred by the old world, but we are acting like ourselves, and beginning a new day for the welfare of mankind.

IT IS not possible for any one who was in Washington during the day of the first meeting of the Conference to express in any written report of the occasion the, feeling of the people all over the city. I said I did get near enough the door to catch something of the real spirit of the day. But it was when the people came out of the beautiful Continental Memorial Hall that one could feel the emotion that had been aroused by what had been said and done. There was astonishment, wonder, visible excitement, awe on the faces as they turned almost instinctively towards the sky. An expectant eager crowd of the people, the common people, met the other people coming out, with question and exclamation. The scene outside the Hall was to me fully as dramatic as that inside. For the presence of that waiting crowd where I stood was an indication of the deep interest the people felt in the Conference.

Continued on page 875

President Welcomes the Peace Resolutions

THE Christian Herald Peace Endorsement Resolutions which were sent in by the thousands of churches and hundreds of thousands of church members were formally presented to President Harding a few days before the first sitting of the Washington Conference. The story of that presentation, as it impressed Mr. Patterson and the Editor-in-Chief, may be of interest to the readers of the Christian Herald, who responded so wonderfully to the appeal for the action on the resolutions which flooded the office of the Herald, and are still coming in.

Your Editor-in-Chief has had difficulty in getting interviews with crowned heads, and with English editors. The red tape that is wound around the approaches to a throne and a foreign newspaper is really so long and so full of knots, that it is almost useless for the average citizen to do much more than unwind a few miles of the tape and wonder if the crowned head or the editor ever had any visitors anyway.

But the approach to the President of the United States is so simple that it is astonishing! There was only one quiet individual in an anteroom to whom we had to go with the simple statement that we had an appointment to see the President at 12:45. He instantly consulted a little slip on his small desk, nodded affirmatively and motioned us to go into a waiting-room where the President's secretary sat. There were only three or four persons in the room, but there was an air of quiet leisure and an absence of all hurry, or any hint that this might be the President's busy day.

Evidently he was interested in the calls that preceded our appointment for it was 1:15 when the secretary quietly motioned us into the President's room. I could not help thinking it was more than some of my business friends would have done, when the President said to us as we came in, "I am sorry to keep you waiting!"

Having never before had a President of the United States apologize to me, I was somewhat embarrassed, but as soon as I recovered myself, I proceeded to present the resolutions sent in so numerously by the churches, and to tell the President that the large collection of names could without doubt be duplicated by the Protestant churches in America. I pointed out that this was no formal ecclesiastical document we were presenting, but the voice of 26,000,000 American church members, pleading for an end of war, and also assuring him that the prayers of all the Christian people of this and every other land were going up as never in all the world's history, that the Conference he had called might, under God, result in the beginning of the end of Mars' reign among men.

PRESIDENT HARDING stood during the interview, with a deeply interested and serious look on his face, and when the presentation was over, he said:

"There is no question in my mind that what you say about the desire of the Protestant Church members for world-wide peace is true; and it is also true that the Greek church and the Catholic and every religious body desires the same thing. I am confident of this, but I am glad to have this visible token of the fact."

Then, after a pause, he added, with even growing seriousness:

"What you say about the praying of Christian people for peace, and for this Conference, that the result prayed for may come, means very much to me."

With these words in our mind, we were tremendously impressed with his evident heart conviction.

Mr. Graham Patterson, publisher of the Christian Herald, and Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, editor-in-chief, photographed as they left the White House after presenting the Peace Endorsement Memorial to President Harding

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

The President, is to my mind, a very handsome man in the best use of a word that has sometimes been abused. He stood up with a straightforward look in his eyes that was exceedingly attractive. I found myself wishing that I could have a game of horseshoes with him; but at the same time I had a sort of suspicion in my mind that he would perhaps beat me at it.

At any rate, it did not seem absurd to think of such a thing, and it did seem quite impossible to me in the case of the Archdeacon of St. Paul's, when I was his guest a few years ago. I felt a similar embarrassment once in the presence of Queen Liliokulani, who, even after her deposition, impressed me with an overpowering sense of royalty. But under any other circumstances, I am sure that President Harding would have impressed us with the fact that he is a genial and real man, a fine type of American citizen, representing the country's best ideals and not afraid to call himself a disciple of the Carpenter.

The particular subject that was being considered was of necessity of a very serious character, and was so treated by him. Indeed, I carried away, with me—and Mr. Patterson entirely shared my feeling—the impression that the President was carefully following every word of explanation concerning the resolutions by the churches and conferences, and weighing the effect of it all on the public conscience, and after that, its weight with the action of the Conference itself.

After the President's few choice and telling words in reply to the presentation, Mr. Patterson spoke of the pleasant fact that Mrs. Harding was a regular subscriber to the Christian Herald, and asked for the privilege of presenting to her as a member of the Herald family a copy of the Bible, Red Letter edition, bound in covers of olive wood from the Mount of Olives. The President's face lighted up with real pleasure, and with a smile of thanks, he accepted for Mrs. Harding, the Bible, adding again, "There can be no question concerning the feeling of the religious bodies of the world on the question of war."

THE entire presentation covered only a few minutes. As we were leaving the building, an interesting event occurred in the presentation of another memorial of the same character as the one the Christian Herald readers submitted.

Madam Kaji Yajima, a Japanese woman over ninety years of age, President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Japan, was ushered into the President's room to present a petition signed by 10,000 Japanese women asking for disarmament. This interesting woman had traveled with her secretary over 8,000 miles to present this petition to the President. The condition of the President's schedule allowed her only a few minutes; but her errand was accomplished and the voice of the Japanese mothers and daughters was added to the other human voices all around the world, crying out for the beginning of the end of war.

Truly, we thought as we left the White House grounds, it is a fact that the entire world is groaning and pleading with the nations to disarm and end war's terrors. For the resolution that we had offered virtually representing 26,000,000 church members, and the Japanese petition were, after all, only two out of multitudes of voices being raised all over the globe, and united in a growing volume of protest against the wickedness and stupidity of militarism after all these centuries of the Prince of Peace.

The impression we received from the few minutes we were in the President's room was that of a man who understood, as well as any minister of any church, the real feeling of the Christian people of America, and that so striking an impression of that feeling from such representative religious bodies was a fact that should have and must have great weight in the final results reached by the Conference. At the present writing, as the Conference is opening, there is an undoubted feeling on the part of the people—including even those who do not call themselves Christian or idealists—that something is going to result from the deliberations of the nations assembled here in this country, that will be the beginning of the end of war.

For this great event we call on every reader of the Christian Herald to pray daily. You have responded wonderfully to the appeal for the resolutions. Let us believe in the power of prayer. It is the people's Conference, and it begins to look now as if the peoples of the world were going to have something to say. If the church of the living God fails at this point, it can have little hope to prevail over the devil. But it cannot fail. It will not fail.

The United States has pointed out the way in unmistakable fashion, and surely no government will dare to reject such far-reaching proposals.

A sewing-class in the pleasant basement of the church is of benefit to the members and to the church in many ways .

Civic Activities of the Church

WHEN social investigation shows that there is steady and constant helplessness in the community, distress based on underfeeding, homelessness, poor housing and unemployment, the church with a social center development turns instinctively to the use of its resources for their alleviation. In an economic crisis, such as that from which we are just emerging, many churches have turned to Emergency Housing, Welfare Loan Work on a large scale, and the operation of Employment Service Centers.

St. Mark's on the Bowverie, New York, did an outstanding piece of work along this line last winter. Between December 25, 1920, and April 20, 1921, it extended relief for the almost unprecedented unemployment situation by throwing open the chapel as dormitories, establishing a bread-line, and opening an employment office. Figures which show the accomplishments during this period of time follow:

Housing: 23,000 men were provided for during the period mentioned; i.e.: they were provided with a cot and blankets, and two meals a day, breakfast and supper, making a total of 46,212 meals.

Jobs: 2,343 men were placed in positions, most of them permanent.

Clothing: A ten days' drive for clothing resulted in over 9,000 pieces of clothing being distributed, many men thus being put in position to get jobs for themselves.

Field Kitchen: 73,000 men were fed in St. Mark's bread-line from a field kitchen maintained for a period of 103 days. 146,000 cups of coffee were served, 73,000 pieces of bread (1/4 loaf) and 73,000 pieces of coffee-cake.

Nearly $7,000 was spent on this work, 100 cents of every dollar going for actual relief, as voluntary labor on the part of the men themselves maintained the kitchens and fumigating plant, and kept the premises in perfect order.

Self-mastery talks conducted three nights a week were of great help to the men, many of whom were ex-service men, and came in a spirit of rebellion and bitterness against the existing conditions which had forced them into a position of even temporary helplessness. Special nine o'clock services were also held on Sunday evenings and were a great moral and spiritual help to the men.

HOUSEHOLD arts instruction, infant feeding for young and foreign mothers, better supervision of the local motion-picture theaters and other commercial recreational centers come within the range of church civic activities. No church should underrate the power that it wields in forming public opinion in recreation matters. If the community has no adequate up-to-date ordinances governing these things, the church should assume the leadership in framing such legislation as will meet the needs.

"It is also good," says Henry E. Atkinson, in "The Church and

Its Possibilities for the Promotion of Better Citizenship Are Great

By MARTHA CANDLER

the People at Play," "to know the men who own places of public amusement, and are responsible for their administration. A great deal may be done through personal contact. If the dance-hall proprietors, managers of pool rooms, owners of motion-picture shows and others who are furnishing public amusement know that the church people understand the needs of the community and know who is responsible for the kind of amusement that is being furnished, they are very apt to feel that they are accountable to the community for their attitude as well as their actions."

The truth of this statement has been proved many times over in the case of motion-picture houses in small towns. Only recently in an Eastern town, a fringe of disreputable little gambling-houses masquerading under the guise of billiard and pool-rooms, have been "reformed." When two owners confessed their inability to clear out the "old gang," the community organization offered to take over the places outright and retain the former owners as managers over an experimental period. Spectators' seats replace the gambling tables. Weekly ladies' nights fill them to capacity, and the general atmosphere of the "clubs" is one in which no father would object to his son going for a clean game.

THE country is not lacking in the opportunity for churches to take the same sort of leadership, if they are ready.

"I have never suspected," says Rev. Silas E. Persons, of Cazenovia, New York, "that it is my appointed duty as a minister to dictate to the present generation of young people as to the kind of harmless recreation they should enjoy. The fashion changeth and play is play. The company being proper there is little choice in the kinds of recreation. I like to teach a boy to have the four indispensable virtues of good sportsmanship: nerve, skill, courtesy and fairness. That training ought to help him to play fair in the bigger game of life, in the market, in the arena of politics, in the parliaments of men, never flinching, never losing temper or unbridling tongue, never playing false to competitor, to state, to God."

"They use it for good just as they used to use it for evil," was the judgment of one of the "converted" managers of the community venture just mentioned. "And you wouldn't believe that many of 'em are the same fellows. They know I got my duty to do, now, and they respect me and the rules!"

There is a constructive citizenship venture! The church Boy Scout group, the Girl Scout group, the weekly class in Red Cross home nursing taught in the church basement are others on a lesser sort. If it comes within the scope of the church social activities to operate the weekly or the nightly moving-picture show, its citizenship-building opportunities here should not be overlooked. It has been pointed out that the "movie" of the right sort exerts a wide influence along three lines: It adds enormously to the general store on information and to general intelligence; it has a marked influence on raising the standards of home life and every-day personal conduct; it raises moral standards.

IT IS no longer difficult to obtain pictures desirable for church congregations. The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, provides reports and lists of such films. The Russell Sage Foundation, 130 East 22nd Street, New York, will also supply a list of the agencies now handling non-theatrical films. The Community Councils of the State of Michigan are in more than one city operating local circuits, which operate from some convenient center of the county by motor van, and show in a different rural church every night. In Bay City, Mich., a city of 60,000, such a circuit provides "movies" in eleven churches weekly, being booked for every night and three afternoons of the week. A strict local censorship is maintained.

But, most significant of all is the fact that the great commercial producers themselves have begun to feel the demand of the social center, the Y. M. C. A., and the church groups for pictures which are clean, sane and constructive and free from glaring sensationalism. Gripping, legitimate drama, high-grade educational and news features may now be procured through the regular commercial distributors. At least one of the largest of these has started a special department where programs more carefully selected than those supplied to their regular patrons, are made up.

Continued on page 872

The Mother's Club is a good citizenship function of the church, which needs wider development

The Editorial Forum

DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON
Editor-in-Chief

RAE D. HENKLE
Managing Editor

DR. GEORGE H. SANDISON
Editor Emeritus

The President and the Churches

WE CONGRATULATE the Christian Churches of America on the cordial and gracious reception which their Memorial Resolution, approving his course in calling the International Conference for Disarmament and Peace, received at the hands of President Harding. The presentation by the editor and publisher of the Christian Herald, which took place at the White House on November 7, was a memorable event, and one that deserves to be recorded in the annals of the thousands of congregations who, with their pastors and church officials, were represented on the great scroll, which assured the President of their enthusiastic support, and their earnest prayers that his efforts and the work of the Conference might be crowned with success.

All the denominations were in the movement, and in a number of instances, conferences representing large groups of churches and a membership running up into the hundreds of thousands. The vast individual membership of all of the churches signing the Memorial can only be estimated in the millions.

For this magnificent response, and especially for the fine spirit of co-operation which resulted in one of the most remarkable illustrations of church solidarity we have ever known, the Christian Herald desires to express its highest appreciation. May the Memorial inspire the President and his associates in the great task they have undertaken. And may the united prayers of these millions of godly men and women, church members, together with those of pastors, and laymen, bishops and elders, hold up the hands of our Christian President until victory is won.

It is a glorious thing for the churches to participate not only in the formation of public opinion, but to give inspiration to the leaders and promoters in an event which has now come to be regarded as the most momentous Conference of Nations the world has ever known.

For the first time in history, the people will be heard through trusted representatives, and the age-old methods of diplomacy will be compelled to recognize the people's demands. Through no channel can these demands be made with such hopes of successful results as through the allied membership of the churches.

The Stupid Human

EDWARD A. STEINER, just back from a trip through Central Europe, says that one of the strongest impressions he brought back with him was the depressing feeling that people were very stupid. In spite of the terrible lessons which the war was supposed to teach those who had suffered so terribly from it, the people generally, in all the war-smitten countries, were apparently just as selfish and narrow and even military as they were before. The word STUPID was the only word Dr. Steiner could find to express the mental attitude of the masses.

And as he added, "There seems to be a scheme of things to save men from sin, but none to save them from stupidity!"

Of course, he meant by that the great and serious truth that nothing short of a complete overturning of all a man's mental and moral processes and a real new birth could ever change this prevalent stupidity into a sane and wholesome look at life.

There is no salvation for the human race except the kind that Jesus taught. His principles taken into the real soul of man will save him from stupidity and everything else that gets in the way of human progress and peace.

What Is Practical?

THE idealist is constantly being charged, by the hard-headed people, that his idealism is not practical.

Let us look at that a minute.

The hard-headed man would concede that money is very practical. Yet all the power of money could not stop the great war.

He would also concede, of course, that commerce is very practical. Yet all the commerce of the world never stopped the hate and ill-will.

Science is very practical our hard-headed friend will concede. But all the science of the world had no power to stem men's passions.

Literature, music, art, architecture and culture generally are very practical, yet they had no influence to stop the war or mitigate its horrors.

Ecclesiasticism, or formal religion, is very practical. What more practical than a $5,000,000 marble cathedral? Yet all the cathedrals of Europe with all their elaborate practical rituals had no influence.

The only thing that could have prevented the war was the presence of good-will in men's hearts instead of hate.

This is an ideal. But if it is the only thing in the world that will do what money and commerce and science and culture and formal religion can not do, it looks to the idealist as if he were the most "practical" man on earth with his idealism.

Having eased his mind of his logical conclusion, the idealist will now resume the game of horseshoes.

Viewed from the Mountain-Peaks

GEORGE BRANDEIS, at eighty, is today regarded as one of the clearest-minded intellectual figures in Europe. Always a keen observer of the progress of world events, he has reached that period of life when, in rare individualities, the vision is enlarged and the judgment quickened so that it may estimate the progress of nations and continents. In a notable interview in the New York Times, he gives a critical estimate of present world conditions, which has equal application on both sides of the Atlantic.

"Europe is finished!" he declares. "America's day has come. Europe is bankrupt." The continental nations are overflowing with hate toward each other. "If a man thinks differently from another, that other hates him. It is ridiculous!" In England, too, it exists, though in less degree, and he adds that even in America there is hostility towards those that are foreign-born. His plea for tolerance is none the less impressive because it is implied. "With Europe unbalanced and half mad," thinking of nothing but hatred, America has the opportunity to show a finer spirit—the spirit of tolerance and good-will.

Lead Us This Day

A Prayer to the Tri-une God for Divine Aid to the Nations at the Disarmament Conference

By CHARLES HALL DAVIS

IN all Thy Majesty and Power
Reveal Thyself in this dread hour,
O Lord of Heaven and Earth and Life,
Whose Will alone can end our strife!
Stretch out Thy mighty arm to save;
And, in Thy strength, make weaklings brave!
Proclaim Thy rule in every land,
And guide us with Thy righteous hand!
Almighty God of Gods, we pray;
Thy power display!
Thy power display!

In all Thy glorious sacrifice,
Made that poor fallen man might rise,
O Son of God and Son of Man,
Impress all peoples with Thy plan!
Teach us that he who rules must serve!
Grant that ambition may not swerve
Our hearts from what Thy life has shown,
And help us make the world Thine own!
Incarnate Son of God, we pray;
Teach us Thy way!
Teach us Thy way!

In all Thy tenderness and love,
With Pentecostal fire, remove,
O Holy Spirit, from each soul
The lust for power, the love of gold.
Endue the Nations with Thy grace,
That seeks not power nor wealth nor place!
Implant in each the Holy Ghost;
And save us, Lord, else are we lost!
O Holy Spirit, hear, we pray!
Extend Thy sway!
Extend Thy sway!

In Power and Sacrifice and Love,
Thy Majesty and Influence prove,
O Tri-une God of all the earth!
Regenerate, with a new birth,
The creatures in Thy image made;
And in their need, give them Thy aid!—
Depending on Thy promise, Lord,
We cry, as taught by Thy own Word:—
"Our Tri-une God, to Thee we pray:
Lead us this day!
Lead us this day!" AMEN.

There is a capital sermon in these reflections by the broad-minded octogenarian. America is now at the same stage of development, he tells us, which Florence, Venice and Athens had reached before they blossomed forth as makers of world history, asserting a powerful influence in human progress. "I see no ground for supposing that there is any reason why America should not become, as they did, a great center of art and learning."

One more thought, greater perhaps than all the rest, is suggested by the venerable critic. He said he did not believe, as some do, that domination by the United States would mean "that the world is to pass through an essentially materialistic era." Those who expected nothing from America but materialism would find themselves mistaken. The race for wealth and commercial supremacy, he felt assured, would not be her objective.

Clearly, he had in mind America's ideals, her efforts to guide the nations to peace and international friendship, and to hasten the time when the burdens of all peoples would be lightened, and when costly and destructive wars would become a tradition of the past. This we take to be the burden of Brandeis' message, the unspoken but implied tribute to America's high purpose in her ministry to the nations.

Drinking Boys

IN a press report published in the New York papers there is an account of drinking and drunken high-school boys at dances.

The press report says: "After a dance given by Pleasantville High School, girls reported to their mothers that the breaths of their partners were so strong with liquor that they were afraid to dance with them. The girls also told their parents several boys were unable to stand, and rolled about on the lawn of Red Men's Hall, Lynnwood, where the dance was held."

The scene of this occurrence was Atlantic City, New Jersey.

The Editor of the Christian Herald would like to know from the readers of this article if they know of similar conditions in their own high schools? How wide-spread is such an occurrence? Do you know of any such conditions in your own town among your own high-school boys and girls? Or is such a disgraceful and serious moral slump true only of high-school boys in Atlantic City? The editor does not want replies from those who do not know of such moral degeneracy, but if any reader knows of similar drinking in high-school circles he would be interested to hear. Do your young people ever mention such affairs in your hearing? Or is this Atlantic City story a description of a condition that is very rare and practically unknown in other high-school circles? We are asking for information.

Harvey's Fundamentals

IN a recent speech made in London, Ambassador Harvey, discussing remedies for the world-wide industrial unrest and disorder, says:

"We must face the issue squarely and manfully, as benefits our race. The first fundamental principle that we must recognize is that economic laws are superior to legislative enactments."

Is this all the remedy that the Ambassador to the Court of St. James's has to offer the world for its human passion? Is this all he can find as a "fundamental" remedy for the sin of the world? Is this all he can find as a way out of strikes and hate and unemployment, and disorder in the world?

We wonder when any American statesman will be born in America big enough to say that only the statesmanship of Jesus will cure the world of its ills?

We wonder when any Ambassador to Great Britain will have the vision of the Master? We wonder when, in order to "face the issue of human disorder squarely and manfully as benefits our race," the "fundamental" question is not "economic or legislative enactments," but a change of the human heart from wrong to right, and from hate to love, and from selfishness to service?

There is only one "fundamental," and that is Love to God and Man. That will settle the human disorder. Nothing else will.

THE international conference at Washington was opened by prayer to Almighty God for its guidance. Each session will recognize the existence of a Higher Power in this way. The churches of the nation spoke and the diplomatists heard.

The World News of the Week

Armistice Day in Washington a Solemn Occasion

THE line of humanity six wide and like a living ribbon winds all the way from the Capitol building to the Congressional Library, and even at times part way around it. Many in that line have been waiting long before dawn for their look at the casket of the Unknown Soldier whose body has been brought from the soil of France to receive the homage and respect of an entire people.

When night of that day has come, the stream of living life is still there slowly and silently flowing up the Capitol steps to view one dead body. And all night the procession goes in around the casket, surrounded by mountains of flowers from the ends of the earth, while a tribute of roses placed by the President and a simple white ribbon placed by Mrs. Harding mark the respect of the nation.

It is early next morning, November the eleventh.

The great ones of the earth gather at the Capitol building to escort the body of this young and unknown man who died in France, his face toward coming freedom for young men from war's horrors, and the parade, as it was misnamed, begins. What a parade! It is not a parade, it is a silent march that makes the oldest go back in memory to President Lincoln and to President Grant, and President McKinley. But this is different. So different that there is not room for comparison.

The President of the United States on foot walks by the side of General Pershing. Ex-President Taft walks with his associates of the Supreme Court. The entire House of Representatives and Senators are in the silent march, walking, for the first time in American history, that such an impressive tribute has been paid. Red Cross workers, war nurses, veterans of the Civil War, foreign delegations, military bodies of different army and navy divisions, all are in the silent march from the Capitol to the White House, and from there out to Arlington where the last impressive words are said, but memory will cherish more the sight of that march than of any spoken tribute by orator or correspondent.

The one moment when this silent march is broken is when ex-President Wilson and Mrs. Wilson come, seated in an open carriage, drawn by two horses, and driven by a negro driver. Mr. Wilson looks old and gray. Mrs. Wilson is in mourning costume. All eyes are on these two, as the silent march goes on slowly, so slowly, up Pennsylvania Avenue.

And then the rule of the day supposed to be strictly observed is broken. It is to be the unbroken rule that no cheers or demonstration shall mar the solemnity of that silent march. But cheers do break out at the sight of this man. He bows to them now and then, but I see Mrs. Wilson once with an imperative gesture rebuke a noisy group standing on a fire-escape at a corner. It stills the group, but farther up the line of the silent march the cheering breaks out again.

But who shall describe the march in all its significance! The vendors of flags and toy balloons reaped a sorry harvest for their intended profiteering. No flags were sold, and I did not see one even waved except those carried in the march by the organizations, and they were so heavily draped with mourning that their folds hung about the staff. The great crowds that lined the entire distance on the famous avenue looked their silent disapproval on the flag vendors until even their money-seared souls caught the meaning of no sales, and they finally slunk away. It was the most significant moment of the day to me. Is this a day for the waving of flags or the blare of brass bands or the shouting of the war captains! Nay! Verily it is the day of all days for the American people to keep still and bow their heads in all humility as this dead body of a young man slain by the greed and selfishness and diplomacy of mankind marches like a specter of the past and a warning of the future before their sight!

And as the silent march ended at Arlington and the vast multitude silently went back to the city, I could not help praying that this dead boy might be the last boy slain by any war in which America would have to fight. And it seemed to me as the crowd surrounded me that day that I was not alone in that prayer, but that in the silence ever of the largest number of human beings I have ever seen present at any person's funeral, if that silence could have been broken at Arlington the heavens about that most beautiful spot would have been vocal and redolent with a prayer that it might never occur again, such a day for such a ceremony!

Sleep well, O Unknown Soldier! Your waking will not be with War's trumpet. Rather with the sweet

President's Declaration Against War

IN HIS eloquent tribute to the unknown American soldier at the Armistice Day services at Arlington Cemetery, President Harding uttered this moving plea for barring war from the stage of righteous civilization:

"The loftiest tribute we can bestow today—the heroically earned tribute—fashioned in deliberate conviction, out of unclouded thought, neither shadowed by remorse nor made vain by fancies, is the commitment of this Republic to an advancement never made before. If American achievement is a cherished pride at home, if our unselfishness among nations is all we wish it to be, and ours is a helpful example in the world, then let us give of our influence and strength, yea, of our aspirations and convictions, to put mankind on a little higher plane, exulting and exalting, with war's distressing and depressing tragedies barred from the stage of righteous civilization.

"There have been a thousand defenses justly and patriotically made; a thousand offenses which reason and righteousness ought to have stayed. Let us beseech all men to join us in seeking the rule under which reason and righteousness shall prevail.

"Standing today on hallowed ground, conscious that all America has halted to share in the tribute of heart, and mind, and soul to this fellow-American, and knowing that the world is noting this expression of the Republic's mindfulness, it is fitting to say that his sacrifice, and that of the millions dead, shall not be vain. There must be, there shall be, the commanding voice of a conscious civilization against armed warfare."

call of that One who said he had all power in heaven and on earth.

They sounded taps at the grave.

But over it the angels sounded the Resurrection!

And the time will come when heaven and earth shall join in sounding over the young men of the world the note of a peaceful and unwarlike death.

C. M. S.

Democrats Make Gains

DEMOCRATIC leaders found cause for satisfaction in the results of the November elections in various parts of the country, for they marked a reaction from the low mark recorded for the party a year ago and inspired optimism for a decided increase of Democratic strength in the Congressional elections of 1922. In Kentucky, the Democrats regained control of the Legislature, although their majority in the Senate is slight, and the Republican governor has two years more to serve. In Maryland the Democrats elected William S. Gordy, Jr., to be State Controller by a plurality of 18,000, were assured of control of both houses of the legislature by increased majorities over the last session, and made a clean sweep on the Baltimore city ticket.

The only gubernatorial election was in Virginia, where State Senator E. Lee Trinkle on the Democratic side defeated Henry V. Anderson by a plurality of more than 60,000. The Democrats gained a seat in Congress by carrying the Ninth District for the first time in twenty years.

New York City reelected John F. Hylan, Democrat, as Mayor by a plurality of 417,986, the incumbent receiving 754,874 votes to 336,888 for Henry H. Curran, the coalition candidate. Virtually every office in the city was won by the Democrats by record-breaking pluralities. The Democrats made a net gain of twenty seats in the State Assembly, but that body remained safely Republican with 95 Republicans and 55 Democrats. On the only state-wide contest, Judge William S. Andrews, a Republican, was elected to the Court of Appeals by 70,000 plurality.

The liquor issue was a prominent factor in the New Jersey election, the Republicans standing for strict enforcement of the state prohibition act while the Democrats demanded its modification or repeal. The Democrats gained votes in the legislature, but fell short of obtaining control, and the Republicans will have a majority of twenty-eight in the Assembly and nine in the Senate.

Railroads Press for Wage Cuts

THE narrow margin by which a nationwide railroad strike was averted has not deterred railroad executives from going ahead with their plans for further cuts in wages and announcement has been made of the intention of the railroads all over the country to post immediately notices of wage reductions. Virtually all the roads have joined in the movement and the number of workers to be affected, if the petitions are granted, will be 1,650,000, according to the latest estimates of the working forces.

Speedy action by the United States Railroad Labor Board is to be sought, and company officials denied that the Board had entered into a tacit understanding not to take up further wage cases until next July.

They believed it would be possible to obtain consideration of their petitions in February or March at the latest. Union leaders were ready to combat the new proposals and threatened that the strike vote would be revived and put into effect if necessary.

Thomas DeWitt Cuyler, chairman of the executives' association, stated that action "will be taken upon the understanding that concurrently with such reduction in wages the benefit of the reduction thus obtained shall, with the concurrence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, be passed on to the public in the reduction of existing railroad rates, except in so far as this reduction shall have been made in the meantime." The executive committee of the association conferred with the Commerce Commission in Washington regarding the situation.

Ulster Rejects Compromise Plan

AFTER sufficient progress had been made toward an Irish settlement to permit the putting into writing of compromise proposals representing the suggestions discussed at the London conferences and approved by the British cabinet, a new crisis arose through the refusal of Ulster to make the concessions asked of her. The Ulster cabinet declared that "certain fundamental principles are involved in the suggestions which under existing circumstances are impossible of attainment" and declined to join in a formal consultation until modifications had been made. The Ulster officials, however, are to submit counter-proposals and it was hoped these might furnish a basis for further discussions.

Under the compromise scheme of the conference, Ulster would retain her present Parliament, with all its powers conferred by the act of 1920, but through its legislature would be linked with the All-Irish Parliament. The reserved services kept by the Imperial Parliament—customs, excise and income taxes—would be transferred to the All-Irish Parliament, which thus would have fiscal autonomy, but the imposition of customs duties on goods passing between Britain and Ireland or between North and South Ireland would be forbidden. Ulster

Continued on page 873

A BIG SEND-OFF FOR A SHIPOLOAD OF MISSIONARIES TO INDIA
The Salvation Army chartered the liner Calypso to send a large party of missionaries to India, and a huge crowd assembled at the dock at Hull, England, to cheer them on their Gospel mission

© Kadel and Herbert

The Happy Householder

A Sermon by REV. CHARLES MELANCTHON JONES*

TEXT—Psa. 127:1. "Except the Lord Build the house, they labor in vain that build it."

THE Psalm of the Happy Householder" is what we may properly call the scarcely more than a hundred words which go to make up Psalm 127. Read it thoughtfully and prayerfully, again and again, and note its charming theme its striking figures, and its earnest challenges to homemakers, and notice how very up-to-date is its vital message.

Here is a paraphrase: "If Jehovah is not the greater architect of the house, the human builders are toiling in vain. If Jehovah is not charged with the safeguarding of the collective homes of the community, the civic guardians are a vain reliance. Diligence in providing for hungry households is a vain fever, without spiritual trust which both feeds and refreshes. Dedicated children are the glory and joy of the Heavenly Father, and the security and comfort of earthly parents."

The first claim of the Psalm of the Happy Householder is that the Divine Carpenter not only built the worlds, and built His Church, but wants to help build the human nesting-place. "Every house is built by some man, but he that built all things is God." The fierce light of social corruption and criticism are beating upon the home, and its safeguards and even its very existence are in danger. It is very certain that all that is wholesome and helpful and reliable in our civilization comes to us through the heritage of a godly household life, which we are in the way of letting go so easily. And we have been so willing to admit that the most precious and beautiful object-lesson the Christian religion has presented to heathen communities has been the missionary's home, but are we prepared to congratulate the backward races upon the happy householders we have been presenting them, while all the time we are deconsecrating the once so holy and happy households of the Homeland?

THE next claim of this Psalm is that the Happy Householder not only calls in the Divine Carpenter to help plan his home, but associates this Divine Counselor with city guardians in securing a safe community of homes. For the householder comes to realize that the most wakeful watchman is impotent, unless the entire municipal machinery back of him is inspired by the principles of that civic service which belongs to a "city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

The wakeful watchman may, at his best, bring an occasional evil-doer to punishment; but he is practically powerless to keep out the insidiously harmful vapors which steal in by day and by night, past his unnoting nostrils; or the more deadly moral miasms which no ordinary civic safeguards have yet evaded or excluded. The man of the house and the mayor of the city will have to wake up mightily, if they once really commit this matter to the Divine Master of Assemblies, for once God gets going by genuine communal provision and commission, He will do a thorough-going job.

Meanwhile it should never be forgotten that it has been Christian light and life, poured with heroic persistence into darkened and degenerate homes, communities, and countries, which has brought sanitation and social purity to many erstwhile putrid and poisonous centers of population. In a word, "good citizenship" is really Christian citizenship, which means the welfare of a city sought by all its high-minded people, according to the principles of our Heavenly Father, without favor to selfish pleasure or privilege, and with provision for the most intelligent and spiritual satisfactions.

The third claim of this Psalm is that the Happy Householder works without worry. This is the last of a three-fold vanity, where the unworthy course is supposed to have been taken. Here they are: "vain" the irreligious home-maker; "vain" the ungodly city caretaker; and now, in effect, "vain" the unspiritual bread-maker! This last Luther graphically expressed by the deprecation: "It is in vain that ye arise so soon, and so long thereafter sit up, making and eating your bread of anxiety; for God gives it to you really sleeping." There is an old saying that God gives his best gifts in the night.

Very vivid is the description the Psalmist gives of the stress and distress of the strenuously impatient life, which ignores the Creator's provision for rest and true recreation. Far too many persons of fairly good intentions actually mortgage the vitality of unborn children, and break down prematurely their own capacity for usefulness to their family and to society, by undue work, by excessive worry, and above all by the utter absence of worship of the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

THE fourth and last claim of this Psalm is that the Happy Householder cherishes the children. One most suggestive figure is that of the child and the arrow. It was the custom of a tribe in the Orient to hang up a bow and arrows over the door of the home where a boy had just been born, to show that a new defender had been added to the home.

A writer has spoken thus beautifully of this arrow-figure: "An arrow is small, but often it has proved signally effective. Two kings, Ahab and William Rufus, were slain by arrows. It travels far, and who can foresee the future of the child? It needs to be made sharp, as the child needs education. It should be pure, and depend for its effect on its sharp point and correct aim, and not on concealed poison." And to all this so well said, we may add, how dangerous is the child-arrow in the hands of a trifler! For far too many in our modern life revive and justify an ancient experience: "As a madman who easteth firebrands, arrows and death, so is he that deceiveth his neighbor and saith, Am not I in sport?"

Lost Arts," but to arouse and inspire regard for the lost virtues of society.

The other story relates that one evening, after the same preacher had been talking very tenderly and simply to his congregation about the love of Christ, his young daughter Harriet followed him into his study and climbing into his arms told her father that she had that day decided to give her heart to Jesus, and her life to His service. His voice broken with emotion, this noble old spiritual archer exclaimed: "Then is a beautiful blossom unfolded in the garden of God today!" And who is able to estimate the influence of these two so diverse but marvelously effective arrows, the peerless orator and the soul-stirring writer, workers and victors in the same contest with the "sum of all villainies?"

IS IT not a fair corollary from the argument of our psalm, borne out by the two illustrations from the ministry of the same noble preacher, that the spiritual archer may direct to highest aims other arrows than his own flesh and blood? He may and should indeed endeavor to direct his own kindred, as in the case of Lyman Beecher's gifted daughter; but his privilege is far wider, as when employing the gifted son of one who was himself evidently not a spiritual archer.

And so it has often come to pass, that many a childless Christian worker has been able to use effectively a whole quiverful of arrows, borrowed, and most gloriously directed!

Our Sunday Service at Home

The Christian Herald Sermon is now read in many Homes as a Sunday Evening Service, a simple form of conducting which is outlined below. Neighbors should be cordially invited

Order of Service

Opening Hymn—"In the Cross of Christ I Glory" or "O Could I Speak the Matchless Worth."

Invocation—"The Lord's Prayer"—all join.

Scripture Reading—"The Beauty of Righteousness." Psalm 112, Verses 1 to 10.

Dr. Jowell's Sunday Meditation (see page 867, first column).

Sermon—"THE HAPPY HOUSEHOLDER"—To be read aloud by the head of the household or his substitute.

Requests for Prayer—these may be offered by any of those present who feel led to do so. The requests may be forwarded to Pastor Sheldon, in New York, for submission to the Prayer League.

Closing Hymn—"I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say," or "From Every Stormy Wind that Blows."

Benediction—by Pastor Charles M. Sheldon to be read aloud.

May there be no dismissal from Thy presence, O Gracious One, because we depart from one another, but may Thy benediction mean to us not a farewell until we meet again, but a daily companionship with Thee, from whom we pray we may never depart. In Jesus' Name, AMEN.

Many deadly things have been condoned in the college student, in young society people, and in sporting juveniles, if only they can assert that they were merely in fun. But back of this seeming innocent rashness we can usually find the dens and commercial deivers of vice, the gambling field or table, caterers to the so-called sporting world, demoralizing and debauching the young people of our amusement-mad period.

TWO most impressive personal pictures illustrate how it may be made true, in the largest sense, "that children are a heritage of the Lord," and that "as arrows in the hand of a mighty man, so are the children." They both connect with the same noble minister of righteousness, and he was able to place them both in the front firing line in the great war against wrong.

One Sunday night Lyman Beecher preached a sermon with telling effect upon young men, focussing all upon the insistent theme, "You belong to God!" One of his hearers was a member of the old intellectual aristocracy of Boston, and the claim of the preacher was in contravention of the traditions of the blueblood and brains of the Hub. But so masterful was the message of the minister that night, that the young scholar went to his room to cast himself prone on his face in mortal conflict with life's greatest question. He challenged the God who claimed him, crying out: "O God, if indeed I do belong to Thee, then take me; but make me able, when I see a wrong, to resist it; and when I see the right, to do it!" It proved a remarkably successful prayer of consecration, for through a lifetime, Wendell Phillips manifested signal ability, not only to interest delighted throngs in "The

Questions for Sunday School Teachers

By Frank H. Williams

DO YOU ever stop and take an unbiased look at your work as a teacher? Do you ever try to analyze your work and see whether or not it is coming up to the mark?

There's nothing like being honest with oneself, particularly in Sunday school work, and so it might be profitable for the majority of Sunday school teachers to ask themselves the following questions and to answer them candidly and honestly:

Am I setting a good example to my pupils by being prompt in attendance at all sessions?

Am I setting a good example to my pupils by the way in which I occupy my time on Sunday when not at church services?

Do I scold my pupils for failing to prepare their lessons when I, myself, give but little study to the lessons and generally prepare them in a hurry at the last minute?

Do I teach the lesson or do I teach things which appeal to me as being more interesting? Isn't any failure on my part to follow the course of lessons a distinct failure on my part to co-operate with the other teachers and the executives in making the school as efficient as possible?

Do I interest myself in my pupils outside of school activities or do I come in contact with them only for the short period of the lesson hour once a week?

Am I regular in attendance at meetings of teachers or am I inclined to neglect such gatherings?

Do I follow up absentees the way I should?

Do I telephone to absentees, write letters to them or go to the trouble of making personal calls at the homes of those who are absent for more than one Sunday?

How many new members have I personally, by my own efforts, added to the class in the last six months? In the last year?

Couldn't I very easily do considerably more than I am now doing toward securing more members?

Do I ever look up former members of my class who have graduated and who since graduation have drifted away from Sunday school and church? Wouldn't it be the right thing for me to look up some of these and to try and get them back into the Sunday school and church?

Do I try to "show off" before my class by using big words and vague references to "high brow" people and things, or do I always try to make the things I say just as clear and simple as possible?

Am I really a teacher, getting the meat out of all the lessons and giving the pupils something which will help them in their daily lives, or am I simply a memory trainer instructing the pupils in memorizing Golden Texts, names, dates and so forth?

If I were a pupil in my own class what would be my candid opinion of myself as a teacher?

Wouldn't the candid answers to these questions help YOU to be a better teacher?

Why not answer them?

Do it NOW!

*Thirty-seven years in the Baptist ministry, now with the University of California.

The Daily Meditation

By Revs. J. H. Jowett, D.D., D. J. Burrell, D.D., C. C. Albertson, D.D., R. Braunstein, H. P. Hoskins and E. W. Caswell

His Sovereign Will

SUNDAY. Matt. 6:30. "Thy will be done." I wonder if it would be true to say that in the vast majority of lives these words are associated with dark experiences and gloomy resignation. The words recall unwelcome things, things we should have liked to push away, to shut the door upon them and lock them out. "Thy will be done." The words suggest unhappy things, things which drew many tears. There was the nipping of the blossom in the springtime; our little one was taken from our breast. "Thy will be done!" There was the breaking of the aspiring column before it was crowned with finished lily-work. Our boy or girl was missing from the circle. "Thy will be done!" There was that startlingly sudden onrush of a winter's blast into the quiet autumn-time, and the ripening grain was spoiled. "Thy will be done!" Unhappy things like these rush back into our minds when we use the familiar words. They are linked with the sorrowful season, with the bleak, cold, wet November days, and rarely with the bright sunny days of June. But why the night and not the light?

In my old church at Carr's Lane, the congregation were one Sunday singing the familiar hymn, "Thy Will Be Done." It is a dolorous hymn; the bird is singing, but its note is somewhat mournful, and it sings in a drippingly wet wood in a cold and clammy twilight. And all the verses are alike; they all move in sorrow, and they are sung in sunless places. Well, in the congregation that day, Mr. Fred Smith was worshipping. The hymn depressed him. He knew it was all right for the dripping grove, but he knew it was also all wrong for the sunlit hill; and he wanted to lift his wings and fly through the sunshine as well as the shade. He went home and wrote another hymn, in the same meter, and of the same mold; but he filled it with bright and delightful experiences. Perhaps I may have space to quote two or three verses.

"O God, not only in distress,
In pain, and want, and weariness,
Thy tender Spirit stoops to bless,
Thy will is done!

"But oftener on the wings of peace,
And girt about with tenderness,
Thou comest, and all troubles cease,
Thy will is done!"

Well, I think we must try to marry the two hymns, so that in fellowship they may cover life's sunshine and life's shade. But in this meditation I want to dissociate the will of God from any severe and exclusive attachment to the somber and the grievous. Let us think of God's will not merely as something to which we have to be resigned, but as the minister of light and delight, which we can welcome in rapturous mood.

The psalmist must have caught a kindling glimpse of the brighter will when he said, "I delight to do Thy will, O God!" And that other psalmist was mindful of the sunny seasons when he said, "The precepts of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart." In the Psalter, the birds are often mournful and moaning. There is many a songless bird. Nay, I'll take back that last sentence, for when I consider it more closely, I can not remember a psalm which is like a songless grove. The bird may begin in complaint, and for long the moaning note may prevail; but somehow it escapes from its thralldom and finishes singing in the sunshine. It may begin with—"Hear my voice, O God, in my complaint." It will finish with—"The righteous shall be glad in the Lord, and all the upright in heart shall glory!"

So I repeat my counsel. In our conception of the will of God, let us not forget our Junes even though we remember our Novembers. Let the wedding day be recalled as well as the funeral. Let all the years of blessedness be reviewed, as well as the clouded days at the end.

"Thy will is pure, O Lord, and just,
And we, frail creatures of the dust,
Through good or ill, can only trust
Thy will is done!

"For high above all earthly ill,
Thy purer wisdom worketh still;
And we would wait and trust, until Thy will is done." J. H. J.

Jesus Still Leads On

MONDAY. Heb. 2:10. "The Captain of their salvation." It is recorded that when Saladin, the bold leader of the Moslems at the time of the Third Crusade, was on his death-bed he bade his attendants hang his shroud upon the outer walls of his palace and cry aloud, "This is all that remains of Saladin the Great who hoped to conquer the world!" Not so did Peter and his companions interpret the shroud and napkin in the empty sepulcher of Christ. To them it meant that he had conquered death. No more did they say, "We go a-fishing." They were now to be fishers of men. With their faith thus fortified they were prepared to face all danger in the service of their living Lord.

So do we find strength and courage in the assurance that our Leader lives and from His high place blesses those who follow Him. Labor on! Your labor is not in vain in the Lord. Because He liveth we shall live also. Wherefore, let those who have entered into the fellowship of this glorious hope seek the things which are above where the ever-living Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. D. J. B.

Our Debt

TUESDAY. Rom. 1:14. "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise." Paul's sense of indebtedness arose from a consciousness of having come into possession of that which the world stood in need. A graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, having finished his hospital internship, visited China. One day, as he walked through the narrow streets of a crowded city, he saw so many people who were in need of medical and surgical assistance that his heart went out to them, and he said, "Am I not needed here more than in America?" There is no doubt Canton needed him more than did Philadelphia.

When he returned he said to the men of his university "If you will back me up, I will go to China." They backed him up and he went not only to practise the art of healing but to be one of the founders of a medical college from which hundreds of well-trained young Chinese doctors and nurses have been sent out to bless their land. "Joe" McCracken—idol of the football field—is proud and glad to be a servant of the Great Physician. He is paying his debt even as Paul paid his.

Dr. Andrew Hall is doing similar work in the Philippines. The Mission to Lepers is in some respects the most striking example of the application of this rule of indebtedness to the world. The men and women who support it, the physicians and nurses who minister to the lepers, might all say, "We are debtors, both to the clean and the unclean." All such workers are opening wells in the desert. C. C. A.

The Sufficiency of God

WEDNESDAY. John 8:58. "Before Abraham was, I am." The word for God among the Crete Indians is "Maneto," and the root is "ma," which is our "am." One of the most remarkable things in the world is that the word for God in the darkest lands among the lowest peoples is "am." God never gave himself a name but once. When he commanded Moses to go to Pharaoh and tell him to let the people go, Moses said, "And when Pharaoh asks me who sent me, who am I to say sent me?" And God said, "Tell him I AM sent you?" "I AM," said God to Moses, "this is My name through all generations."

Now what is God? Are you in darkness? "I Am the Light." Are you hungry? "I Am the Bread." Are you thirsty? "I Am the Living Water." Are you orphaned? "I Am thy Father?" Are you as a sheep astray? "I Am the Good Shepherd." Are you friendless? "I Am the Friend that sticketh closer than a brother." Are you weary? "I Am the Shiloh, the Rest-giver." Are you lost? "I Am the Way." Are you bewildered? "I Am the Truth." It is as though God had given us a blank check, with the privilege of filling it out according to our needs. "Our sufficiency is of God."

"Are the consolations of God too small for thee?" asks Eliphaz of Job. Surely in the light of our text, that question cannot be asked today. He who has put his trust in God, has found the all-inclusiveness and all-sufficiency of God, not only as a seeker of the truth as it is on the printed page, but one who has tested God and found him true in every walk of life. "The promises of God are yea and amen in Christ Jesus our Lord." Whatever our wants, God in Christ supplies them. R. B.

When God Calls, Who Questions?

THURSDAY. Numbers 11:29. "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets." Out of the groups set aside by Moses were seventy men, chosen to be prophets or exhorters. While these seventy men were attending an important meeting of consecration at the Tabernacle, a young man came rushing, all red and winded, into the meeting and spouted, "Eldad and Medad are exhorting in the camp." Thus the ancient record bears witness that the Lord often ordains others than recognized ministers to bear witness to His Name. These rude lads, probably brothers, sons of toil and lovers of men, had not been invited to join the prophetic group; they had not been "authorized" to preach. But they were preaching.

We can imagine the shocked expression on the faces of the authorized prophets. Even Joshua said: "My lord Moses, forbid them." But Moses knew they were not as jealous of his reputation as of the reputation they expected to make for themselves. He smiled wisely and said: "Enviest thou for my sake? Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put His Spirit upon them." Then he hurried out to shake hands with Eldad and Medad and so the meeting broke up. From then till now ecclesiastical circles have been shocked by the unconventional ways in which the Lord carries on His work. If we Christians were all preachers like the Moslems the true faith would go forward by leaps and bounds. H. P. H.

Glimpsing the Hereafter

FRIDAY. Phil. 1:21. "For me to die is gain." Paul knew whereof he affirmed. He once went prospecting among Paradisaical glories. He saw and heard wonderful things too sacred for him to describe. He obtained personal knowledge of the contrast between earth and heaven. It is not true that mankind has never seen any one who returned from the "undiscovered country." Did not Moses and Elijah appear to the disciples at the Transfiguration, and did not the Christ come from the glory He had with the Father before the world was? We have seen messengers from the immortal realms; but how many refuse to believe their story, and would not, even if their friends arose from the dead today!

The great Apostle, in the body or out of the body, was present with the Lord. He knew then that to die was gain; that when the earthly tabernacle is dissolved, we have an eternal building in the heavens. He added to the testimony of Jesus, who said, "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am, there ye may be also."

The Heavenly Father corroborated this testimony when He said, "This is My beloved Son; hear ye Him." How foolish to be so dull as not to believe the message of those who know the truth and tell the truth, that to die is to see and know the King in His beauty, and the whole family of God who have been gathering home through all the ages of the past. Death is but the dropping off the clothing of the body and putting on eternal vestments. It is the opening of book the second of the volume of life. We know that the acorn dies that the oak may live; that life comes out of death; that the Tree of Life is rooted in the grave and spreads its branches everywhere and forever. Though the great gain cannot be fully expressed in human language, the fact that the shadowy ghostly scene of death becomes illumined with angelic light, with resurrection radiance, is enough to fill the whole world with hope. E. W. C.

Searching After God

SATURDAY. John 17:3. "This is life eternal: that they might know Thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." In the golden age of philosophy there were four famous schools by the banks of the Ilyssus in Athens. There were the Gnostics, who professed to know everything; the Agnostics, who said they knew nothing and were proud of it; the Stoics, who felt themselves in the irresistible grip of Fate and resolved to make the best of it; the Epicureans, who believed in nothing beyond the present life, saying, "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die."

In the wisdom of our time, there is nothing better than was afforded in these ancient schools. Ask of them what you will concerning the hereafter, and "there is no voice, nor answer nor any that regardeth." You will find among our modern philosophers no more illustrious name than that of Herbert Spencer, who defined life as "a definite combination of heterogeneous changes, both simultaneous and successive, in correspondence with external coexistence and sequences." These are high-sounding words; but how do they help us? Put over against them the definition of life given in the Master's sacerdotal prayer: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." By this we are given to understand that life is godliness, and that it is attained by faith in Jesus Christ who came into the world to bring us into harmony with God. This is simplicity itself: yet it far transcends the wisdom of man. And why not, since "the wisdom of man is foolishness with God"? D. J. B.

New and Renewing Subscribers Should Avail

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon's Famous Books

CHILDREN'S

From
With 48 Super HARR

A BOOK that has gotten that the
the world, and about little folk or that The old, old stories are language by BLANCH delightfully fresh and u

Size 8 1/2 x 6 1/2 inches

The list of colored here, but they are all care to illustrate the te

This is the book that to their children.

It is ideal in size, con
tions, and we anticipa those who have already and offer it to Christian

This excellent volume to any boy's and girl
It is not only entertain
It is a marvel of qual
ered. The 48 fine color from the Bible" are w complete book. Order disappointment in havin

Special Com

The Christian Herald fol
"Children's Stories from
for
The book, sold separately

IN HIS STEPS

~~~~~or~~~~~

What Would Jesus Do?

Entirely New Type

New Plates

Portrait of the Author

Fine Cloth Binding
12 mo. size, 288 pages

It Is An Exceptional Book

When publishers can say "It is sold throughout the English speaking world."

How much greater and far-reaching when we can say we have a book that was translated into eighteen languages, other than English, and that the sales have exceeded

22 Millions of Copies

This is the record of Dr. Sheldon's world-famous book.

That a book should sell up in the millions of copies and still continue selling, although nearly a quarter of a century has passed, is the best of all evidence of genuine public appreciation. Ten millions have bought and read it in England, and more than ten millions in the United States, with several additional millions among the people of other lands and languages.

THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, the leading paper of the book trade, says: "The most widely read book of the last 200 years is 'In His Steps' by Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, editor of the Christian Herald. It has sold more than twenty million copies, the largest sale of any book except the Bible and 'Pilgrim's Progress.'"

Every member of your family should read this wonderful book

The book sent separately, postpaid, for $1.25 a copy

The Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and "In His Steps" both for $3.00

DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

HEART STORIES

1 Volume, 12Mo., Large, Clear Type, Cloth Binding

Dr. Sandison says:

"Dr. Sheldon's new book, entitled 'Heart Stories,' shows his wonderful versatility in depicting the spiritual life in its most interesting phases as an agent in human affairs. In these seven stories, the reader will find some of the most interesting themes that have been treated in short-story form—a form of which Dr. Sheldon is a master.

We form the acquaintance of such characters as Andrew Stoddard, in the "Good Fight," who became a benefactor to his fellowmen after his own career had apparently been wrecked by an accident; Robert Arnold, in "As Heaven Views It," whose routine, selfish nature was illumined by a vision in which he listened to the Recording Angel's record of one day of his own life; the sudden change of mind that caused the Pastor of the Church of Milton to withdraw his letter of resignation, and how it all came about is delightfully told in "Why the Minister Remained"; the story of Rosy Calvaire, the little factory box-maker, is stirringly told in "Of Such Is the Kingdom" and is a terrible arraignment of child labor; "Sunrise on the Mesa," is a story of the Arizona desert and the Navajo and Hopi Indians; "His Christmas Gift" is a Christmas story of New York life and experience, and what happened at the most remarkable Christmas dinner Sidney Allen had ever attended; the whole concluding with a coal mine story entitled "Guests of Honor," in which a winter storm brought unexpected guests to the mine manager's family circle, who treated them as guests of honor—but the stories the reader must read for himself.

SECOND LARGE EDITION NOW READY. UNIFORM IN STYLE WITH "IN HIS STEPS"

The Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and a copy of Heart Stories, cloth binding, both postpaid for only $2.50. The book sold separately, postpaid, for $1.25

The Richest Man in Kansas

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

How would you feel and act if you were suddenly to be told that you had come into a big fortune over night? This is what happened to Anson Howard, whose remarkable experience Dr. Sheldon relates in his new story, "The Richest Man in Kansas." From an income of $125 a month, to cutting coupons on $10,000,000 worth of gilt-edged securities is a change so radical that it would turn most men's heads—to say nothing of their wives and daughters. Just what happened is vividly told in Dr. Sheldon's dramatic presentation. At no time in a man's life is there a stronger test of character than when Fortune knocks at the door. Some lose their bearings altogether. Read the book and see how Anson Howard and his folks stood the test.

THE RICHEST MAN IN KANSAS. Sold separately, postpaid, for 60 cents

The Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and a copy of The Richest Man in Kansas, both postpaid for $2.35.

We will send all three books free and postpaid, to anyone sending us three new subscriptions to the Christian Herald at.....$2.00 each

Address all orders to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE

Themselves of These Money-Saving Offers

STORIES Clubbing Rates of the Christian Herald with other Magazines

Any of these excellent offers saves money for you. Use the clubbing order blank below when ordering.

Bible
ures in Colors by PEAKER
wanted. It is often for-ne greatest story-book in especially rich in stories pecial interest for children.
rmingly retold in simple
R. The illustrations are onal.

REN'S
IES
-BIBLE
UR PLATES
PEAKER
ges, large clear type ns is too lengthy to print jects selected with special t have long wanted to read beautifully colored illustra-e demand, especially from to us to find such a book readers.
be a welcome addition collection of good books.
t thoroughly educational.
the low price is consid-ations in "Children's Stories h the price asked for the so that there may be no ry on time.

ation Offer
ar, 52 weeks, and a copy of e," both postpaid $3.50 aid, for.....$2.00
W YORK CITY

| COMBINATION | Reg. Rate | Clubbing Rate | Saving to Subscriber |
|---|------------------------|---------------|----------------------|
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Woman's World..... | $2.00
.50 | $2.10 | $.40 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Today's Housewife..... | $2.00
1.00 | $2.25 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
The Pathfinder..... | $2.00
1.00 | $2.35 | $.65 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
McCall's Magazine..... | $2.00
1.00 | $2.50 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Today's Housewife.....
Woman's World..... | $2.00
1.00
.50 | $2.50 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
People's Home Journal..... | $2.00
1.25 | $2.65 | $.60 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
McCall's Magazine.....
Today's Housewife..... | $2.00
1.00
1.00 | $2.75 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Boy's Life..... | $2.00
2.00 | $2.75 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
The Pathfinder.....
Today's Housewife..... | $2.00
1.00
1.00 | $2.75 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Modern Priscilla..... | $2.00
2.00 | $2.85 | $1.15 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Boy's Magazine..... | $2.00
1.50 | $3.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Today's Housewife.....
People's Home Journal..... | $2.00
1.00
1.25 | $3.00 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
American Cookery..... | $2.00
1.50 | $3.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Normal Instructor..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.10 | $.90 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Sunset Magazine..... | $2.00
2.50 | $3.25 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
People's Home Journal.....
McCall's Magazine..... | $2.00
1.25
1.00 | $3.25 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Little Folks..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.00 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
The Etude (for Music Lovers)..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.50 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Pictorial Review..... | $2.00
2.50 | $3.75 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Collier's Weekly..... | $2.00
2.50 | $3.75 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
McCall's Magazine.....
The Etude (for music lovers)..... | $2.00
1.00
2.00 | $3.75 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
American Boy..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.75 | $.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Woman's Home Companion..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.75 | $.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Junior Instructor..... | $2.00
2.50 | $4.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Youth's Companion..... | $2.00
2.50 | $4.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Little Folks.....
McCall's Magazine..... | $2.00
2.00
1.00 | $4.00 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Modern Priscilla or The Etude.....
Today's Housewife..... | $2.00
2.00
1.00 | $4.00 | $1.00 |

| COMBINATION | Reg. Rate | Clubbing Rate | Saving to Subscriber |
|--|--------------------------------|---------------|----------------------|
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Today's Housewife.....
Youth's Companion..... | $2.00
1.00
2.50 | $4.25 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
McCall's.....
Woman's Home Companion..... | $2.00
1.00
2.00 | $4.25 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Modern Priscilla.....
People's Home Journal..... | $2.00
2.00
1.25 | $4.25 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Pictorial Review.....
McCall's Magazine..... | $2.00
2.50
1.00 | $4.25 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Popular Science Monthly..... | $2.00
3.00 | $4.25 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Review of Reviews..... | $2.00
4.00 | $4.25 | $1.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Pictorial Review.....
Today's Housewife..... | $2.00
2.50
1.00 | $4.25 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Forbes Magazine..... | $2.00
4.00 | $4.50 | $1.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Youth's Companion.....
McCall's Magazine..... | $2.00
2.50
1.00 | $4.50 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Pictorial Review.....
People's Home Journal..... | $2.00
2.50
1.25 | $4.75 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Youth's Companion.....
Pathfinder..... | $2.00
2.50
1.00 | $5.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
People's Home Journal.....
Youth's Companion..... | $2.00
1.25
2.50 | $5.00 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
People's Home Journal.....
American..... | $2.00
1.25
2.50 | $5.15 | $.60 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
World's Work..... | $2.00
4.00 | $5.25 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
St. Nicholas..... | $2.00
4.00 | $5.25 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Woman's Home Companion.....
American..... | $2.00
2.00
2.50 | $5.25 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Woman's Home Companion.....
Pictorial Review..... | $2.00
2.00
2.50 | $5.50 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Youth's Companion.....
Pictorial Review..... | $2.00
2.50
2.50 | $5.50 | $1.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
People's Home Journal.....
American—to one address.....
Woman's Home Companion..... | $2.00
1.25
4.50
2.00 | $6.15 | $1.60 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Century Magazine..... | $2.00
5.00 | $6.25 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Country Life..... | $2.00
5.00 | $6.25 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Youth's Companion.....
Woman's Home Companion.....
American Magazine..... | $2.00
2.50
2.00
2.50 | $7.50 | $1.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Delineator..... | $2.00
2.50 | $4.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD...
Designer.....
Everybody's..... | $2.00
2.00
2.50 | $5.25 | $1.25 |

If you prefer any other combination, write to us for a money saving rate

CLUBBING ORDER BLANK
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York
$..... remittance is enclosed for which you may send me for ONE YEAR each of the following at the special clubbing rate.

| | | |
|-------------------------|----------------|---------------------|
| 1. The Christian Herald | New or Renewal | Begin with issue of |
| 2. | | |
| 3. | | |
| 4. | | |

Name..... Street or Route No.....
Town or City..... State.....

TO THE HOLY LAND

Under Sunny Skies
By Historic Shores

Away from winter, across the seas, following in the footsteps of the Crusaders

LUXURIOUS MEDITERRANEAN CRUISE

Sails February 11th, 1922, on Cunard Liner, "CARMANIA"—under the exclusive management of the American Express Company, visiting Madeira, Cadiz, Gibraltar, Algiers, The Riviera, Naples, Pompeii, Rome, Fiume, Venice, Athens, Constantinople, Palestine and Egypt.

These lands so intimately connected with religious history, with its wonder story, its sacred appeal, its divine and significant past. The relaxation of travel under ideal conditions—an inspiration for a lifetime. Cruise membership limited to 450 on a giant liner carrying normally nearly 800 passengers. PRICE, including all expenses, $850 up.

Write now for Full Information—
Ask for booklet 12

AMERICAN EXPRESS CO.

65 Broadway,
New York

A Month Until Christmas

WHEN you read this article it will be just about a month before Christmas. The city shops will be beginning to glitter with scarlet and green; and gift suggestions will be laid about in tempting array upon many a counter. There will be gold things and silver things—some of them utterly useless—for the wealthy. And there will be wee dainty handkerchiefs, and strings of beads, and other charming trifles for the people who haven't so much money to spend.

And, in the country, where there aren't department stores and the like, folk will be beginning to pop corn and snuggle bits of sewing out of sight when any of the family comes, unexpectedly, into the room. And they'll be going out to stately forest places to choose the tree—standing slim and tall and straight in all its pride and glory—that will one day be chopped down and brought in on a bob-sled. And that will be covered, eventually, with wonderful ornaments of tinsel and gilt!

Yes — when you read this article it will be only about a month before Christmas. And those of you who are housewives will be thinking in terms of dinners and holiday guests. And those of you who are children will be thinking of presents and holly wreaths. And those of you who are past the three-score-and-ten milestone will be thinking of other Christmases gone by. And those of you who are young will be thinking of what to give "him"—or "her." And perhaps, and very shyly, of the meaning of mistletoe! And, underneath it all, I'm sure that everybody will be thinking of the first Christmas—and of what came to pass in a certain stable room when a star shone with a pure, triumphant light, over Bethlehem!

Yes—we'll all, every one of us, have Christmas thoughts in our minds and Christmas dreams in our hearts—now that it's round about the first of December. But just how will we be planning to use the weeks between now and the twenty-fifth? That's the really important thing to consider!

TO SOME folk Christmas is—before anything else—a season of giving. To some folk Christmas wouldn't be Christmas unless it meant the bestowing of many tissue-wrapped packages. And it's all very sweet and pleasant to be such a person—if you give in the right way. For there are two kinds of givers—thoughtful ones and selfish ones.

I know a woman who is a selfish giver. She is selfish in two ways—first, because she gives gifts so that she, alone, may enjoy herself—and second, because she has a way of shopping very fussily at the last moment, when stores are overcrowded and sales people are over weary. I have seen her go out on the day before Christmas with a yard-long list and I have heard her talk like this to a tired clerk:

"No—that won't do. It's a shade off. No, you must get that other box down—I don't care if there are a great many other people waiting—I was here first. And then I have heard her turn and murmur to a fellow shopper, "I'm foolish, I suppose, to buy such an expensive gift for Annabelle. She always gives the cheapest presents! But, my dear, you know—" And so on.

Such giving is not really giving at all. It's almost making mock, I think, of the Christ Child's birthday! That's selfish giving. But I know

And Just How Are You Going to Use the Time?

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

another woman who is a thoughtful giver. She always finishes what buying she has to do three weeks before Christmas—she never enters a store after the fifth of December. She chooses simple things for her close friends—although oftentimes her presents are bits of her own handiwork—but the major part of her giving is to those who will give her no gift in return, except the great gift of love! For most of her presents go to folk less fortunate—less blessed with worldly goods than she is. Most of her presents go to the poor and to the needy.

"How Jane will enjoy this warm frock," I have heard her say, and, "These gloves will keep Johnny's hands warm, I know! Oh, isn't Christmas the most glorious time of all?" That's rather different, isn't it, from the woman who gives in terms of expensiveness and cheapness!

NEVER the sound of a cross voice raised,
And never a frown or tear;
That's the way to prepare for the day,
When Christmas time draws near.
Never a present tossed aside,
With a scornful shrug or a sigh;
Not a regret or a need to fret,
When Christ's birthday time draws nigh.

Happiness and a smile or two,
And kind words in a loving tone;
That's the way to prepare for the day,
To make it our very own.
Never a thought of "What if's worth,"
Or "what will they give to me";
But with eyes as bright as the candle light
That shines on a Christmas tree!

THERE is a certain little girl who is very dear to me, who, a few weeks ago, went to a hospital to undergo a serious operation. She is only a child and I have no doubt that she was terrified at the thought of the ordeal that lay before her. But do you know what she did, last of all, before going into the room where she was to face the most critical sort of a situation? She had her mother and her daddy take her to a store so that she could buy a number of great calico stockings.

"I'll fill them," she said, "when I'm getting well. For the little children in the slums, who won't have very much of a Christmas!" What do you think of that?

I'm going to tell you more about this little girl later, perhaps, when she's much better. Just now, I can't. For she's making such a splendidly brave fight that we who love her don't want to talk—much.

Just about a month before Christmas you should, if you're the right kind of a giver, have your plans all made. You should realize that only gifts that go with a bit of heart in them are worth the giving—that duty presents, or presents that stretch beyond the limits of a sensible purse, are never worth while. You should know that the kind shopper never overtaxes clerks and store-keepers on the last feverish days—that the good hostess and housewife never makes her holiday preparations a burden and a bore.

A bore and a burden! Those two words should never be used in the same sentence, or in the same paragraph, or on the same page—with that blessed word Christmas. For Christmas is a glory day, a happiness day, a splendor day. Christmas thoughts and Christmas deeds and Christmas expressions should be in keeping with the sheer beauty of it!

Christmas—all of the symbols that stand for it radiate beauty. The mistletoe and holly—the fragrant evergreen, the vivid wreaths. And last of all—but, oh, not least of all!—the reverent pictures that come into our minds and hearts when the season makes its approach. The pictures of a shining midnight sky, and of the reverently waiting shepherds, and of the expression that looked out of Mary's proud eyes! It is the thought of these pictures that should keep us always kind—that should keep us quite unfurried.

You should know that the Saviour—whose day Christmas is, and always shall be—wants you to find happiness and to bestow it.

Make Your Money Earn More

A Tested 8% Investment

Miller First Mortgages and First Mortgage Bonds, yielding 8%, offer a tested and proved investment at a time when sound securities yielding 8% are becoming rare.

These mortgages and bonds—the latter available in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000—are secured up to 200% or more of their face value by improved Miami real estate. Investigate today.

Write for descriptive circular of offerings, A-27, and booklet, "Miami Mortgage Investments."

G. L. Miller Bond & Mortgage Co.
Miami Bank & Trust Building
MIAMI, FLORIDA

You can be quickly relieved, if you

STAMMER

Send 10 cents in stamps for descriptive circular and booklet on Stammering and Stuttering, "Its Cause and Cure." It tells how I relieved thousands of stammering for 20 years. Benjamin N. Bozue, 6290. 809 Bldg., 1147 N. W. St., Indianapolis

4-POUND SILK BUNDLES

WONDERFUL SILK AND VELVET BARGAINS
For Quilts, Fancy Work, Portieres, etc. Send 10 Cents for big package of large beautiful silk bundles including fine quality satins and velvets, cashmere, and other elegant bargain bundles. Address: UNION'S WORKS 263 FACTORY ST., BOONVILLE N. Y.

Go Into Business For Yourself!

Establish and operate a "New System Specialty Candy Factory" in your community. We furnish everything. Money making opportunity unlimited. Either men or women. The Candy Booklet Free. W. MILLER RAGDALE, Drawer 37, EAST ORANGE, N. J.

Free Investment Circulars

Interesting and valuable investment literature published from time to time by the leading Banks and Investment Houses are now available for Christian Herald Readers.

As a convenience to you we have arranged with these financial concerns to send direct to you these investment circulars. Write us asking for them by number or simply checking list and write name and address plainly on the margin. Financial Department, The Christian Herald, 99 Bible House, New York City.

Conservative Bonds—Current bond circulars, describing recent issues of high-grade bonds, with full details of security, yield, etc. Ask for Circular No. 1.

Public Utility Securities—Circular No. 2, describes a variety of public utility bonds and preferred stock issues, well secured and offering a high yield at present prices.

Real Estate Bonds—Several booklets issued by investment houses in different sections of the country present the advantages of real estate bonds and notes—the oldest and basic form of investment. These issues yield 6 per cent to 7 per cent. Ask for Circulars 4, 6 for city real estate bonds, and Circulars 7-9 for farm mortgages and bonds.

Partial Payment Investing—This method enables investors to buy sound securities by making payments monthly until the bond or preferred stock is fully paid for. Meanwhile all interest or dividends accrue from the time the investment is begun. Ask for Circular 11.

To Invest $25 or More—Two-year time deposit certificates paying 6 per cent, and 5 per cent certificates payable on demand, secured by first mortgages, can be bought in multiples of $25. Ask for Circular 13.

Liberty Bonds—Circular No. 12 describes the various issues of Liberty Bonds and the remarkable investment opportunities they offer at the present time.

Farm Mortgages—Details also circulars regarding 6 per cent First Mortgage Farm Loan Certificates issued in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000. Send for Circular 18.

Selecting Your Investments, Strong Box Investments, Creating Good Investments, are three booklets describing the service and safe high yield investments of a nationally known investment house. No. 43.

How Henry Wilkinson Became Rich. Booklet 52 is the story of the man who was satisfied with safety and a fair yield on his investments. Persistence, Patience and sound judgment made him financially independent.

Choosing Your Investment Banker—Recently issued by a well known Investment House. It is the first and most important step to successful investment. Request Booklet 54.

Service to the Investor—Booklet 51 gives details of the service offered to investors by the investment department of one of the largest banks maintaining thirty offices throughout the country.

Booklet 55, The Investment House. A booklet which you will read with interest. It contains full information concerning a strong and safe type of investment.

Paul in Melita and in Rome

International Sunday School Lesson for December 4
Acts 28:1-31

By REV. SAMUEL D. PRICE, D.D.

ST. PAUL is a name which is perpetuated in many places and buildings. St. Paul's Cathedral in London is sought by many residents, and there are few travelers passing through the chief city in England who do not visit that wonderful piece of architecture. To worship in St. Paul's on a Sunday morning is a special delight which will never be forgotten by those who have had that privilege.

The island of Melita (Malta) is unusually rich in the number of places and buildings bearing the name of the prisoner en route to Rome, who was shipwrecked there in A.D. 59. First, there is St. Paul's Bay, where the 276 found refuge after the grain ship had foundered. The Cathedral of St. Paul is reputed to be on the site of the home of hospitable Publius. Piazza San Paolo is the name of the chief square of Citta Vecchio, the capital of that island, which, like the island of Cyprus, is a British possession. There are a number of statues of Paul in the city.

A residence of only three months has left an age-long impression for good. Paul, as usual, was busy doing good while there. His special introduction made a startling impression on the natives. As Paul was taking his place with others in gathering fire-wood, a viper, a venomous creature, was seen fastened to his hand. The people looked for the usual result of a serpent bite, and were quick to condemn Paul on hearsay. After shaking off the viper, this man just kept on gathering more sticks, and was ready to perform a miracle of kindness for those who had uttered their snap-judgment concerning him.

When Publius extended hospitality for three days, Paul accepted. It might be that even rich men would be in need. It soon became known that the father of Publius was seriously sick. How opportune that Dr. Luke was among the guests! But it was not the medical physician who ministered unto life that day. The case may have been beyond the power of medical skill to effect a cure. Not so when it came to the exercise of divine healing power. The Great Physician, at the prayer of faith and laying on of hands by the Apostle to the Gentiles, healed the fever-stricken and greatly weakened man. Then others came with their sick folk, and it may not be too much to say that when Paul left Melita, there was not a sick person on that island. He richly repaid their generous hospitality.

MANY details are to be found in this closing chapter of Acts, which, for lack of space can not even be mentioned in our lesson study, but which are very informing. It is always advantageous to read both the lesson text and the context a number of times, say at least three. The most interesting reading will be after you have made your careful lesson preparation, gathering all the information from every possible source. Now as you read the chapter once more, each sentence becomes rich with discovered, related facts and spiritual meaning.

The final lap of this journey to Rome was the last on which the exact goings of Paul can be followed. Another grain ship from Alexandria was boarded at the end of the three months' ministry. Paul sailed away with the good-will of all, and with many things which these new-made friends put on board for his special comfort. A stop of three days was made at Syracuse, on the island of Sicily. There is an interesting story about Damon and Pythias that centres here, which, no doubt, can be found in any encyclopedia. It is a good incident of real friendship and can lead up to the facts about the Best Friend. Under full sail, the Castor and Pollux entered the Bay of Naples. (This was the privilege only of a grain ship from Egypt.)

SEVEN days in Puteoli were seven days of opportunity for Paul to tell that the Messiah had come. The centurion was very kind to Paul, and well might he be, since Paul had saved his life when on the Mediterranean. Doubtless the reason that Paul had such privileges as he enjoyed for the two years in Rome was due in large measure to the report of Julius, who had learned to know the worth of this Hebrew during a close intimacy of nearly six months. Traveling with any one is quite sure to lead to a knowledge of personalities.

One hundred and thirty miles is the distance from Puteoli to Rome, where Paul was eager to arrive. To preach in Rome had been his prayerful request for some years. When the way was not clear for him to continue from Corinth to Rome on the third missionary journey, he prepared that didactic epistle to the Romans while in Corinth, in which the Golden Text for today is found, Romans 1:15-16, "I am ready to preach the Gospel to you also who are at Rome. For I am not ashamed of the Gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth: to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

WORD of Paul's arrival in Italy reached certain brethren in Rome while he tarried at Puteoli. When the centurion with his prisoner, Paul, and the two companion-slaves, Luke and Aristarchus, reached the Market of Appius, on the great Appian Way, forty-three miles from the golden milestone in the Forum at Rome, the welcoming group from the Imperial City on the Tiber came to meet them. The record of that meeting is very illuminating as Luke says, "whom, when Paul saw, he thanked God and took courage." Prayer always produces courage. No one can really pray and worry at the same time: certainly not if they "cast all their anxiety upon Him who careth for you."

Some reader may say, "But my circumstances are so different." It should be noted that Paul was between a shipwreck and a prison. The title of a recently discovered book is very appealing: it is "Paul the Dauntless," by Basil Matthews. This title fits Paul perfectly. The book is especially for young people, but of keen interest for adults too. Any young person who has traveled with Paul during these six months of Sunday School lessons, would be glad to rejourney with their hero and gain additional information about him, the places visited and the customs of the first century.

The end of that long journey enabled Paul to begin the real work for which he had longed to reach Rome. It was not for the sake of adventure but to preach the Gospel. Within three days after arriving he was able to assemble his first audience of Jews, and to them he told the truths of Christianity with the purpose of winning converts to Jesus Christ. Other meetings were held in his own hired house during the next two years. The preacher was not discouraged because some disbelieved. He could constantly do personal work, for he always had some soldier close at hand, in fact chained to his wrist. Paul was highly regarded by these guard-companions (Phil. 1:13) and converts were made (Phil. 4:22). It is great to know how to use well our waiting years, days, and even hours.

RUSSIANS predominate in the foreign-born populations of New York City and Philadelphia, according to Census Bureau statistics. Of New York's 1,991,547 foreign-born white citizens 479,765 are Russians, and of Philadelphia's 397,927 foreign-born white citizens the Russians number 95,285. Pittsburgh, with a total foreign-born white population of 120,266, also has a large number of Russians—13,837.

THE SMALLEST COMPLETE UPRIGHT PIANO MADE

It isn't what we gain but what we give that counts

THAT is the real Christmas spirit, and the true spirit all the year 'round, for that matter. Most folks feel that way. It's hard to fit your gifts to your purse, tho—but it can be done; in a big way, too.

A good player piano will bring a lot of lasting pleasure to the whole family. Here is a new one, reasonably priced, you should know about.

STROHBER DIMINUTIVE

It's small—

That's the great feature about it. Standard keys and keyboard, but standing only forty-three inches high. Not much higher than the average grand piano.

As a piano without the player attachment it is becoming the standard church and school piano. Its practical construction and light weight make it the favorite. It has a full soundboard, full length strings, full sized hammers, possesses extraordinary tone. As a player—the action is so easy a child can operate it. Plays all standard rolls.

The Strohber Diminutive is an ideal gift for Christmas—everyone loves music and this little instrument makes everyone a musician.

There is a music merchant in your community to supply you; we would like to send you pictures and complete information—use the coupon.

This is our latest piano. We have been building fine upright and grand pianos since 1884.

SMITH & BARNES, pianos, players, grands.

STROHBER, pianos, players, grands, diminutives.

HOFFMANN, LESSING & WILLARD, pianos and players.

MUSIC MERCHANTS: If we are not represented in your city write for particulars

SMITH BARNES & STROHBER CO.
1872 CLYBOURN AVENUE, CHICAGO

Please send me complete information and pictures of the new piano, the Strohber Diminutive.

Name _____

P. O. Address _____

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, November 26, 1921

The World News of the Week

DEEP FAT FRYING is such a simple process!

Just pour the Wesson Oil into the kettle and bring it to the right temperature.

The fat should brown a bit of bread in forty counts if it is to be used for croquettes or mixtures that have already been cooked once—in one minute for small fritters, oysters or small fish—in a minute and a half for chops, cutlets, or French fried potatoes.

When the fat is just hot enough, plunge in the food and, when cooked, drain on unglazed paper.

As soon as the oil is cool, pour it through a fine strainer to remove crumbs of food.

If the oil is never allowed to smoke, that is, burn, it can be used over and over again without clarifying.

Continued from page 865
would have representation in the All-Irish House of Commons in proportion to population and would be protected in the Senate, perhaps receiving half of the Senators. Ulster objected to this All-Irish Parliament proposal because under it Ulster might suffer from injurious taxation and would be dependent upon the All-Irish Parliament for the division of revenue.

Britain to Begin Paying Interest

THAT Great Britain has made arrangements to begin paying the interest on her $4,000,000,000 debt to the United States was announced in the House of Commons by Sir Robert Horne, Chancellor of the Exchequer. He said that in the next year two half-yearly payments of £25,000,000 each—normally a total of £250,000,000—would be made. For three years no interest has been paid, so that on November 15 about $600,000,000 was due at the rate of 5 per cent. which the loan bears, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer assumed that this deferred interest would be funded with the rest of the debt.

In his address he advised against discussion of the interallied indebtedness on the ground that it did not conduce to friendliness of feeling between the United States and Britain and that much harm had been done by suggestions for a cancellation of debts. "Our attitude toward our debts," he said, "is what it has been always: What we owe we shall be prepared to pay." We shall meet our obligations, however hard and difficult the circumstances may be at the time.

The economy campaign of the British government has been less successful than that of the American. It had been estimated that there would be a surplus over ordinary expenditures of £177,000,000, of which £80,000,000 was to go to the debt sinking fund, leaving a net surplus of £97,000,000. But the costs of the coal strike, the railway settlement and other extraordinary items more than wiped out the £97,000,000, and a slump in tax receipts made heavy inroads into the £80,000,000, so that the government will have to borrow £60,000,000 to make good the sinking fund obligations. The one comfort the Chancellor offered was that the situation might have been worse.

Pastors Work as Laborers

AN UNUSUAL experiment has been tried in Boston in an effort to bring about a better understanding between Church and labor. The pastors of seven prominent Boston churches donned overalls and went to work for a day as union laborers on building construction jobs, driving teams, carrying hods, wielding trowels, and doing other manual tasks—all in a cold, driving rain which added to the severity of their test. Each received a union card and had an excellent opportunity of getting the viewpoint of his fellow laborers.

Labor leaders of Boston reciprocated by speaking from the pulpits of twenty-five Boston churches on the following Sunday, so that the congregations also participated in the process of mutual education. The experiment was arranged by the Greater Boston Federation of Churches.

MARINES GUARD MAILS. So many robberies of registered mails have occurred recently, entailing the losses of huge sums, that 1,000 United States marines have been detailed to guard mail wagons and postal cars until a permanent armed force attached to the Post-Office Department is organized. These guards are stationed in the twelve Federal Reserve centers and in Los Angeles, because the large money shipments in those cities have been particularly tempting to the bandits.

SENATE PASSES TAX BILL. The tax revision bill has been passed by the Senate by a vote of 38 to 24, after prolonged consideration, and has been sent to conference between the House and Senate. Two efforts to include the soldiers' bonus proposition in the measure were defeated.

REV. DR. J. P. PETERS DIES. Rev. Dr. John Punnett Peters, professor of New Testament in the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., and rector emeritus of St. Michael's Episcopal Church in New York City, died in a New York hospital on his sixty-ninth year. He was a noted Hebrew scholar and archaeologist, and discovered and began the excavation of the site of ancient Nippur.

ANATOLE FRANCE WINS NOBEL PRIZE. To Anatole France, the French author, has been awarded the 1921 Nobel Prize in literature, worth about $40,000. He is the fourth Frenchman to receive the prize since its foundation in 1901.

SUBMARINE TAKES FIRE UNDER SEA. Twenty-two men aboard the United States submarine L-6 escaped death only through a desperate fight when the craft burst into flames while submerged ten fathoms. Seven men suffered injuries from smoke and flames before the submarine reached the surface for a fast fifteen-mile run, still afire, to the submarine base in Los Angeles Harbor.

THE JORDAN TO SUPPLY ELECTRIC POWER. British officials have approved plans by which the waters of the Jordan, the Yarmuk and other rivers of Palestine are to be harnessed to supply electric power to be distributed throughout the country. An agreement has been signed to grant such a concession to a company which will co-operate with the Zionist organization.

NEW JAPANESE PREMIER TAKES OFFICE. Baron Korekiyo Takahashi, who was minister of finance in the cabinet of the late Premier Hara, has assumed office as Premier of Japan, all the ministers of the Hara cabinet retaining their posts. In addition to holding the Premiership, Baron Takahashi will serve as minister of finance and acting minister of the navy for a time. He is regarded as a liberal and an opponent of militaristic policies.

GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN TREATIES IN EFFECT. The exchange of ratifications of the peace treaties between the United States and Germany and Austria has been completed. A draft of a proclamation declaring this country at peace has been submitted to President Harding by the State Department for early promulgation.

POLISH PRESIDENT OFFERS RESIGNATION. General Pilsudski, president of Poland, offered his resignation because of opposition to a plan of his ministers for the incorporation of Vilna in the Polish state. His resignation was not accepted, however, and he later decided, in view of persistent opposition in the Diet, not to press the bill putting Vilna into a middle Lithuanian state, as he wished.

IN MANY South American cities, rat-catchers are a part of the municipal service agencies, acting under the Board of Health, and are employed as cities in the United States employ street-cleaners. The rat-catchers use gas to kill off the rodents, which are numerous even in the better hotels and newer buildings. A returned Y. W. C. A. secretary describes the method in Buenos Aires:

When rats become too obstreperous, a report is sent to the health board and the men are sent out with their small gassing machines, to which a hose is attached. Holes are bored in the floors of the building, the hose is inserted and the gas is pumped through. Sometimes the rats escape and are caught; sometimes they are asphyxiated quickly and die where they are. When there are a great many rats in the walls four men are employed working at the four corners of each room, so that the rodents will have little chance of escape from the poison in any direction.

Here Are Prices You've Been Waiting For

Why look further for low prices? "Kalamazoo-Direct-to-You" prices have hit bottom. Our savings to you are now the biggest in the history of our business. Prices quoted here show but a sample of what we can save for you.

Send for New List of Prices $18.95

and see the savings you can make on articles such as furnaces, washing machines, cream separators, fencing, shoes, paint, sewing machines, and a great line of farm and home needs.

Quick shipment. Cash or easy payments. Send a postal today and Ask for Catalog No. 103

Kalamazoo Stove Co. Mfrs., Kalamazoo, Mich.

A Kalamazoo Direct to You

Cuticura Soap Will Help You Clear Your Skin

Soap, Ointment, Talcum, etc. everywhere. Samples free of Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

THE RICHEST MAN IN KANSAS

is Dr. Charles M. Sheldon's new book. It is a dramatic story and a test of character. Post-paid for one copy

The Christian Herald New York

FREE All Charges Prepaid Subject to Examination

The BEST of all GIFTS

Easiest Reading Bible

The Bible has never been published in any form in which the reading of it has been made so attractive to both old and young as in the "International" CHRISTIAN WORKERS' BIBLE

By an entirely new plan, a thread of red ink, running from Genesis to Revelation, binds in one harmonious whole each leading topic. All the precious truths which lie hidden under the mass of unconnected matter and escape the mere reader are brought to light and tied together.

The Rev. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut, D.D., the popular authority in Bible themes, has arranged on this plan Three Thousand Selected Texts.

PROMINENT PEOPLE'S OPINIONS

John Wanamaker: International Christian Workers' Bible is an advance on anything hitherto attempted in making the Bible usable.

Lyman Abbott: Valuable to Christian Workers in their endeavor to get at the teaching of the Bible directly and immediately, and not through the medium of commentaries.

BOUND IN GENUINE LEATHER, divinity circuit, with overlapping covers (like illustration), round corners, gold edges, red underneath. Size of page 5 1/2 x 8 1/2 inches. Beautifully printed in extra large clear type on extra fine paper; also contains Latest Teachers' Helps to Bible Study.

SPECIAL OFFER The Christian Workers' Bible will be SENT FREE for examination, ALL CHARGES PREPAID. If it does not please you, return it at our expense. If it does please you, remit special price. Published at $7.50, but for a limited time we offer this handsome, most usable Bible at the Special Price of only $4.95. Send no money but fill in and mail coupon.

THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO. PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SEND NO MONEY—Cut out Coupon and mail today
Largest American Bible Publishers
Please send without charge, the Christian Workers' Bible. I will remit $4.95 or return same in 5 days at your expense.
Name _____ Address _____
This Bible with Patent Thumb Index 406 cuts down on cover 50% extra Bibles with name on not returnable

"Sloan's for every muscle in the Human Body"

Relief for all external pains and aches: rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, sprains and strains, overworked and sore muscles. Sloan's is good for all of them! Don't rub—it penetrates.

Sold by dealers you know and can trust, 35c, 70c, $1.40.

Keep it handy

Sloan's Liniment (Pain's enemy)

YARN DIRECT FROM THE MILL

PRICES REDUCED. Popular shades of Worsted and Sport Mixtures. Agents wanted. NORFOLK YARN CO. SAMPLES FREE

739 B Boylston St. Boston 17 Mass.
LOOMS—ONLY $9.90 Big Money In Weaving rugs, carpets, portieres, etc., at home; from rags and waste material. Weavers are rushed with orders. Send for free loom book. It tells all about the weaving business and our wonderful $9.90 and other low-priced, easily-operated looms.

UNION LOOM WORKS, 282 Factory St., Boonville, N.Y.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 88 THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1868, Hillsboro, Ohio

THIS GIRL IS A WONDER

Do you want more money than you ever possessed? If so, learn to make nut and fruit bonbons. You can work from your own home; all who sample your bonbons become regular customers. Mary Elizabeth started her candy kitchen with $5.00 and has made a fortune. Cannot you do likewise? I will tell you all about the business, and help you start, so you can become independent. Now is the psychological time to make big money, as sugar is cheaper and fine bonbons command phenomenal prices. Write today, ISABELLE INEZ, 47 Morewood Building, Pittsburgh, Pa. (Adv.)

NO OTHER CALENDAR LIKE IT

The Daily Texts Give It Great Value

The Beautiful 1922

Scripture Text Calendar

and Thoughts for Daily Meditation

is the finest calendar the Christian Herald has ever offered to its readers. See below how anyone may secure a copy at nominal cost.

DAILY WORDS OF CHEER

The Scripture Text Calendar for 1922, with its combination of the beauties of art with the daily words of inspiration from the Bible, will, we think, meet with general approval. The art work, including both the front page and the inside pictures, is reproduced in the beautiful four-color process printing.

The size of the Calendar is 9 1/4 inches wide and 16 inches long. The pages are on fine enamel paper with metal top and cord hanger.

TWELVE WORKS OF ART

Besides the cover design, the calendar contains a four-color picture for each month. We present herewith a list of these works of art:

- JANUARY—Christ Healing the Sick Child.
- FEBRUARY—Returning from Jerusalem.
- MARCH—The Story of the Good Samaritan.
- APRIL—He Is Risen.
- MAY—Christ Teaching Little Children.
- JUNE—The Son of a Carpenter.
- JULY—Christ Going Through the Wheat Field.
- AUGUST—Christ and the Fallen Woman.
- SEPTEMBER—Jesus Sitting by the Sea of Galilee.
- OCTOBER—The Rainbow Promise.
- NOVEMBER—The Story of Jacob's Ladder.
- DECEMBER—The Holy Night.

You can only appreciate the general excellence of the design and the artistic effect produced by the combination of beautiful colors by sending for the calendar itself.

As an adornment for the walls of the home, the famous picture, "Master, I Perish," artistically adapted to the cover design of the Scripture Text Calendar for 1922, is one which speaks eloquently, conveying to the beholder a suggestion of hope and good cheer.

By referring to the Scripture Text Calendar you can tell what the Sunday School Lesson will be for any Sunday in 1922—an aid to the busy teacher.

A 200-YEAR CALENDAR

On the back of the Calendar is a 200-Year Calendar, by the use of which you can locate the day of the week on which you were born, or any important event in recent history; in fact, the dates within two centuries. A table of the Easter Sundays between 1860 and 1955 is given; also a table showing Standard Time Around the World. These educational features add to the practical utility of the calendar and enhance its value to old and young.

Here is how every reader may get one

We will send the Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks (new or renewed) and a copy of the Scripture Text Calendar, both postpaid, for

ONLY
$2.20

We will send single copies or extra copies of the Calendar, postpaid, for 35c a copy. If you are not renewing your subscription just now, send 35c to get a copy of the Calendar. Order now, for the quantity is limited. You will be delighted with its beauty and daily value.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

65 BIBLE HOUSE

NEW YORK

The Miracle of Chinatown

NEW YORK'S Chinatown, mecca of sight-seers and maelstrom of evil, is undergoing a great change. Heathen idols and shrines have been destroyed, the real temple to Confucius has been closed, and a Christian "Mayor" has been elected.

And Other Marvelous Transformations Wrought by Evangelistic Work

By ARTHUR J. SMITH

All this has not happened overnight; it is the result of years of patient work by two heroic men—thirty-four years for the Rev. Huie Kin, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and thirteen years for the Rev. Lee To, pastor of the Methodist-Baptist Mission. Nine years ago we of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City engaged these men to go out on the street corners and give the Gospel to their people there, assuring them that we would help them in every way we could. We sent cornetists to draw the crowds; we secured police permits for the meetings, and rendered further service when needed.

We do not claim that all our friends in Chinatown have become Christians. We do claim, however, that some of the leaders have been won for Christ, and many of the people have their faces toward the Cross. They have discovered that Confucius cannot comfort, help, or save them. They have seen many of their people who had sunk into degradation and sin transformed by the Gospel of Christ, and have said, "This is what we need and what we want."

Rev. Lee To is now the center of interest and a figure of vital importance in Chinatown. "Every mountain-top of privilege is girdled by the vales of lowly duty," and no one knows this better than Lee To. When he first came to Chinatown as a missionary about thirteen years ago, he found his people in the midst of moral degradation, ambition as their king, and bringing down upon the heads of their progeny all the attendant evils of a selfish life. Mr. To's progress was slow. Finding it almost impossible to draw the people to his meeting-place, he went to the street corner, assisted by our Committee, and little by little won a hearing. His converts did not number more than ten or a dozen a year, and these few left the vicinity almost immediately, seeking better environment; their leaving and the influx of others only intensified his problems, but he was dauntless.

Although it was evident that Lee To was getting a strong hold on Chinatown, the most hopeful would have hardly dared predict that he would become head of the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association, or "Mayor of Chinatown." Every Chinaman in America is automatically a member of this Association, or of a similar organization which centers in San Francisco. It is not only a benevolent association, as the name indicates, but it is also a source of counsel and authority in legal matters, and its head is looked to for guidance in anything that concerns the lives and welfare of the members. There is still a great deal to be done. He was not elected "Mayor" because the electors were Christians, for the majority of them were not; but because through his consistent Christian life and sterling principles he had won their confidence as a leader. They are loath to accept Christianity for themselves, but they like it in Lee To; they like his justice and compassion, and their approval is a good omen for the future.

Rev. Huie Kin, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, said he felt sure that the open-air work had much to do in bringing about the great change which has taken place in Chinatown, which has been referred to by some Christians in the city as a real miracle of grace.

IT WAS night on the lower East Side. A man with malice in his heart, his brain filled with an insane desire—the desire to kill—had come all the way from Russia to avenge a wrong. He was avoiding the lights, yet he was watching the crowd. While seeking his enemy he came upon a group of men on a street corner listening to a speaker. Suddenly, his attention was arrested by an expression of the speaker concerning the forgiving love of God. He listened—he was strangely moved—he wondered if there was anything in this for him, and when the meeting was over he followed the speaker to the little mission house and there he told his story. He was led to put his trust in Christ and told that he must love and forgive his enemy; and when he left the mission house that night he went out to seek the man who had wronged him, but this time not to kill him but to lead him to Christ.

Some years ago a murderer was apprehended by the commonwealth of New York, convicted and executed at a cost of about $100,000. It cost the Evangelistic Committee of New York but three dollars to conduct the meeting in which this would-be murderer was saved. A miracle of grace took place in this man's life and the Empire State was probably saved a large sum.

A clergyman who had been unfrocked by his church for heresy heard one of our evangelists in a street meeting, and at the close of the meeting approached him and told him his story, and finally said, "You have removed all of my difficulties today. I can go back to my church and ask to be reinstated." His trouble was scepticism and unbelief. The Gospel message had removed his difficulties and changed him from a doubter to a believer.

In 1905 we placed a fully equipped tent in the heart of a Neapolitan and Sicilian district in Little Italy, a section estimated then to contain about sixty or seventy thousand Italians with only three churches, and for five years prosecuted an aggressive campaign in the district, in meetings in the tent and in the open-air. A church resulted with a membership, just before the war, of 800. Two groups of anarchists were disbanded. Some of the members of these bands were converted and taken into the church. The leader of one of the bands, who was also the editor of an anarchistic newspaper, was so greatly changed that he was elected an officer in the church and is now devoting his entire time to Christian work.

EARLY in the work on Canal and West Streets, a man came into our tent so intoxicated that he had to be supported as he sat on a chair. Something in the meeting arrested his attention and reached his heart, for the man was sobered and mightily moved. He was taken to a lodging-house where he was kept for the night, and later taken to a Christian home for intemperate men where he heard more of the Gospel story. This man was wonderfully saved. Later he went to a missionary training school in Chicago, where he worked his way, was graduated with honors, went out to the Far West as a missionary pastor where he labored with great success. The change in his life was a miracle of grace.

A fight between two gangs occurred in one of our tents in an Italian district one night. The two young women conducting the young people's meeting were obliged to climb a six-foot picket fence to reach a place of safety. One of the young women was almost killed in the fight. At the close of the season one of the gangs was reached and organized into a Bible club and related to a church in the neighborhood.

During the late war, the pastor of the church received a letter from France forwarded by the Red Cross, which was taken from the pocket of a soldier in No Man's Land. It was stained with his own blood. In the letter he said, "I have been over the top seven times; we have just been ordered over for the eighth time; I don't expect to come back. I remember the tent and the things taught in the tent and am not afraid." He did not come back to us, but he went on to meet his Lord. A miracle had taken place in his life—from a gangster he became a devoted follower of Jesus Christ.

Wanting "To Be Somebody"

ONE morning last November, a poor colored woman came to the Industrial Institute at Mayesville, S. C., on the early train and brought a girl with her. I asked what I could do for her. She said she had brought her niece to school, as her husband did not want her in the house with him. The girl was not in to him and for that reason he very often would drive her away, and she would go out and stay with whoever would take her in for the night. The poor thing was really an outcast and the aunt said she knew that the girl couldn't stand up long, wandering around from house to house. So she brought her to the Mayesville Institute in the hope that we would take her in. The girl's mother and father were dead, and the aunt was unable to do anything for her.

The Story of a Colored Girl Who Sought Opportunity
By EMMA J. WILSON
Founder of Mayesville Institute

I told her I didn't see how we could take the girl, everything being so very high and funds for our work being short. They both began to weep bitterly and the woman begged piteously that the girl be allowed to remain. Lillian, the girl, said to me: "Just let me stay; I will do anything you want me to do. I want to be in school; I want to learn my book and to cook and sew." Then her aunt said she would do what she could by furnishing part of her clothes. The girl was her dead brother's child, and she did so much want "to be somebody!"

Then I called in a number of the teachers and told them the story. They said they couldn't give her money to pay board with, but they could give her articles of clothing, which they have done. It was for me to decide whether to trust God and take the girl, or to let her go. The latter seemed a very hard thing to do, so I told her I would take her and do the best I could by her; and if the time came when I couldn't keep her any longer, I would let her know.

Lillian is about fourteen, and is entirely dependent. We have to provide everything for her. She is anxious to be a dressmaker and we are trying to obtain a scholarship for her. The fee is $75 for the year. She works and likes to work; but to let her study successfully, we don't put too many duties upon her.

The first Sunday after coming to Mayesville, Lillian went to Sunday school and she said, "I have never been to Sunday school before." During our week of prayer, she asked for prayer that she might become a better girl. She said "I want to live for the Master and want Him to make me what He would have me be."

Lillian is a very good girl, and promises well in her work and her studies. She always says she is very anxious "to be somebody."

OUR work at Mayesville was founded in 1882, and during the years that have passed we have had several hundred conversions. We have a strong Y. M. C. A. and a Y. W. C. A., which are doing most excellent work in moulding character. We have taken the greatest care to instill in our children the love of God and the Gospel of Salvation, in addition to the secular training. It is having its telling effects not only in the school, but in the homes of these people as they grow up.

Then there is the case of Clarence, who was brought to us by his father, who is a minister—a good man, but with no fixed pastorate and very slight means. He was a widower when he brought the boy to us, some two years ago. He wanted him to work his way through. The father has not been able to do anything for him up to the present time. Clarence is now about fourteen and I never saw a brighter little fellow. He doesn't care a great deal about studies, but only his trade. He says: "I just love brick mason and farming. And, Miss Wilson, you'll be proud of Clarence, yet." He is certainly a very great help to us.

We have fourteen boys and girls, all unsupported, in addition to our regular students, and would be glad to hear from any friends who might be interested in helping them. Since the law has been passed that all children in South Carolina should attend school, hundreds have applied to us for admission. The value of a Christian education, combined with industrial training, is well illustrated at Mayesville.

A New Day for the World

Continued from page 862

And it was not an exception that on the faces of men and women there were tears of thanksgiving that the opening of the Conference had been marked by spiritual power. As one said who had felt it in a most astonishing degree, "I felt as if at last a new day had dawned for the world. For I had been witnessing, not a repetition of the old worn-out discredited diplomatic intrigue, but I had been viewing and hearing new voices that were bound to make themselves heard through the clamor of selfish national interests."

No matter what the final outcome of the Conference may be, that first day was a new day in the history of international deliberations. It marked the passing of the secret scheming of politicians acting under concealment and planning to gain the advantage by moving the eternal pawns of suffering humanity on the diplomatic chess-board. It marked the beginning of the end of old-world treaties and bargains, and it blazed the way to a human method of dealing with human needs that cannot be set aside for selfish or narrow ambitions of any country without incurring for that country the well-merited scorn of mankind.

Over all the deep and unreportable significance of this new day for international relations rose the words of the prayer of the morning:

"We pray for clear vision, or we grope blindly for the light and lose our way. We pray for the forward look, or we shall be overwhelmed in hopeless pessimism. Out of the depths we cry unto Thee, O God! Save us, or we perish!"

But the world will not perish if in the spirit of the President's most noble utterance we make up our minds that as a nation, we of the United States, continue to want "less of armament and none of war."

The first day of the Conference was a foregleam of a new day for America and the world.

"ASK Mr. Foster" has been variously adapted. At a conference of farmers held at one of the schools in Topeka a dozen of the young ladies were selected to be guides and helpers for the guests, to answer questions and to make them feel at ease while in the school. They wore white badges with the legend "Ask me." The "Potato King of Kansas," waxing eloquent over his possessions and achievements, rather depreciated the necessity for school training and told the audience that in fact he had brought his son with him to the school to select a good, healthy, country girl for a wife, and at least a dozen had anticipated this visit and had bebadged themselves, "Ask Me."

A PRESBYTERIAN missionary was working in Canada and coming to a cabin asked the good woman if there were any Presbyterians in her neighborhood. The woman looked in amazement for a moment and then assured him that she did not know but if there were any Joek had their hides nailed up out on the shed.

Spectacles SENT FREE ON TEN DAYS TRIAL

Don't Send Me One Penny

I Am Going To Mail You a Pair of the Latest-Style, Extra-Large, Round-Eye, "Sight-Improving" Spectacles Absolutely Free of Charge

I want you to take a good look at the spectacles in the above heading. Notice their size and shape. Compare them with the glasses you or your friends may be wearing right now.

Notice the extra-large round eyes in these latest-style "sight-improving" spectacles. The glasses are as large and as round as a silver dollar, as you can see in the above picture; and completely cover every part of the human eye so you don't have to look over the tops of them or squint your eyes under them like you have to do when wearing the old-style small-eye spectacles for sale at stores.

These Latest-Style, Extra-Large, Round-Eye "Sight-Improving" Spectacles Have Taken the Country by Storm

Thousands of spectacle-wearers from Maine to California have quit using the old-style small-eye egg-shaped glasses and are now wearing the latest-style extra-large round-eye "sight-improving" spectacles—which have practically taken the country by storm—and I am going to send you a pair of these up-to-date glasses complete in a very neat and handsome 10 karat gold-filled spectacle frame, to try fully ten days on your own eyes in your own home without a cent in advance or even a reference.

You Can Wear These Latest-Style, Extra-Large, Round-Eye "Sight-Improving" Spectacles for Far or Near, for Reading or Looking Away Off in the Distance

As soon as you get them, I want you to put them on your eyes no matter how weak they may be from age; sit down at your fireside these cold wintry nights and you will be agreeably surprised to discover that you can again read the finest print in your newspaper or magazine; you will be able to thread the smallest-eyed needle and do the finest kind of embroidery and crocheting with them on and do it all night long if you like without any headaches or eye-pains and with as much ease and comfort as you ever did in your life.

You Can Use Them When Out Hunting, Driving or To the Movies if You So Desire

If you like to go out hunting occasionally, put on these latest-style, "sight-improving" spectacles, go out into the woods some bright sunny morning and you will be delighted to find how greatly they help you in sighting your gun and taking aim at your game.

Or if you are fond of going to the movies once in a while, you can take a seat away in the back end of the theatre—to avoid the glimmer of the lights—and you will be pleased to notice that even the smallest words and pictures on the screen look just as clear and as plain to you as though you were sitting right in the front row, with the aid of these latest-style, "sight-improving" spectacles.

Seeing Is Believing

Now I realize that it may be hard for you—or any other spectacle-wearer whose sight has become greatly weakened from age—to believe that these latest-style, "sight-improving" spectacles will again bring back to you the absolutely perfect sight of your younger days.

But you know the old saying "Seeing is believing" and I positively will not accept one single solitary penny from you until you have seen these latest-style spectacles and have found them more sight-improving to your own eyes than any spectacles you have ever bought anywhere at any price before. That is the reason why I am only asking you to fill out and mail me the coupon below, and I will immediately send you a handsome 10 karat gold-filled pair of the latest-style, "sight-improving" spectacles by mail, all charges prepaid to try fully 10 days on your own eyes in your own home without a cent in advance or even a reference.

Cut Out this Coupon on this Line

AMERICAN SPECTACLE HOUSE, Room 10, 55th & Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—I have read your liberal offer and want you to send me by mail all charges prepaid a handsome 10-karat gold filled pair of your latest-style, extra-large, round-eye, "sight-improving" spectacles complete with an up-to-date leatherette spring-back pocket-book spectacle case which you are offering on ten days absolute free trial.

I am going to try them out for reading or looking away off in the distance, for far or near, indoors or outdoors and in every way you have mentioned above, and if I find them all you claim them to be after a 10 days trial, I will pay you your advertising price of $2.85 and no more. I want you, however, to distinctly understand that if I do not find them to be right up-to-date in every respect or if they do not restore the absolutely perfect vision of my younger days, I will return them to you without a cent of pay as I don't intend to keep them unless they are much better than any spectacles I have ever used before and even then I positively will not pay for them unless I consider them a bargain at the advertising price of $2.85 which you are asking for them and you will have to take my word as final in this matter. Be Sure and Answer the Following Questions:

How old are you? Ans..... How many years have you used glasses (if any) Ans.....
Name.....
County..... Post Office.....
R. R..... Box..... State.....
Street and No. (if any).....

COPYRIGHT 1921 - BY A.S.H.

CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS ARE INVITED to send for full particulars of the money-saving

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK BUYER'S CLUB

Thousands are now members. WHY NOT YOU?

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BOOK DEPARTMENT, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

W. L. DOUGLAS

FOR MEN AND WOMEN

$7.00 & $8.00 SHOES

SPECIAL SHOES $10.00 STYLISH AND DURABLE SHOES $5.00

YOU CAN SAVE MONEY BY WEARING W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES

The best known shoes in the world. They are sold in 107 W. L. Douglas stores, direct from the factory to you at only one profit, which guarantees to you the best shoes that can be produced, at the lowest possible cost. W. L. Douglas name and the retail price is stamped on the sole of all shoes before they leave the factory, which is your protection against unreasonable profits. W. L. Douglas $7.00 and $8.00 shoes are absolutely the best shoe values for the money in this country. They combine quality, style, workmanship and wearing qualities equal to other makes selling at higher prices. They are the leaders in the fashion centers of America. The stamped price is W. L. Douglas personal guarantee that the shoes are always worth the price paid for them. The prices are the same everywhere; they cost no more in San Francisco than they do in New York. W. L. Douglas shoes are made by the highest paid, skilled shoemakers, under the direction and supervision of experienced men, all working with an honest determination to make the best shoes for the price that money can buy.

CAUTION.—Insist upon having W. L. Douglas shoes. The name and price is plainly stamped on the sole. Be careful to see that it has not been changed or mutilated. If not for sale in your vicinity, order direct from factory. Catalog free.

BOYS SHOES $4.50 & $5.00

W. L. Douglas name and portrait is the best known shoe Trade Mark in the world. It stands for the highest standard of quality at the lowest possible cost. W. L. Douglas shoes with his name and retail price stamped on the sole are worn by more men than any other make.

W. L. Douglas
President
W. L. Douglas Shoe Co.,
165 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.

OUR MAIL-BAG

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any questions addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters, nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

MRS. J. J. G., Mylam, Ala. The accepted theory regarding the authorship of the first five books of the Bible is that Moses collected, arranged and left to his successors records which, after his death, were woven into the continuous narrative we now possess. There are scattered throughout the five books expressions that were obviously not written by Moses, yet the use of which in no wise impairs the historic serviceability of the narrative, so that even conceding they were inserted after his death, they can not be regarded as out of place. As to the thirty-fourth chapter of Deuteronomy, it is quite evident it must have been written subsequent to the death of Moses. Josephus, the Jewish historian, however, held that Moses himself, by prophetic inspiration, before he ascended Mt. Nebo wrote the account of his own death and burial.

A. B. D., Sandersville, Miss. 1. Your request has been sent to the Prayer League. 2. We regret that the poem you quote is not in our collection.

Mrs. C. D. R., Reelsville, Ind. The verses in Isaiah 35: 8, 9, 10, have frequently been discussed. "The way of holiness," otherwise "the way of the Holy One," is held to refer to the way leading the redeemed back to Jerusalem, both the literal and the heavenly. Christ at His coming will be the Leader on the Way for which reason it is called also "the way of the Lord." Not the iniquitous, even though rich and mighty, shall travel that road; but to the simple wayfarer, who has found life a struggle, but has not yielded to sin, the way will be clear and open, and he will be safeguarded against danger or straying. The return of the ransomed to Zion is pictured as being accompanied by singing and joy and great gladness.

Mrs. J. H. F., Logansport, Ind. The Constitution of the U. S. guarantees freedom of religious worship, and this right is extended to all religions alike. As to encouraging a person to unite with any particular church, that must be regarded as a matter for the individual conscience. It is not supposable that any one would advise another to unite with a church, or accept a religion in which the adviser does not believe.

This letter, addressed to the Bowery Mission, has been sent to the Mail-Bag, whose readers will find it of special interest. A. H., Lodi, Calif., writes: "I will introduce myself as a sinner saved by grace. Our Lord found me on the street, like so many others that have gone astray. Yesterday evening I went to the Mission (Peniel) in Stockton, Calif., and being somewhat early, I went into the library. There I took up a copy of the Christian Herald and read an account of how the Bowery Mission feeds the hungry and the down-and-out, and I felt that I should have a part in that work, because I had gotten many pieces of bread when I was hungry. My Lord did not let me perish. I am praying that many souls may be saved in the Bowery Mission. Please let me know if you receive this letter and the draft of $100 enclosed."

This gift to the Bowery Mission, from an unexpected quarter, will be applied in feeding the hungry and homeless men and lads of the Bread Line. It represents much sacrifice on the part of the giver.

B. J., Germantown, Pa. It can not be definitely stated in the absence of full statistics, how many women are in the pulpit today. The Disciples of Christ have nearly a hundred women pastors, according to "The Bible Today," the first woman pastor having been ordained by that denomination forty-seven years ago. There are fifteen in the State of Illinois and eight in Kansas.

A. L. P., Independence, Kans., writes: "In traveling through the country, I am surprised at the great number of open wells, and wells with only a trap-door or loose cover, which are a constant source of great danger to the lives of children on the farms and in villages. As I believe that this is partly due to thoughtlessness on the part of the farmers, would it not be well to publish a warning against this danger, as many children may lose their lives from this cause?"

The suggestion is a good one. Wells in the condition our correspondent describes are a positive danger, and should be properly guarded.

Dr. H. D. Prowd, Superintendent of Foreign Missions at Turrialba, Costa Rica, writes: "We are in receipt of your letter of August 19, with check of $47, for our work in Costa Rica. There are eight mission stations: Turrialba, Siquirres, Germania, Pocora, Parismina, Cairo Branch, Cuba Creek and Cedar Creek. We have also two new places to enter, where the people are crying for the Gospel. To many of these places we have to go on foot over bad and dangerous roads and through rivers, to reach these people. The peasantry of the country are very poor. While there is the spirit of earnestness, their earning capacity is so low that it forms an almost insurmountable barrier. We pray God's blessing upon all who think of us in these far-away places."

Q. J. C., Hopkinson, Mass. It is a dangerous business to judge others. "God alone knoweth the heart." We are not to be judges. As for the various charities and benevolences you mention, they are, all of them we believe, consecrated in the true Christian spirit. Jesus Himself first fed the hungry multitudes and then preached the Gospel to them and they "heard him gladly!" With regard to the Disarmament Conference, we are hoping and praying that it may be divinely guided. We have within the last few weeks received from thousands of churches and from large conferences—the whole representing several millions of church members—a fervent endorsement of the movement to minimize wars and to reduce armaments. These people are appealing to God to direct the Conference in accordance with His will. It is true that without Him we can do nothing; but with faith and obedience to His will, what mighty good for humanity may not be accomplished?

Mrs. W. F., Brooklyn, N. Y. The right to read the Bible in the Public Schools, which has long been a disputed question, will shortly be tested in the U. S. Supreme Court by the Presbyterian Synod of the State of Washington, according to the New York Tribune. That publication states that one of the main arguments in support of the right will be that the enactment and enforcement of state laws for bidding the Bible to be read in the schools has resulted in an increase of crime. It will also be shown that the prohibition is a violation of the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, and that the exclusion of the Bible on the ground that it is a sectarian book can not and should not be maintained.

Mr. A. C. Harte writes from Jerusalem to the Christian Herald: "Yesterday evening I had tea with Mr. and Mrs. Vester of the American Colony. I found them much concerned concerning the Christian Herald Orphanage which the Colony has carried on since its inception. The Orphanage is small, but the work done is of an exceptional character. The children seem to be happy, and though they have much work and study, there always seems to be an atmosphere of joy. The Orphanage is not only a happy home but it is also a good and practical school. When the girls leave it, they are fitted to do well the kind of work that must be done in this country, and which they can secure. I hope it will be possible for the Christian Herald and its readers to continue the Orphanage as it is, and to extend it so that at least a hundred girls can be taken care of at one time. You will be glad to know that the Jerusalem Y. M. C. A. is making good headway. Without a membership canvass and with very limited accommodations, the membership numbers 287. October 18 we formally opened a new conference hall and began our autumn and winter program. I am confident that if we had good teachers for commercial and industrial branches, our membership would soon pass the five hundred mark. One of the features of our work is the library. We are really proud of our good beginning. We would appreciate it, if you could give us an autograph copy of 'In His Steps' for our special Jerusalem alcove."

Premium Offers for 1921-22

In Combination with
The Christian Herald

You may renew your subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD and receive special low prices on these excellent books, or you may order the books separately at the prices named when ordering the books singly.

The Wonder Book of Why and What?

The most wonderful Wonder Book of all. It deals with many of the questions children are constantly asking on all sorts of subjects. There are hundreds of illustrations of entrancing interest, and the book is without a single dull page. The harassed parent will hail this book with as much delight as the youngsters.

Crown 4to. Picture Boards.
12 Plates in Color.
256 Pages.
Over 300 Beautiful Illustrations.
Highly Educational.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for $3.50

We send the book separately, postpaid, for $2.00

Children's Stories from the Bible

A book that has long been wanted. It is often forgotten that the Bible is the greatest story-book in the world, and that it is especially rich in stories about little folk or that have a special interest for children. The old, old stories are here charmingly retold in simple language by Blanche Winder. The illustrations are delightfully fresh and unconventional.

With 48 Plates in Color by HARRY G. THEAKER
Large Crown 8vo. Cloth. 344 Pages.
Handsome Binding Design, with Pictorial Wrapper and Endpapers.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for $3.50

We send the book separately, postpaid, for $2.00

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

A DELIGHTFUL CHRISTMAS GIFT—Distinctive Unique Pleasing

THREE PENCILS in beautiful embossed genuine leather case with your name engraved in 18 karat Gold on pencils and case. Stamps accepted. 60 cents
THE IMPRINT PENCIL COMPANY, 530 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by the Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President; Rae D. Henkle, Secretary.
SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittance should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.
FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed to Canada, add fifty cents; outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price. Canadian remittances accepted at par.
CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least three weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. For example Dec. 21 signifies that subscription expires with the last issue of December 1921.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.
LETTERS should be addressed, the CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.
Copyright, 1921, the Christian Herald.
Entered as Second-Class Matter, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada.

THE CHRISTMAS GIFT SUPREME

THAT IS WHAT THIS CARD STANDS FOR

To perpetuate this glad Christmas Spirit
through your coming year;
I am sending you the
Christian Herald
once a week together with my heartiest wishes for A Merry Christmas
and
A Happy New Year

From

Make yourself and your friends happy by enrolling them among the hundreds of thousands of Christian Herald readers next year.

You send their names and addresses to us with $2.00 for each subscription desired and we will send them a heavy card in beautiful five color printing, filled in with your name.

Do it to-day so that we will have sufficient time to mail the gift card and place their names on our mailing list by Christmas.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Brightens the Kitchen

Your cabinet and table require frequent and thorough cleaning. Old Dutch keeps them clean and spotless with little time and work. Does not scratch the surface nor harm the hands.

Economical — Thorough — Sanitary

CHRISTIAN HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

Lower New York Sky-line from the Brooklyn Shore

for Speed

SOME housekeepers like naphtha soap because it washes clothes so easily—without hard rubbing—without continual boiling.

Some housekeepers like white laundry soap because it keeps white clothes so white—because it makes them last longer—because it is as easy on the hands as it is on fabrics.

But the wisest housekeepers use the soap that combines the speed of naphtha soap with the safety of high grade white laundry soap. This double-action cleanser is called P and G The White Naphtha Soap.

It comes in a big, white, long-lasting cake. It works all over the house as speedily and safely as it washes clothes. Get a cake from your grocer and see how much better it is.

*Not merely a white laundry soap;
Not merely a naphtha soap;
But the best features of both, combined.*

That is why it is used in more homes than any other laundry soap in America.

for Safety

Its tremendous sale indicates its superior value

People are now buying with greater discrimination than ever before. Retailers are carrying only the products for which there is a big demand. Housekeepers are buying only the products of known value. It therefore is significant that P and G The White Naphtha Soap is on sale wherever you go and that its sale is increasing every day. Its users continually grow greater in number because its popularity is built, not on the fleeting publicity of the moment, but on the substantial worth of the soap itself. In the size of the cake and the quality of the soap it is the best soap value that can be produced.

for Speed and Safety

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

(IN WHICH IS INCORPORATED WORLD OUTLOOK)
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

GRAHAM PATTERSON, PUBLISHER

The scene at the opening of the Washington Conference, with Secretary Hughes on his feet to deliver the address presenting America's epoch-making proposal for the limitation of naval armament

© Underwood & Underwood

A Triumph for Practical Idealism

BY THE time this article can be printed in the Christian Herald, its readers will be in possession of all the things said and done on the important second day of the international Conference on Limitation of Armament and on Pacific and Far Eastern questions. But I am taking it for granted that certain impressions of an eye witness to that gathering would not be old news to our readers, and some things seen and heard will not be found in the daily press.

I was impressed at the very first look at the hall where the session was held with the simplicity and lack of formality that were a part of the entire atmosphere of the occasion. Only two pictures on the walls. No tapestries or ancient works of art. No signs of red tape, or officialdom. For all a stranger could judge it might just as well have been a gathering of folk to attend a popular lecture or musical. There was chatting and social interchange in an animated manner up to the hour of calling the Conference to order. The walls of the hall were pure white with only two splashes of color on the front where the flags of the allies were grouped. The table was arranged in a U shape, around which the thirty-five delegates sat, Mr. Hughes with Mr. Balfour at his left.

Just as the chime clock was striking eleven Mr. Hughes with one blow of the gavel called the Conference to order, and without any delay announced that the order of the day was the hearing of the different representatives in reply to the proposition he had made on Saturday relative to scrapping a considerable part of the navies of the world. He said there would be no reading of minutes of the previous meeting and an absence of formality in order to get at once to the business for which the Conference was called.

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

It may be said right here that the foreign delegates who are used to the regular tiresome diplomatic delays of the old world are really greatly taken with Secretary Hughes's manner of sweeping old parliamentary and time-consuming practices into the waste-paper basket. If they only knew him as I had the privilege of knowing him for two years in Brown University they would have known that no man living has less use for the nonessentials of diplomacy or mere formality. I would as soon expect Mr. Hughes to waste time on a golf course giving a lecture on how to hit the ball before he drove off as I would to see him talking several days about how to disarm before he told how.

And the delegations from abroad, having had Sunday and Monday to catch their breath, evidently also had caught Mr. Hughes's spirit, and in order, beginning with Mr. Balfour, they stated their acceptance of the proposal made by the United States, with modifications which would be discussed and worked over in the separate committees.

It is not necessary for me in this article to go over the speeches that were made that morning. Our readers have long since read the details and additional history since. But a few impressions I received at the meeting as it went on will not be changed, no matter what the Conference may finally do.

The one thing which Mr. Balfour said that stood out, to my mind, above all the clever phrases he used, was simply one sentence; "Secretary Hughes has made idealism a practical proposition."

"At last the professional statesmen are beginning to recognize that idealism can be very practical," I could not help saying as Mr. Balfour uttered this sentence. And it is significant that this one sentence provoked the largest cheering of the day. Mr. Balfour might have gone farther and said that "practical idealism is the only thing that will end war or any other human trouble."

The Advisory Committee of the American delegation, in which you will find several familiar faces

Underwood & Underwood

AN INTERPRETATION made in French after each speaker, and this procedure tended to let down the strain with which the delegates were followed. And after the British statement was made which accepted in the main the proposition of America for reduction of naval arms, Japan rose in the person of Admiral Kato.

It was my impression that Japan's statement was the most concise and straightforward of all. And the concluding sentence, in which the interpreter, speaking in English with the clearest and purest English used by any speaker, was very loudly cheered:

"Japan assures the United States that she has no designs for offensive war and welcomes this proposal to make a beginning for world peace."

Then followed Italy, and last, France, Premier Briand speaking with great animation and more oratorically than any others. After a few words from Secretary Hughes announcing the work that would be taken up by committees and also that the next meeting of the Conference would be at his call, another momentous gathering of the nations was added to the one of Saturday, the twelfth of November. And perhaps in some ways this was even more momentous, if less dramatic than the first, because it was the expression of the powers in response to the challenge which America has flung out to the whole world in the name of the people, and not in the name of the diplomat.

It may seem to some of the readers of the Christian Herald that too much stress may have been laid in these articles on the Conference, upon diplomacy as compared with the moral sentiment and power of the people. But I do not think any one could be present at this meeting of the world powers and miss the main point. It was not a secret session. The plain common people were in that hall Tuesday morning, November 15. And there is no doubt in my mind that militarism has been feeling, as it never before felt, the mind and passion of the common people of the whole world that war is a wicked and wasteful thing and that we are beginning to pull its teeth and pare its claws, preparatory to cutting off its head.

Any one who has listened to the tremendous applause going up all over this country since Mr. Hughes proposed to actually scrap $600,000,000 worth of battle-ships for the United States alone has listened to the applause of the people. And in this case there is no question in my mind that the voice of the people is the voice of God.

MY SEAT happened to be near that of Mr. H. G. Wells, the English author of The Outline of History. The first articles Mr. Wells wrote about the Conference before it met were decidedly pessimistic as to any good results coming from the meetings. So I ventured to ask him as we were going out, "How about being optimistic now, Mr. Wells?"

He laughed good-naturedly and said, "Well, I think I am somewhere in between."

I ventured to ask him if he had ever before known in all history of a President of any country asking an he would like to say "Hooray!" I never saw any one more jubilant.

I met Mr. Balfour and told him that we felt confident the 26,000,000 church members of the United States wanted not only limitation of armament but disarmament. He smiled that winning smile of his which takes away the impression one has had of Matterhorn iciness, and said with real feeling, "Fine! Good! Very Good!"

I met Mr. Root, and, after him, Senator Lodge, who, when he heard I was from Kansas, said that the best apples he ever ate came from Kansas, for which of course I felt grateful, even if what he said had nothing to do with Mars or the sons of Mars. For when a Massachusetts man says anything in praise of Kansas, I take it he has been impressed with something, even if only apples.

I MET Secretary Hughes and tried to tell him in one sentence how much the people were in sympathy with his practical beginning, and when I told him, presuming on our acquaintance in the old University days when we were in and out of each others' rooms almost daily, of the mission of the Christian Herald to the President with the Resolutions of the churches and what the President had said on receiving that resolution, he said in his old warm-hearted manner I used to know, "Fine! Fine!" If he had spoken an oration he could not have conveyed to me more clearly the feeling he had of power that came to him from a knowledge of the way the American people, the Christian people, feel about limitation and disarmament.

I find myself praying tonight as I pen these words, all too feeble to express what I feel, that a volume of prayer will roll across this war-weary world and rise to heaven on wings of supernal hope as new chapters are being written in earth's great book. They are being written. They were written in the two hours I spent in that hall today. And please God that history shall not be completed until the Prince of Peace Himself shall write the last word, and when He is through He will write "Finis," not to the book of man's life on earth, but the END of war's annals in man's sorrowful but hereafter happy life. It is an idealist who is writing, but a "practical" one, Mr. Balfour.

CHINA'S SPOKESMEN IN THE DISCUSSION OF FAR EASTERN PROBLEMS
Left to right: General Wang, Dr. M. T. Laing, Admiral Lee, Dr. Alfred Sze, Dr. Wellington Koo, Dr. C. T. Wang and Admiral Tsai

audience to join him in the Lord's Prayer, as President Harding did at the services at Arlington at the burial of the Unknown Soldier.

He looked quickly at me with a very bright, comprehensive look and said instantly, and with emphasis: "No. That would make a new line in history."

Let us hope that when Mr. Wells writes the next chapter on the history of the United States he will put in more than one line on that fact. For to my mind the difference between this and all other world conferences to discuss international affairs is a tremendous difference, measured by actual recognition of moral and spiritual forces by both President Harding and Mr. Hughes.

After the Conference adjourned I met Mr. Bryan, who at one time, after Japan spoke, was on his feet in the press section waving his hand, and looking as if

A Japanese Woman's Prayers for Peace

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

NEVER before in the history of the world, according to the almost common consent of thoughtful people of many different nations, has so much interest been shown in any historical event as the Limitation of Armaments Conference called by President Harding. As the Conference settles down to work this impression grows in intensity. Washington is throbbing with something far greater than even the war fever and excitement which filled it during the entire war period. There is an indescribable atmosphere about the event and all it stands for which the most gifted newspaper correspondents are powerless to picture even in the most gifted use of newspaper language. The event transcends journalism. It rises above even the extraordinary efforts of the press to describe its many-sided, tremendous importance for the welfare of mankind.

And when the immense quantity of newspaper accounts has been weighed calmly, it will be found that many tons of it have been made up out of surmises, guesses, imaginings, brilliant writing about non-essentials, smart reports of sayings and doings that were not worth saying or doing.

But there will be some events that will survive and be worthy of a place in high history. And among them all will be the story of the coming to the Conference of Madam Kaji Yajima, founder and president of the Japanese Woman's Temperance Union, and a personality revealing in a most astonishing manner the power of Christ to reach any soul of any race or tongue.

Mr. Patterson and I had just come out from the President's room where we had presented to him the resolutions from the Christian Herald readers praying for world-wide peace, when Madam Yajima with her petition came, to speak, as she said to me afterwards, not alone for peace from war, but to break open the heart's of God's children in every land to the spirit of God.

Could anything be more significant than the human fact that this woman born in Japan, now over ninety years old, president of the Japanese Woman's Christian Temperance Union, should come over 8,000 miles to this country, for the express purpose of seeking, at a time of historical crisis of the human race, an opportunity to impress on the world its need of prayer?

Madam Kaji Yajima (seated), and her secretary, with the Japanese women's peace petition

MADAM YAJIMA is the first Japanese woman to receive a certificate for teaching. She has made this long journey at her own expense, using money given to her by her students to make comfortable her old age. Probably every delegation to the Conference has its expenses paid by the country from which it comes. But this old woman, who seems to breathe the spirit of peacefulness in her whole personality which eastern persons have, to a degree hardly known by the western people, sacrifices her ease and comfort and gives her all to this human cause to prove to this selfish old world that all the heroes and heroines are not military.

The petition which she brought to President Harding contained the original signatures of over 10,000 Japanese women which she obtained only a few weeks before she came. She said, "I could have obtained 100,000 names just as well, if I had begun to ask for them sooner."

Listen to this human miracle born in the country that many military men and even many American statesmen and politicians have believed has been plotting to make war on the United States. And that belief is still held by scores of so-called shrewd journalists and some men high in public life here in Washington. But hear Madam Yajima:

"I have faith that the Conference will be the foundation of peace. The Japanese women do not like war, and all who believe in God ought to join hands and make this world the Home of God."

"I have come to this country at this time as a free individual, not in any official capacity, nor even in the representative capacity as a messenger of my country."

"I know no other language than my own, but God knows every language and I have come to pray with my American sisters."

"My countrymen and women are supporting me with their prayers. I want everyone to PRAY for world peace."

I think that is as significant and tremendous a statement from this saint of God, born in Japan, and reared on its soil, as any utterance that will be made at the Conference.

I think it is, because I believe that the power of prayer that sways this ninety-year-old Japanese

Continued on page 891

The Wife Problem Confesses

Her Shortcomings in the Privilege of Making a Real Home Are Analyzed

By A MERE MAN'S WIFE

I WANTED my husband to write this article on the Wife Problem, but he said he did not think he had any. I know better, and so does he when he remembers the past. I will say this for him, however, that his memory is short when it comes to recalling the disagreeable things in our married life.

Indeed, after reading over some of the things he has said about me, I am inclined to think he has given the impression to the general reader that his wife is almost an angel, without faults, and that he is the one who is most to blame if anything goes wrong in our family.

I want to assure the reader of this confession, for that is what this statement really is, that the Wife of the Mere Man is far from an angel, and that at times she is quite sure she is a Problem, to her Husband and her children and her friends. And I think you will agree with her after listening to this plain account.

Starting out with the usual assumption that men don't understand women, and women don't understand men, I think they know enough about each other to live together peaceably and miss the tragedy of separation if certain conditions are observed by each. It frightens me, when I think back over the years of our married life, to see how more than once we might have gone over the brink into disaster, as so many others have. The one thing that has always saved us, of course, has been the real love each of us has had for the other. It was a love that was based on mutual respect and friendship and companionship. Otherwise we would have run the risk of breaking the most sacred tie that men and women make when they promise to live together in the home life.

WE BEGAN our married life very happily. When the children came they were welcomed as gifts of God. They are beautiful children, and we believe they are growing up to be useful, happy and worthwhile.

But as I look back over some of the years, I think a part of the problem I have been for my husband has centered about the children and their training. I was brought up to be very strict in my religious life. My husband is in many ways inclined to be easy-going when it comes to forms and ceremonies. But these things have always meant a great deal to me, and I have, I am quite ready to confess, made too much of them. This has gradually led to a drawing away from a common sympathy in religious matters which has been a real source of sorrow to me. I am not stating this as a fault on my part, but simply as one of the things in our married life where we have not walked hand in hand.

I think I can truly say that I have seldom given my husband any trouble over money matters, as he has told you, and we have a systematic and workable financial plan for the household of which we are somewhat proud; and inasmuch as it works practically and saves a lot of friction, we miss those breakers into which so many families go shipwreck. Only I think it was true that in the first few years of our married life I did worry my husband a good deal, because I did not know much about his business affairs, and supposed he was making more money than he really was, and I talked a good deal to him about a better house for the children's sake, and said a good deal about new furniture and things of that sort, because although I was brought up very strictly in a religious way, I was also born with a great desire for costly things.

I lived for years, however, with a humiliating sense when it came to the thought of asking my husband for money direct, and seldom did it. I brooded over it a good deal, and many times during that period, when he thought I was moody and reserved, without reason, and he needed cheering up on account of business reverses, I was secretly going over in my mind his injustice and niggardliness in the way he kept his business matters from me, and most of all in the small way he doled out a few dollars now and then to me in a condescending way, as if I had not earned it, but must have a little for "pin money."

I THINK it was this habit more than any other that led me after a while into a habit of "nagging." I never liked that word, but it is in the dictionary, and it describes exactly, as no other word does, the thing that I did that made more problem than any other for my home.

The other day I was reading the account of the divorce proceedings in our district court. We have the reputation, I am sorry to say, in our part of the United States, of having more divorces to the number of married people than any other county in the state. And the reason given in the account I was reading, as stated by the judge of the court was "Peevish spouses, and nagging wives!"

It brought me up, to use my husband's term, with a "short turn and a square hitch."

And also with a bound of something like terror in my heart as I recalled a scene that very morning, at the breakfast-table, like this:

Family seated as usual. Father and mother opposite each other at the round table. The oldest boy at his father's right. The younger boy at my left. The girl at her father's left. The girl said grace in the old Moravian form,

"For these and all thy gifts of love
We give Thee thanks and praise,
Look down our Father from above,
And bless us all our days."

THEN we said the Lord's Prayer together, and almost immediately I began:

To the younger boy: "Go back to your room and put on a clean collar. How often have I told you never to come to the table with a dirty collar."

The younger boy, getting up sullenly: "I couldn't find any. I think they are in the laundry."

"Of course you have some. You don't look. Or you don't put them in the drawer where I tell you to."

Husband opposite says, with a worried look: "Oh, Mary, let the boy eat his breakfast. The collar isn't dirty enough to notice. I don't see but what it is clean."

"That's because you never notice anything. Go up to your room and don't come back without a clean collar."

A moment's silence as the boy goes up-stairs and we hear him pulling his room to pieces hunting for collar."

Wife to Husband, who has been eating hastily, and as if it was a task to be gone through somehow:

"I suppose you are going out to play golf as usual this afternoon. You never think of MY happiness. Cooped up here all day. No change, no variety. Nothing but housework all the time."

The Mere Man, talking back: "Well, what do men have to do all the time but work. Women don't know what work and worry are. We need a little recreation once in a while to earn the money you women spend."

"And precious little you men give us to spend." (That shuts up the Mere Man.) "Well, you did find a collar, didn't you?" (This to the boy who comes back flushed and rebellious, and sits down to finish his cold toast.)

To the Husband, who is wiping his mouth, preparatory to leaving the table: "I wish you wouldn't get egg all over the napkin. I don't see why you never can learn to use your napkin properly."

"I don't either," Husband says, trying to be funny. "I had the nap on me brushed the wrong way when I was a boy."

THE girl looks worried and says, "Don't worry, Mother. You're tired out with the heat."

"No, I'm not. I'm tired out with your father's careless habits. They drive me distracted."

"They'll drive me to drink," Husband says getting reckless.

"Well, I suppose you are going out to golf as usual this afternoon."

"Yes, I am. Don't be unreasonable, Mary. I need the exercise. And you won't miss me."

"Well, all I can say is that men are a selfish lot. And you don't mean to say you are going to wear that old hat down town! It is a positive disgrace."

"I can't find the other one."

"No, you can't find anything. You're as bad as a child."

"Good-bye, Mary, if I don't see you again!" Husband goes off, trying to be funny again, but making a dismal failure of it as I do not respond to his humor.

Then I hear the Older Boy, who has kept silence all through the meal, say to the girl, out in the hall, as they put on their things to go to school: "I wish mother wouldn't spoil breakfast every morning by nagging father so. I wonder why she does it."

"I don't think she is well," the girl says in gentle apology for me.

"But it isn't fair," the boy protests as they go out. "Meal-times ought to be happy times. Instead of that, ours have come to be almost torture. I don't see why mother wants to act so, nagging all the time."

THERE it was! That dreadful word, "nagging!" The cause of more divorces than any other one thing, according to the district court judge! "Nagging!" And I was doing it! Making meal-times a torture! Driving a good if sometimes careless Husband to drink! Even if he did say it, not meaning it. What was I coming to?

I sat there thinking over all the breakfasts I had "spoiled" for the family, of all the times I had greeted my tired husband at the end of the day with a "peevish" manner and a "nagging" fling that had driven him up to his den or out to the Club, and I sat there in front of the day's work in my home with a feeling of terror in my heart.

"If I don't see you again!" Those were my husband's words as he left me. Of course he did not mean it. But what if the time should come when he would! How long would any Mere Man, not an angel, stand the "nagging" wife! The Mere Man! MY Man! The only man I had ever loved and to whom I had committed all that is dear to woman, kind, true, honest, hard-working, without bad habits which many men have, worried over business affairs, needing a little recreation now and then, living, as I well knew, for no other purpose than to give me and the children a happy and comfortable home!

And here I was, "nagging" him, venting my ill-humor on the best and dearest, and doing it in the very presence of the children dragging the skeleton out of the closet, and scattering its bones around the breakfast-table! Horrible! I remember how I felt that day in my revulsion over the habit I had acquired, and vowed with large and emphatic searching of my heart that never again would I offend the family circle by "nagging"—at least not at the breakfast-table.

BUT, bless us, you may be sure I did not cure myself that quickly. I remember that when my husband came home that evening, I was ready to cast myself into his arms and ask his forgiveness, but do you know what held me back? He had actually forgotten all about the scene at the breakfast-table and greeted me with a great shout as he came in: "Well, what do you think Mary! I made Number Seven in ONE! Just hit the ball once and she rolled into the cup just like a marble! ONE! Think of that, sweetheart! Never been done before on Seven in the history of the Club! Whoopee! Well, what do you think of that! ONE!"

He was so pleased and taken up with the wonderful thing that had happened that I could not find any opening for a solemn confession of wrong-doing. Besides I do not understand the game of golf and do not see why it is any great thing to get excited over just to knock a ball into a hole. But he couldn't have been more excited and pleased if he had made ten thousand dollars in one day.

But when I did find a fitting time to tell him how I felt, and ask him to pardon me for the habit, he made light of it. And when I asked him if he ever thought of leaving home and never coming back again, he said that he had sometimes given it a thought, but he never liked the pie at the restaurant and didn't think he could stand it for a regular thing!

OF COURSE I have not named over all the things that have made me a Problem to my Husband and my home. There are many things no doubt, that enter into the history of every family to make tragedy or comedy or experience that either shatters the beautiful structure of Home, or builds it up. I have only hinted at one or two things in my own case.

Of one thing I am certain, and that is that Husband and I have not been guilty of the sin that so many have committed, in being untrue to each other. One of my school-girl friends wrote me a few days ago one of those heart-breaking letters that come in a lifetime, telling of the "other" woman who had wrecked her home and happiness. After reading it, I laid the letter in my lap, and my heart went out in a prayer for mercy for her and her children, and when I could not help thanking the good God that He had spared me that horror, in giving me a husband who was, with all his faults, a true and loving companion.

And as we journey on together, I am beginning to learn that while my husband is not perfect, and while he is not an angel, and while there may be many other men more learned and better looking, and more careful about how they use their napkins at the table, as far as my husband goes, I ought to be grateful, for he knows how to forget and forgive and bear and forbear, and I do not care to exchange with any other person I know. For I am a very happy Wife living even with a Mere Man—and what more need I say to you?

The grave totem of the chief of the Bear clan

THAT any of Uncle Sam's people could, in this enlightened age, believe in witches and subject those accused of such practices to punishment by torture, is difficult to believe; but such customs prevail today in parts of Alaska, despite the efforts of the missionaries and the civilizing influence of other white people.

Though the superstitions and weird beliefs vary slightly in different localities of Alaska, fundamentally they are the same, and the practice of witchcraft among the natives is considered the most deadly of sins.

In the Bering River district, where the facts for this article were gathered, a native family, after experiencing a series of misfortunes, decides that some one possessed of an evil spirit, is bewitching them. Either a man or a woman may be a witch, and the manner in which they are believed to cast their spells is especially gruesome.

The sorcerer obtains a bit of cloth from some garment which his prospective victim has worn next the skin. At the darkest hour of the night he creeps into a cemetery and digs down into a grave until the body or skeleton lying therein is exposed—an easy matter in most northern burial-places where the dead are left near the surface.

The witch can direct his black art to any portion of his victim's anatomy merely by the placing of the bit of cloth, the natives believe. Should he desire accident or disease to a hand, he places the fabric in the fingers of the corpse. Should he prefer the loss of mind, the cloth goes over the skull; and to cause death the cloth is laid over the heart.

After the grave is covered again, it is believed that the spell begins to work, and as the bit of cloth rots slowly away, the victim manifests whatever misfortune the enchanter has willed. There is but one way in which the doomed one can avoid his fate: the malefactor must be discovered and made to unearth the cloth before it has entirely decomposed. Hence comes the witch-doctor, who used to be held in such honor and reverence by the tribes of the North.

EDWARD JOHNS, a dealer in furs, who, having lived in Alaska nearly thirty years, is an authority on the manners and customs of the Thlingets, tells of an interesting experience he once had in the village of Yakutat. As it had been a fine summer the natives had made many canoes, and one old Indian of influence, whom the white men called Ned, had completed four himself. The constant friction caused by the handle of the curved knife used in hewing had bruised his hand so that blood-poisoning set in, and in spite of all the remedies known to the tribe and to the white men at the trading-post, the hand refused to heal. Finally Ned declared that some enemy had "witched" him; and, being a rich man, he sent to a neighboring village for a noted witch-doctor who lived there.

The witch-doctor was a magnificent looking brute, well over six feet tall, which is an unusual height among the Thlingets. His hair, in accordance with the custom for witch-doctors, had never been cut, and in addition to his own matted mane, he had attached to his head the hair of half a dozen of his wives who had preceded him into the spirit world.

The doctor heard Ned's story, looked about him for a few days, and after being presented with one hundred and fifty pairs of blankets and a sum of money, he agreed to go into a trance and discover the evil one who had cast the spell on Ned's hand. The place selected for the trance ceremony was the largest and oldest lodge in the village. It was built in the ancient Indian style, with a low platform running around on the inside of the walls, and a primitive fireplace in the hardened earth square in the middle.

Black Magic of the North

Where a Belief in Witchcraft Still Lingers

By FLORANCE SUMMY

The entrance to the lodge was egg-shaped, with an oval door that hung on a peg and slipped into place automatically.

EVERY Indian in the place was summoned to appear on the night appointed, but no white men were allowed to witness the ceremony on pain of death. Mr. Johns tells of his futile scheming in order to be present, but he finally had to content himself with peering through a crack at the back of the building.

The Indians squatted on the platform about the fireplace in absolute silence. The fire burned low and the dim light of the seal-oil torches flickered on the tense, expectant faces. Suddenly the muffled rhythm of the Indian drums broke out and at the same moment from behind a partition at the back, a terrible figure sprang to the center of the room. Stark naked, except for the strings of bones and beads and knives that were wound about him, the witch-doctor stepped with grotesque movements about the dying fire, his eyes gleaming in his painted face, his matted hair flying.

With increasing energy he continued his slinking, fantastic dance, until perspiration fell in streams from his glistening skin; then as the drum-beats died away, he crouched low over the glowing coals making passes with his hands and rattling the beads and bones with movements of his muscular body. Finally, with a deep groan, he fell over backwards in a trance.

This cataleptic state lasted for thirty minutes, during which time there was not a movement or sound from the waiting tribe. Then without warning came a wild cry. The witch-doctor sprang to his feet, and with a lightning-like gesture pointed to a poor old Indian huddled in a far corner, who was known as Tinook. The witch had been discovered.

THREE powerful Indians sprang upon him, and while the rest of the tribe taunted him, Tinook's hands were tied behind his back. His long hair was made into a loop and his head drawn back as far as possible and tied to his hands. This is known as the "witch tie." The unfortunate man was then bound to a post in the middle of the lodge and sentenced to be left there without food or water until he confessed himself a witch.

"There were but five white men in Yakutat at that time, including the Swedish missionary," said Mr. Johns, "and the Indians in and about the village numbered over a thousand, so we were powerless to attempt the release of the wretched Tinook. We tried to smuggle food and water to him, but without success, although we did persuade the guards to free his head. At the end of the ninth day, when Tinook, though almost in a dying condition, still maintained his innocence, one of the white men obtained permission to speak to him alone. He urged the poor old fellow to make a false confession in order to save his life, and gave him a small piece of cloth from one of Ned's shirts. That night Tinook was carried to the graveyard by the missionary. When the two returned, the whole village was assembled on the beach. Tinook stood up before them all, raised his trembling, thin old arm, and cast the bit of cloth into the sea. The ebbing tide took it far out into the dusk, and the spell, according to the Indian belief, was broken.

"Strangely enough," continued Mr. Johns, "Ned's hand healed up after that, but poor Tinook's life was made so miserable that he left on a sealing schooner, and was gone for two years.

"The witch-doctor, in this case, as in many others, was very shrewd in his selection of a witch. Tinook was old and with few friends, but he was possessed of a wife. She was a young and handsome squaw for whom he had paid two sea-otter skins when she was but five years old. Ned had two wives already, but shortly after the departure of Tinook on the sealing schooner, Mrs. Tinook went to live in Ned's lodge as the favorite wife of that old rascal."

The tribe did not always send for a witch-doctor to locate evil ones, according to Mr. Johns. At times, when the Indians were on one of their periodical sprees and full of the fiery native brew called "hootch," their favorite amusement seemed to be the selecting and torturing of witches.

THERE used to be a lonely graveyard on the Bering River many miles from the Indian village. This burial-place was riddled with re-opened graves and so much fighting and killing resulted because of the natives' belief in the spells cast in this way, that the white men of the country were forced to take action. The store-keeper at the trading-post, who had won the confidence of the tribe by marrying the chief's sister, solved the difficulties by having all the bodies exhumed and cremated. After this was done, he sent his own launch over to the burial-ground and the ashes were placed aboard with great ceremony and brought to the trading-post. They were buried again in a deep hole directly under the windows of the store-keeper's residence, while he made a solemn vow that he would always keep watch and see that no one disturbed the ashes.

A grand potlatche (feast) which lasted a week followed these rites. Quantities of "hootch" were drunk; many yards of calico and great numbers of blankets and numerous canoes were given away by the relatives of the deceased to insure peace for the departed ones; for these Indians believe that the Northern Lights are the spirits of the dead who are restlessly hovering overhead awaiting the time when their relatives on earth can give a potlatche to secure their repose.

It was in 1898 that the government was appealed to to put an end, if possible, to the trouble caused by the faith in witch-doctors and the fear of witches. The capital at that time was at Sitka, and the officials decided they would first prove to the Indians that the witch-doctor has no power. A notorious member of this profession was arrested and confined in the jail. According to belief, all the power of the witch-doctors centered in their long hair, so the word was sent out among the tribes that on a certain day the doctor would be taken out in front of the barracks and shorn of his locks.

The Indians, muttering angry threats, gathered from all parts of the country, and as the officials expected an uprising, the appointed day found all the soldiers at the barracks fully armed and lined up on the parade-ground. A chair was placed in the middle of the square, and the witch-doctor, arrayed in all the grotesque finery of his profession, took his seat and defiantly shook back his long hair. He made a speech telling the white men what every Indian already firmly believed, that the first man to cut a lock of his hair would fall dead. While the Indians waited in perfect confidence for this event to take place, the Captain of the marines laughingly took up the shears and said if such were the case he would have the first cut.

A hush fell on the assemblage. The Captain lifted a black mass and slowly severed it from the doctor's head. He held it up, waiting a moment and then there burst from the disillusioned tribes a long, wonderingly disappointed "Ah-a-a-ah!" The doctor was turned over to the fort barber who cut the remainder of the hair, ran the clippers over it, and then to show how little the white men regarded witch-doctors, he painted the bare pate a brilliant crimson.

This did much to banish the native faith in the power of the witch-doctor, but the belief in evil magic continues among them to this date.

ONLY two years ago a double tragedy, with witchcraft as its foundation, took place at the Indian village of Chilcat on the Bering River. For Alaska, this section is thickly settled by white people, and nearly all the Indians are educated. The head man of the village, John Black, had up to the time of the tragedy, been considered one of the most enlightened Indians in the North. He owns a fine home, has his own launch and can read, write and figure as well as many of his white neighbors. John Black's wife, Klidart, had been ailing for many months with that scourge of the Northern Indian, consumption. As everything the white doctor and the natives could do failed to restore her health, she died.

An old Indian wood-carving representing the torturing of a witch by pulling her hair out by the roots

John Black and Klidart had an adopted child, a queer little fellow, whom everyone called "The Wild Boy," because of his spells of wandering off into the woods for days at a time with no food and only two wolf-dogs for companions.

After Klidart's death the Wild Boy returned from one of his forest journeyings and told the natives that his foster-mother had been bewitched. At the time John Black's brother and another young Indian named Jacklo, were in love with the same girl. It was in October, after the fishing season had closed, and there was little to do and much drinking of "hootch." It finally came to the ears of the white people that Jacklo was accused of being a witch and that the Wild Boy claimed to have seen Jacklo feeding his foster-mother the ground-up hair of a dead squaw, just before her death, and that later on, he had seen Jacklo burying something in the graveyard at night.

The white people smiled over this fantastic tale, little dreaming that the natives of this day would give credence to a child's nonsense. It developed afterwards, however, that Jacklo, coming home from hunting one rainy October night, was set upon by John Black's brother and other natives. They insisted on his giving himself up to suffer the witch's punishment—starvation—for the crime of using black magic on Klidart. When they attempted to tie him, Jacklo, who was a powerful Indian, fought his way through them. Shots were fired and the brother of John Black fell dead. The next morning the rain-soaked body of Jacklo was found lying face down on the beach with several bullet holes in his chest.

Investigation by the local authorities revealed little, as the natives simply stated that Jacklo was a witch. The bodies of John Black's brother and Jacklo were, strange to say, buried in the same grave. Today a white picket fence surrounds the double grave, but while a marble slab "all same white man" distinguishes

A totem over the grave of a chief's son

Black's portion of it, directly along side is stuck a rude piece of drift-wood which marks the resting-place of the unfortunate Jacklo.

JUST previous to this last incident an old squaw was tortured for days before the authorities heard of it. There had been a series of deaths in the village, and the old woman, who was visiting from another tribe, was accused of being the cause of the misfortunes. She was tied with the witch tie, and her hair was pulled out by the roots according to a method in vogue among the natives. As a final touch to the punishment the old woman's body was beaten with a spiky bush called "devil-club," until lacerated by the sharp thorns! She was then dipped repeatedly into the salt water. She stoutly maintained her innocence, however, and was rescued from her tormentors, who were forced to pay a sum of money to her people as damages.

The missionaries are doing everything in their power to free the people from such superstitions and to let in the light, but it is a difficult task to eradicate beliefs which have been handed down from generation to generation for many centuries. Even those who long have been in contact with the white man, who have attended the white man's schools and who have adopted his ways of life in great part, so that they would seem to have passed beyond such primitive modes of thought, are unable to shake off the lurking fears of their people.

And so it is that with memories of the mission-school days only a few years distant, the little Indian mother, caught out after night-fall, will hasten along, glancing fearfully at the Northern Lights that play above her native mountains. She blows out quick breaths towards the heavens to ward off any evil the bad spirits may wish her, and clasps tightly to her breast the little brown baby laced snugly onto his small seal-skin crib-board, from which dangles a "devil-charm." This is a hollow disk made of woven spruce roots, inside of which rattle tiny stones or shot, to keep away the black magic of lurking witches.

An Investment in Americanism

HE WAS just an Italian cobbler, thumping way at the crippled shoes of Americans, in his stuffy, smelly little shop around the corner on the alley. Schoolboys scuffed in and out in quest of new half-soles to wear out sliding; and busy fathers sidled in with queer, hurried grunts, to collect the family cobbling and pay the bills. Sometimes Gugliami whistled and hummed snatches of tunes as he hammered and stitched away from early morning until late evening; for he was glad to earn macaroni and rent and American clothes for the half-dozen Perricotis whom he sheltered in a basement in the South End—"dagos," the American children stigmatized them.

But this was not what was troubling Gugliami on the particular morning when I found him songless and whistleless, face overcast and eyes desperate. He was not worrying that he, also, was only a "dago," a kind of necessary evil endured by the community, because shoes would wear out, and because American men no longer stooped so low as cobbling shoes. I had often stopped a moment to chat with him; he seemed so wistfully eager to have a word with some American, beyond the curt monosyllabic and hyphenated: "Half-sole, heel, patch, how much? Umph!" He tried so pathetically to smile when I ventured my uncertain "Bon Giorno!" but I could see there was no smile in his usually merry heart.

"Too mucha toothache?" I said interrogatively, placing my hand over my jaw by way of reinforcing my pidgin-English.

He shook his head sadly and heaved a sigh. "Bad luck?" I tried again; "Not enough work; people no gooda pay?"

"Pay alla right," he reassured me; "too mucha work. Meester, I trouble my boy."

Ah, that was coming close to a father's heart. I had just settled with the friendly policeman for a street lamp that my own boy's ball had broken. So I nodded encouragingly and put my hand on his shoulder; for was he not, after all, just a fellow man, an American in the making?

"What about the boy?" I wanted to know. I really did; that boy was going to be a voter along with mine.

"Dissa way, meester," he tried to explain, gesticulating with his hammer with a sweep that threatened my eye-glasses. "Oldest boy, Thomasio, he not mean bad—but not can understand school, and heem play de hook, one time, two time, t'ree time. Dissa morn' polis say me mus' come court—no, no, no! boy heem no steal; no rest; but judge mus' send heem p'rental school, an' wanna speak me how much mon'."

HE SIGHED again, a helpless sort of sigh, his hammer poised in one hand and pegging awl in the other. I partly visioned the situation and

It Gives the Italian Cobbler a New Idea of Our Country

By JOHN F. COWAN

thought I saw an easy way to help. "And you have not the money?" I asked with a reassuring smile.

"No, no, no! I gotta de mon; but I no gotta de speak Anglice. I not understand judge. Mebbe he queek mad; say 'Get outa here! Ten days.'"

I stood helpless and dumfounded. It was an entirely unexpected angle of the matter. "B-but," I gasped as I saw the overwhelmingness of such a situation to an alien to whom the English of the judge would be jargon, but who was sensitive to the quick about displaying his ignorance; "see here," I blurted out; "why don't you take some friend with you who speaks better English? See the Italian consul."

"I speak Tony, the padrone. He say, 'Five dol.' Alla mon' I mus' pay keep boy p'rental school. Whatta do? Fiva dol not can."

Another angle! It was not money the man needed.

It was not friends of the kind whose services could be bought, to help him untangle the riddle of the judge's demands; it was friendship of another sort—something to bolster up his confidence and give him a boost along the way of Americanism. But—half a day from the office, in such a trifling matter that a minute ought to clear up!

Something made me see myself in his place—a stranger in Naples, my son in trouble with the police, no American consul at hand, no powerful American friend who spoke good Italian?

"Gugliami," I said, taking the plunge while my courage was good, "if an American friend should go to speak to the judge for you—if I could go—"

Before I could finish he seized my hand and kissed it. "You go? No—oh, too mucha good! Too mucha kind! Plenty trouble! The saints will reward you."

"Yes," I assured him, swallowing hard to keep down a grudging pang at the prospect of all that time taken from my crowding office tasks. "Yes; get ready, Gugliami, and we will go. This summons says nine o'clock."

IT WAS a trembling yet trustful little Italian cobbler whom I led into the big, solemn court-room. He almost froze fast to me as we approached the bench. The dreaded judge of the juvenile court who looked like an ogre to him, was a neighbor of mine, and the story was soon told and explained to the anxious father. The boy, too, was taken into our counsels, and soon the whole tangle was straightened out. America was not some powerful, despotic, ruthless juggernaut bent on crushing the ignorant and helpless; but a big, just, kindly, brotherly nation that wanted to help alien fathers like him to make the best of their boys.

Thomasio had got beyond the control of the hard-working, puzzled little man, and had "played de hook" from school once too often. A year under the firm guidance of the paternal school would cure him of some of the false notions of freedom in America that he had absorbed from the street gang.

So, for my begrudged half-day from a busy week, I had the satisfaction of leading out of the court-room a father whose face was wreathed with happy smiles, and who was babbling at me as he went back to his cobbling:

"You too mucha gooda fren'. American before I hate. Not understand America. Now understand. T'anka gooda fren'. American alla same saint."

After all, it was a small investment to bring forth such a return—not Gugliami's thankful praises; but an understanding mind that was healed of bitterness and resentment and despair, of realizing the dreams of democracy that had brought him to this country. Just a small investment of personal friendship; that was all.

The Old Mother

By J. CORSON MILLER

SHE sits in the dim-lit chimney-corner,
Where a sleepy tea-kettle moans and sings;
While her knitting-sticks are tenderly twining
The odds and ends of remembered things.

A cat toys playfully there at her foot-scool,
With a ball of worsted as white as her hair,
So carefully combed away from the forehead,
The dear, white brow, as pure as a prayer.

Life roughened her hands in the labor of loving,
Those hands that move so busily still,
As over them falls, like a benediction,
The sunset's kiss from the distant hill.

The old mother knows what the clock is saying,
Each friendly picture speaks from the wall;
And, lo, with twilight, the ghosts come flitting,
For Dad and the children have heard her call.

She sits in the dim-lit chimney-corner,
Where a sleepy tea-kettle moans and sings;
While her knitting-sticks are tenderly twining
The odds and ends of remembered things.

Mark sat down upon the edge of the bed. His chin lifted and sharpened with sudden purposefulness

CHAPTER I

THE Rev. Mark Newell took his wife's faded blue gingham apron from its hook behind the kitchen door and tied it awkwardly about his expansive, vestless waist.

It was Monday morning. The clock on the shelf over the sink was striking its last clanging note of nine. Two chairs were pushed away from the oilcloth covered table that stood between the windows, two empty plates and two drained milk glasses spoke mutely of hurried breakfasts and subsequent disorderly retreat. Through the doorway, which stood wide open to the fragrant June morning, the minister caught a glimpse of a matronly figure spreading white garments upon the parsonage green that joined that of the church-yard next door. He rolled up the sleeves of his striped shirt and attacked the dishes. Mark Newell hated washing dishes. But the sexton's wife couldn't do everything. The more he could do to help, the more time she would have to devote to Nellie and the ba—Nellie and the Twins!

"Twins!" he whispered to his incredulous heart. "Twins!" he reiterated, striving to rivet the amazing fact into his stunned consciousness. "Last night two children—this morning four! Four children to feed and clothe and educate. Four children to lead, sure-footedly, along that narrow upward, rock-bound path. Four children!" He faced the sobering reality with a sinking heart.

To the minister it seemed a year since the night before when Nellie had hung her apron behind the door and turned, patiently, to examine his coat and inspect his handkerchief. He recalled vividly now, after the interminable night what had entirely escaped him then—the weary sag of her shoulders, the cramped smile upon her dauntless lips, the wistfulness with which she followed him to the front door. He remembered now, with a stab of guilt, that she had swayed through the narrow doorway that led from the kitchen into the tiny hall; that she had grasped at the dingy old chenille portiers that always seemed to apologize to the front of the house for bringing the kitchen so intimately into the family, and that she had kissed him rather hurriedly at the door and turned immediately toward the scarred, uncarpeted stairs.

NELLIE was up-stairs now. She would remain up-stairs in the front bedroom just off his study, so long as they could afford to pay the sexton's wife. A shadow fell upon Mark Newell's face. He tossed back a lock of thick, graying hair that had fallen over his high, placid brow, and plunged his hands into warm suds.

When the dishes were finished, Mark took the milk and butter to the cellar. How had Nellie ever managed those cellar stairs so many times a day! Well, next summer they would surely have a refrigerator.

He returned to the kitchen and whisked the crumbs from the bread-plate still standing upon the table. There was never anything but crumbs left on the bread-plate. He draped the dish-cloth in a sodden string over the dish-pan and began sweeping the floor.

How was Nellie ever going to manage with two babies? How could she possibly duplicate each tender ministration? How would her body—frail since the grief of little Matthew's death—satisfy two hungry, nuzzling little mouths? He didn't know. And yet he did know some way, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that she would do it. He had read that in her face an hour before when she had whispered, drowsily blissful, that God had sent Matthew back to her and with him the sister they had always wanted.

For a few thoughtful moments the minister paced back and forth through the shabby little hall, with its worn runner and dilapidated hat-rack, cumbered with coats and caps and umbrellas. Suddenly he remembered his apron, which, although he did not know it, was ludicrously incongruous against the fine spirituality of his rather massive, masculine face. The neighbors would soon be coming in. He fell to bringing a semblance of order out of a chaos of misplaced books and papers in the small living-room.

As he worked, a puzzled smile overspread his countenance. What would folks say? Friends would begin to tip-toe to the door as soon as the friendly, intimate little town awoke to the amazing news. He visualized the women, bare-headed, some stiffly aproned, with a package in their hands or something hidden beneath a snowy napkin. He knew that the flicker of a smile would lie far back in their eyes; knew also that a flame of warmth would sweep toward him from their loyal hearts. There were fine folks in Centreville; fine folks.

IN HIS haste to make ready for probable visitors, he snatched a handkerchief from his pocket and flicked the dust from the library table in the center of the room. Never until that moment had he realized the possibilities of utter destruction that reposed in successive sets of small sticky fingers, venturesome toes and nibbling teeth. Nellie had managed, somehow or other, to hide most of those scars. Well, it wouldn't be long now before they could have a new table—and some new chairs. Not immediately, of course, but before long. Something would turn up. One never knew what a day would bring forth. Yesterday, for example, he had never so much as dreamed of twins—which reminded him of Nellie.

He paused on the stair-landing to listen for significant sounds from the room above. None came. The quiet of the first floor seemed to merge there with the stillness which descended from above, distilling a sense of peace which permeated every crevice of the little house. He crept silently upward to his study and from the open door gazed into the bedroom.

Nellie was sleeping profoundly. Her blond hair streamed backward in silken undulations over a pillow scarcely less white than the face that pressed

The Extra Baby

A Charming Two-Part Story

By CORINNE UPDEGRAFF WELLS

Illustrated by William C. McNulty

against it. Her straight, dark lashes rested lightly upon cheeks drained of color, but still rounded with the firm, oval contour of unexhausted youth. Her dark brows, which contrasted so sharply with her light hair, were smoothly serene. Upon her countenance there lingered the afterglow of a smile. Within the curve of her arched arm, which emerged, white and rounding, from a primly decorous nightgown, two bundles nestled. In that moment Mark Newell realized the absolute inevitability of twins! His brows contracted anxiously. What could be the meaning of that extra baby?

Tip-toeing to the bedside, he bent close to the tiny faces. Feature was like feature, contour identical with contour, coloring matched coloring. Pauline, however, was a miniature of Paul. There was an intangible fineness and sweetness about her, lacking in the more sturdy countenance of the boy, just a breath of difference as between the feel of silk and fine linen or the note of a robin and the song of a lark.

THE ringing of the doorbell summoned him down-stairs. At the front door stood an unemotional middle-aged couple from a neighboring village. They wished to be married. After the ceremony was over the minister pocketed the fee with a prayer of gratitude and bounded up the stairs. Every extra dollar meant additional rest for Nellie.

This time his wife was awake. He found her, raised slightly upon her elbow, trying to quiet the twins, who were weeping together in a maddening duet. When Mark entered, she fell back upon her pillow. Tears of weakness gathered beneath her half-closed eyes. The nurse entered hastily and took the babies to an adjoining room. Mark patted Nellie's shoulder, straightened her pillows and, moving to the window, raised the drawn shades to the bright morning sunlight. A sob shivered through the silence.

"Mark dear," came a voice, struggling with the hysteria of exhaustion, "please—I can't b-bear any more light!" She covered her eyes with tightly pressed fingers. "I can't stand this awful red wall-paper another minute!"

He bent over her comfortingly. Her arms flew upward and fastened tightly about his neck.

"If I have to lie here days and days and look at this paper—" She bit back her sobs until her body quivered. "It's silly and I'm so ashamed, Mark—but I can't breathe! It smothers me. I—I can feel it—even in the dark. It's so red and so hot and so stifling!"

Mark sat down upon the edge of the bed. His chin lifted and sharpened with sudden purposefulness.

"Listen, Nellie," he soothed. "You shall have new wall-paper! You've stood this red nightmare long enough. I've just had a wedding—while you were asleep." He drew a folded bill from his pocket. "We'll put this five dollars away in the old sugar-bowl. No matter what happens, we won't touch it for anything but wall-paper. I'll take this off myself. The bare wall will be better than this!" He stabbed the hideous red scrolls with defiant eyes.

Nellie blotted her tears with the mended sleeve of her nightgown. Her lips were red and quivering. "But what will the Ladies' Aid say?" she questioned dubiously. "It's almost new and it's good for years and years. If only the committee had asked me—Of course, I'm awfully foolish, dear—maybe, if I try—"

Mark clasped her in his arms, savagely protecting. "Never mind the Ladies' Aid!" He felt her thrill to the masculinity that vibrated through his deep-toned voice. "We'll pay for it ourselves—so what can they say?"

"But the money, Mark, where will we get the money?"

He set his jaw resolutely. "Well, I guess five dollars will buy paper. If we can't get enough together soon to hire a paper-hanger, I'll put it on myself! I'll paint the walls; I'll—I'll do something!"

Nellie relaxed slowly into the pillows.

MARK went into his study and closed the door. Although it was his day of rest, he began preparations for writing his Sunday morning sermon. Every hour saved would mean that much more time for Nellie. But his sermon went badly. He felt suddenly bereft of spirituality, submerged in a tremendous overpowering wave of materialism. Punctuating his phrases were two little faces, two tiny mouths, four outstretched hands. His train of thought was crisscrossed with doubts and questions. Finally, he leaned back in his chair and calmly faced the fact that they couldn't possibly afford that extra baby.

However, since the baby was an adorable, irrefutable human fact, it had to be afforded. His inelastic salary, which was all the little church could afford to pay, must be stretched to include it. "O God," he cried in the bitterness of his heart, "why must I be a little man in a little church!" And for a long time he sat motionless, staring with eyes that did not see, at a black-and-silver motif over his desk which read—

"Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Finally a smile, born of his meditations, disburied the gloom of his countenance. It was extremely simple after all! He would merely take enough out of his own mouth to feed the extra baby. He ate too much anyway. And he would take enough off his own back to clothe its rosy little body. It was all foolishness, he decided, to feel that just because he was a minister, he must be dressed up all the time. It would be a kind of game he could beat himself at a hundred times a day—if only Nellie didn't notice. The difficulty was that Nellie always noticed.

He leaned further back in his chair, rested his finely shaped head upon his upturned palms and stared at the ceiling. In meditation he began to trim unnecessary margins from his own life. It was almost startling to find so many things he could do without—things which even Nellie wouldn't notice. There was butter, for example. A grown man didn't need butter. Butter only made him eat more bread. And there was coffee. He was the only member of the family who drank coffee. The mere thought of giving up coffee made him wince. Still, eliminating that three times a day—if he could—meant a considerable saving in sugar and milk. At least, he would try.

As for other unnecessary things, it would be only a matter of forming an abstemious habit. It wouldn't be long until he could, with a wave of his hand, refuse the extra chop, the second helping, the last spoonful that meant comfortable repletion. But, he reminded himself with a chuckle, the two older boys would probably gobble up everything he left. However, they would not always be insatiate. Surely, they would be filled up by the time there was a high-chair at his other elbow.

MARK strolled to the window and stood with his hands thrust deeply into his pockets, gazing down into the quiet street flanked on either side by unpretentious old-fashioned houses. Presently his eyes narrowed into humorous twinkles. He strode through the door that connected bedroom and study.

"Say, Nell," he began abruptly. "What did you do with that old suit—the one with the seat of the pants worn through?"

"It's in the garret, dear. I'm saving it to piece into a quilt. Why?"

"Oh, nothing," he answered lightly, "only I'm going to wear it around the house."

"But, Mark!"—she gasped.

"Well," he explained. "I can't see why a builder of character should be any more dressy than a builder of houses. Barring glaze and fringe and no seat, that's rather a good suit, isn't it? What's the matter with wearing overalls and a jumper over it? Good clothes," he added ruefully, "are so expensive. You see," he explained, "when the weather gets warmer, all I'll need will be the overalls. That will leave me a good suit for second best and I won't have to buy a new one this spring."

He bounded toward the garret stairs while her widened eyes were still grasping at the possibilities of the scheme. "That was an easy one to put over," he told himself as he delved into the camphor-scented trunk.

Meanwhile, with eyes closed resolutely against the offending red wall-paper, Nellie lay in the semidarkness and faced the future years. The smell of lilacs and the twittering of birds drifted in through the open window. She lay very still while memory led her back over the aching treadmill of washing and dressing little bodies, of scrubbing and cooking and sewing and patching. As plainly as though they were before her, she beheld the inadequate rooms of the little house, cluttered with toys and nursing-bottles and small garments. Her weak body almost felt the ache of housecleaning, the utter exhaustion of canning and ironing. Her imagination even evoked the odors of eternally simmering kettles of broth and cereal, and, in anticipation, her will stiffened to meet the icy nights, the mumps, the measles, the whooping-cough.

The bundle against her side stirred. A thrill of exultant motherhood throbbed through her veins and lifted her, in spirit, above the sordidness of the immediate years to those green fields that lay just beyond middle age when the children would be grown and there would be neither weariness nor poverty. Nothing mattered for the present, so long as she had her children and Mark—Mark who was the Keeper of a Light, Mark, whose splendid faith she must never allow to become overshadowed by material burdens. "Any way," she exulted, drawing Pauline close, "I'm going to have new wall-paper!"

BUT she didn't have new wall-paper. One evening, when the babies were just a week old, the sacred five dollars in the old sugar-bowl on the top shelf in the pantry, was requisitioned for a new pair of shoes for Luke. It was queer about boys' shoes. One day they were; the next day they were not.

After the lad had thrust the five dollars into his pocket, together with the money they had saved by not having meat for three days, and had gone off whistling down the street, Mark looked at his wife's eyes, which were very bright, and at her mouth, which was very smiling, and said, confidently:

"You won't have to wait long, dear. Something will turn up soon."

And Nellie looked at her husband's hair, which was getting more silvery than she liked to admit, and at his broad, comforting shoulders, which were sagging a bit toward the front, and answered lightly;

"Oh, I don't mind about the wall-paper, Mark dear!"

Mark sauntered into his study and closed the door. "Thank God!" he sighed devoutly.

And in the next room Nellie was resting upon her elbow gazing passionately into space. Beneath the pillow was an unused handkerchief that had been

Continued on page 890

Pastry-Shop Cakes

IT WAS a pastry-shop with a long, shining glass counter covered with rows and rows of trays. Some of the trays were lined with rich black eclairs, and some of the trays were filled with plump golden brown cream-puffs, and some of them were dotted with buttony looking macaroons. There were lady-fingers, piled high in platters. And there were fruit tarts that seemed to be almost lacquered, so shiny they were. And there were proud layer-cakes that fairly oozed mocha filling and candied cherries.

It was a delectable sight, that long shining counter—a delectable sight and an indigestible one! It fairly made the mouth water. And it also made the pocket-book groan—it suggested vague extravagances and indulgences. It was exotic and alluring. And, because the owner of the pastry-shop was quite aware of its allure, he had placed—in the back of his store—a row of neat white tables. And there he served tea and coffee and chocolate with his eclairs and mocha cakes and macaroons.

Many factory girls—young undernourished things who should have been eating hearty food—came to the pastry-shop for their luncheon. Little clerks dropped hurriedly in for a cream puff and a cup of tea at noon-time. They thronged the place, and their voices chattered ceaselessly about dresses and hats and "gentlemen friends" while their eyes roamed eagerly over the crowded counter. One could not help comparing them to moths—slim, bright-winged, darting things—moths that drifted lightly, with each movement bringing their fragile bodies nearer and nearer to the candle-flame. But that—that is a different story!

I WAS passing by the pastry-shop one day, at about one o'clock, on my way back to the office. I was walking briskly with the Sensible Girl—who is really so pretty that folk scarcely expect her to be so evenly balanced as she is. I was walking briskly, but something about the glitter of the place, something about the busy hum of conversation that seemed to surround it, brought me to a stop in front of its broad, polished window. And as I glanced in I was able to understand why so many girls lunched there. For the freshness of the frostings, and the pretty colorings, and the dainty froth of each separate Charlotte Russe was a distinct invitation.

"I don't believe," I said, thinking aloud, "that I ever saw so many pretty cakes before. Don't they look appetizing and—good?"

The Sensible Girl—whose name, quite appropriately, is Jane—answered me. Her tone seemed just a trifle abrupt and out of patience.

"They look pretty, yes," she answered, "and

There Isn't a One of Them Worth a Slice of Home-Made Bread

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

appetizing, too! But every one of those highly colored confections is just so much—fluff. I wouldn't give one slice of my mother's home-made bread for the lot of them!"

I smiled at Jane's vehemence. And then—though I thoroughly agreed with her—I decided to lead her on a bit.

"Why, dear," I expostulated, "what do you mean by talking that way? How can you think of comparing plain bread with fancy cake?"

The Sensible Girl tossed her head. And the color flared up in her smooth cheeks, making her prettier than ever. And, when she spoke, her voice was even more vehement than it had been.

"Common sense," she said, "ought to tell you the answer!"

I persisted.

"But I don't want common sense to tell me," I argued, "I want you to tell me!"

ALL at once Jane was laughing, good-naturedly. Taking my arm she hurried me past the tempting array in the window—the cakes that crowded each other for first place, upon the counters.

"Come away," she told me, with mock earnestness, "I can see that this place is exerting a dangerous influence over you!" And then—"You know perfectly well what I mean when I compare cake and home-made bread. You're only trying to tease me!"

I admitted to the truth of the accusation.

"But," I added, after I had made my admission, "Go on. I like to hear your way of expressing yourself!"

The Sensible Girl looked at me sharply, to see if I were joking. Having satisfied herself as to my sincerity, she did express herself. As follows:

"Those cakes," she said, making a gesture back in the general direction of the pastry-shop, "looked wonderful. I'll grant that. And awfully good. It made you want to have some—just seeing them on the counter. And yet, more than one piece would have made you ill. And if you ate them meal after meal, day after day, week after week—" she paused expressively. "Well, you'd be a wreck physically, I'm afraid. Pastry-shop confections—pink sugar, and green icing, and jelly, and whipped cream—in too large quantities, would be ruinous to anybody!"

"But," her voice had softened, "but with mother's bread it's very different. Mother bakes great fragrant loaves of it—she browns it to a golden color in a big oven. She mixes the dough from a recipe that's been a family secret for generations. And the result is something really worth while—really nourishing and strength-building."

"Mother's bread—it wouldn't make the showing that those pastry-shop dainties made. But you could eat it and enjoy it at every meal for years. You'd never get tired of it. You'd never get ill from it. You'd never get too much of it!"

MANY things in life are like pastry-shop cakes. So are many people. Attractive and colorful and pretty—sweet to the cultivated taste and pleasant to look at! And yet a trifle difficult to digest and decidedly harmful if taken too often, or in large quantities. You know things like that—and people like that, too.

And as for a mother's sort of bread—its wholesome, pure characteristics are everywhere, too. Not so flashy, perhaps, as the pastry-shop products but with better wearing qualities, by far. I can't help thinking that, in the long run, there are more bread folk and bread things than there are pastry-shop people and ideas.

Friends of mine, keep close to the bread folk and the bread customs. This is the age of fussy things and indigestible things and—often—of unwholesome things. And there are some among us that would call home-made bread unfashionable. But don't you mind what anybody says. Old-fashioned or not, it's good for you. And those things that are good for you are always the best things.

It's good for you—bread. Real baked bread is good for the body, and mental and spiritual bread is good for the mind and for the soul. It's better than all of the prettiness and surface sweetness in the world, because it's made with a sound purpose and firm principles.

Pastry-shops, with their crowded windows and their shining counters, are delectable sights. There's no getting away from that. But there are more delectable sights.

Take, for instance, a smiling woman with kind eyes and a sunny face. And put her in a picture with all clean blue kitchen walls, and shining aluminum pans and pots and kettles. And make her hands busy with firm, pleasant smelling dough that she's kneading. And, under a checkered napkin, put a loaf or two of fragrant home-made bread. And then you'll have a sight that's far more pleasant than the window of any pastry-shop.

The Editorial Forum

DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON
Editor-in-Chief

RAE D. HENKLE
Managing Editor

DR. GEORGE H. SANDISON
Editor Emeritus

The Moral Decline and the Remedy

IT IS a question whether at any time in history, war and its attendant influences have made such havoc with the morality of the nations as is seen today. In our own land, we need to be told the truth about our moral decadence. The wealth, the carnival of extravagance, the mad race after doubtful pleasures, accompanied by the startling decline in morals and in those observances that mark a sober and progressive people, are regarded by many as legacies of the war, which like a foul inundation left its marks of degeneracy on all sides.

Other lands, too, have felt the same influence in varying degree. In the recent Church Congress in England, the Bishop of Guilford told his audience that "the crumbling of public morals, unless arrested, would mean the death-knell of the nation." Another speaker dwelt on the growth of moral depravity and sex perversion since the war. The Bishop of Birmingham, who presided, gave a more cheerful estimate of the moral condition of the country. The need had come for the Church to put itself more definitely into the very heart of national life and demand the observance of the principles of Christian civilization. There, as here, the Church had been almost in despair over its inability to reach the seat of the trouble and deal with it successfully.

In the course of the discussion of public morals, several questions were raised which showed how thorough those English divines had been in their search for cause and effect. There was no cynicism in their treatment of the case. The equal standard for the sexes, they bluntly declared, was "being met by leveling down and not leveling up." Divorce had increased, and many other evils had come with the new freedom. Taken as a whole the discussion was of a nature which would have been inconceivable in earlier days.

Are we here in these United States in any better plight? We, too, hear on every side lamentation over the decline of public morals. We have the same experience with the revolt of the youth of the nation against the principles which their fathers and mothers observed. We have had in the changes of the last few years the rising flood-tide of forbidden pleasures, accelerated by the influence of evil pictures, the wild whirl of extravagances, the weakening of the marriage tie, the augmentation of divorce facilities, the decline of the Family Altar and the gradual sapping of the influence of the home. Never was the Sabbath so widely disregarded, and this despite the earnest efforts of the churches.

This national moral decline calls for heroic treatment. The real and only remedy is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which has the power to check the tide of degeneracy. To our pastors belongs the duty of calling the people back to their true moral and spiritual moorings and of sounding a warning. We commend this course to ministers of all the denominations. Every true Christian man and woman can help in this crusade, which is so vital to all, and especially to the youth of the nation. Here is an opportunity for the Prayer Leagues and for the revivalists to take up the grandest task in their lifetime.

Public Opinion

WE ALL know that there is such a thing, but we do not all know what a power it really is. The fact has been demonstrated lately in very emphatic ways. The proposed railway strike failed to come off because the railway men felt the force of public opinion against them. In their own announcement when they called off the strike, they gave witness to the power of public opinion by saying that they knew the public sympathy was not with them, and the strike could not succeed without it.

But the power of public opinion has been shown in a more wonderful manner in the events that are already history, centering around the Disarmament Conference. I use the word "Disarmament" because that is what the people want, and that is what this conference will lead to in the end. There is no question that the President and Secretary Hughes have listened more to the voice of the people than to the voice of the professional militarist or diplomat. It is a splendid fact that these two men are members of the church, and both of them believe in prayer and are not ashamed to read their Bibles and pray.

On that account they have paid attention to the convictions of the Christian people of the United States. When these men are convinced that 26,000,000 people in this country hate war and want it to stop, that volume of public conscience has tremendous weight with them. They are not men trained in

Call It What It Is!

NOW that everybody is agreed that an offensive war is forevermore out of the question, why don't we officially recognize the status of our military establishment and call it by its right name?

We herewith submit to the President and to the Congress the suggestion that legislation be enacted immediately abolishing the offices of Secretary of War and the War Department and the Secretary of the Navy and the Navy Department. In their stead let there be created the office of Secretary of Defense and a Department of Defense to supersede them and to take over direction of all our military activities—land, sea and air.

With a reduced army and a reduced navy the thought of a little more administrative economy would appeal strongly to the American people. If we still need a certain number of cabinet jobs for the faithful of either party let the surplus place, and the money saved by its abolition, go to a Secretary of Education.

Isn't a Department of Education as important in our scheme of national life, anyway, as both a War and a Navy Department?

the camp or the secret chambers of the diplomat. They are men who have been brought up in the circle of family altars and the atmosphere of the church and the Bible School. And the public opinion of those who have been trained as they have been has had a powerful influence on them.

Thank God, oh, Christian Herald readers, that Christian men are having the lead in these history making deliberations at Washington! Public opinion is a potent force in making history. Let us create all we can of the right kind. In the end it will end war.

The Deadly Banquet

WITH a few exceptions, the leading military delegates to the Peace Parley have been ill a good part of the time since coming to America, due to the excessive banquetting provided by welcoming organizations." Associated Press.

Here is food (pardon the word, but it comes in as pat as butter) for reflection. Behold these doughty warriors who won the war, who met the enemy and it was theirs, who were not afraid of seventy-twos nor machine guns, nor gas, nor dropping bombs, but who now are being mowed down by the deadly banquet. It is a sight to make Mars himself lay down his knife and fork, and surrender unconditionally and emetically.

These invincible warriors whom nothing could terrify, now look over the top (of the table), with fearful glances as they behold the array of destructive forces in no man's land—raw oysters, thick salads, fat and questionable meats, vegetables camouflaged to look like something else, puddings, ices, drinks, hot and cold, all in solid formation ready to make their deadly assault all along the line, and invest (excuse the plain term) the interior defenses of the enemy. Truly the pie is mightier than the sword, as these mighty heroes discover to their sorrow. They

A Fitting Proclamation

AS THIS morning I turned the leaf of the Christian Herald calendar to November, I was deeply impressed with the opening text:

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will towards men." (Luke 2:14.)

At once it came to me: What a fitting text, or motto, to set out in letters of gold on the wall of the great hall in the Pan-American building, in which the Conference on Limitation of Armament meets. A wonderfully impressive and appropriate testimony for Christian America to give to the chosen representatives of the nations of the world, met there to carry out the spirit of this great declaration.

DAVID C. BELL,
Saratoga, Cal.
Nov. 1, 1921.

were impervious to hard-tack and goldfish of the battle-field. They could endure the stern hardship of the forced march and the horrors of the trenches. But they fall back before the banquet, and capitulate to the after-dinner speeches.

It is a most serious situation. For the banquet is an American institution, and no real event in the United States can come off without it. Our guests from overseas must feast before any real business can be done in the Arms Conference.

But let us hope the banquet will not kill them all off before the real business that brought them here is completed. Unless, indeed (and here is a happy thought), we could succeed in getting to the banquets all those foreign delegates who are so military that they will block any move looking towards disarmament, and then, in the name of him who first invented roast pork, let the caterer do his best (or worst). Let the table groan first in anticipation of the groans that will follow. Stack high and spread broad all the indigestibles, and cover the cloth with bombs of gastronomic and unknown perils, and leave the results to an already ruined digestion and a defeated and cowed stomach. Aha! We begin to see some use for the American banquet after all!

But when it comes to the after-dinner speeches, that is another matter. There are some weapons, like poisoned wells, that civilized warfare should not be permitted to use, and the speeches after the banquet only add to the horror of the occasion. Let the banquet do its deadly work. That is enough without adding anything more.

C. M. S.

Is Human Life Lengthening?

RECENT reports from statisticians, insurance actuaries and other sources, record an unusually large proportion of old folks now living, who have already passed far beyond the "allotted span" and are still hale and hearty. Little more than a decade ago the average life was rated several degrees shorter than today. In a single district in New England, the number of those who have passed the eightieth, ninetieth, and some even the one hundredth-year mark, is far beyond what it was a generation ago.

It is well known that there are many of the active and successful business and professional men of our great cities have reached a ripe old age which formerly would have entitled them to retirement and ease. Today, they work with as keen an enjoyment of the busy life as men of fifty. Sixty years ago, Dr. Stephen Smith was the first President of the Health Department of New York City. He was the founder of the American Public Health Association, which has done valuable service in spreading the laws of sanitation and right living. Dr. Smith, whose ninety-ninth birthday will be celebrated in February, has made a lifelong study of longevity, and has written much upon the subject. Well poised, alert and smiling, he is as active as most men not half his years. His rules for attaining old age are few and simple: "Work, and keep out of the easy-chair; don't eat much meat; drink milk; get plenty of sleep, and if you feel like a nap after meals, take it outdoors." He wholly abjures tobacco, tea, coffee and stimulants with a vigor that reminds us of Dr. Parr's famous secret recipe which he left to his heirs, who found it to consist of a single line of solemn warning, which read: "Abstain from all life pills."

How to account for continued activity in old age, which seems to laugh at the idea of a cozy chair near the fire, toward which our grandfathers invariably gravitated after sixty—certainly at seventy—is not an easy matter. Doctors will tell you that it is largely due to increased knowledge of hygienic laws, better food conditions, progress in sanitation. Others will assert that long life is an inheritance. Psychologists will find increased longevity the outcome of temperamental changes which gives ease and energy to both mind and body.

Possibly all of these may be contributory causes. Yet there are instances in which this line of reasoning proves wholly unsatisfactory. God's gift of a ripe old age comes so palpably as a blessing to those who love His service, and whose whole being is attuned to it, that we are more than disposed to believe that in the great majority of cases, if fully investigated, this would be shown to be the true secret of the "length of days." We ourselves have known quite a few fine old patriarchs who had spent themselves in doing good, and to whom the exercise had given an inward joy that had invigorated the limbs, and was reflected in the face, lending it almost the expression of youth. It was surely to such as this that the promise was given: "With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation!"

The World News of the Week

Cut in Freight Rates on Farm Products Is Ordered

THE appeals of the farmers, the group hit first and hardest in the process of deflation, for lower freight rates, have been heeded by the railroads, and the Association of Railroad Executives has decided on a ten per cent. reduction in freight rates on all agricultural products, the first nation-wide cut in freight rates since the period of Federal control. Through a special arrangement with the Interstate Commerce Commission, the usual thirty-day requirement for new rate schedules is waived, and the lower rates become effective at once. The cut applies in all parts of the country, except on traffic moving wholly within the New England district, where the position of the carriers is said to be particularly weak, and the saving to shippers is estimated at $55,000,000 a year.

The railroad officials fixed the period for which the lower rates are to hold at six months, by which time they hope the Federal Railroad Labor Board will have decided the wage cut cases so that additional rate cuts may be made. If wage reductions are denied, they said the new agricultural freight rates would be terminated automatically.

It was stated that the railroads had not yet taken up for consideration the question of lower passenger fares, as it was felt that cuts in freight rates would have a greater influence in stimulating business recovery. But should the Labor Board grant the reduction of $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 annually in wages for which the railroads now are pressing with all their strength, it was believed part of this saving would go to reduce passenger rates.

Income Tax for Rum-Runners

AQUEER sidelight on the "big business" of rum-running comes in the declaration of Frederick J. Kopff, Assistant United States District Attorney in Brooklyn, that more than $50,000,000 is due the Government in 1920 income taxes and penalties from the twenty-five or thirty big bootleggers in New York City. This estimate, enormous as it seems, does not include the taxes and penalties on the undeclared income of hundreds of smaller dealers, and it would be a bold statistician who would attempt an estimate of the total of these illicit transactions.

Several of the cases involving large sums are being investigated, but action has been taken as yet in but one case and in that the officials have demanded that a Brooklyn contractor pay taxes and penalties of $1,635,797 on alleged undeclared income. Reports on four other cases have been forwarded to Washington and it was declared that each involved a sum as large or larger than the one in which the demand has been made.

These actions, it is to be noted, may be settled by the payment of money, and are merely for income-tax frauds.

There is no prosecution for violation of the nation's prohibitory laws. When the rum-running operations are conducted on a scale so gigantic, it's hard for the lay observer to figure out why criminal proceedings against the rum-runners do not result in convictions and heavy sentences, and why the national government should seem to regard the collection of taxes as of more importance than the punishment of bold offenders against the prohibitory enactments.

Methodists Urge Greater Service

LEADERS of the Methodist Episcopal Church have been holding in Detroit a momentous national conference from which they derived fresh enthusiasm and inspiration for a world-wide militant campaign in behalf of Christianity. The list of speakers was a most distinguished one, and all united in a determination to bring about the most extensive religious movement in the history of Methodism.

The belief that in Christianity is to be found the cure for the world's ills, so often expressed at the conference, was well summarized by Bishop Thomas Nicholson, of Chicago, in these words: "What the world needs today is more religion, not more legislation. More religion is needed in Congress, in industries and business and in the home. The labor problem can be settled only by the Christian religion, because satisfaction and contentment are matters of religion."

Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, of Boston, declared the work of the Centenary Movement had merely begun. "The present hour must be a new Calvary where once again we will take up the burden of the Cross and Christianize the world," he said. Bishop McDowell emphasized that the "success of the Church's world campaign rests upon our willingness to surrender ourselves entirely to Christ. We have never had an hour like this; we are 'passing through a bit of destiny.'" President Harding sent a message expressing the heartiest sympathy with the spirit and purpose of the meeting and telling of his own deep interest in the Centenary Movement.

The conference was followed by a meeting of the Council of Boards of Benevolences to apportion funds for each of the boards in carrying out the Church's program.

$4,500,000 for Foreign Missions

DETERMINATION to move forward steadily in all lines of the church's activities was shown in the budget just completed by the Executive Commission of the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly at sessions in Atlantic City. The appropriations total $14,000,000, an increase of $2,000,000 over last year's budget.

The growing interest in foreign missions was emphasized by a grant of $4,500,000 for that work, the largest mission grant in the church's history. It is a million dollars less than Dr. Arthur J. Brown, General Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, had asked for the carrying out of the Board's plans, but represents an increase of $500,000 over the previous year, and will permit the putting of 125 additional missionaries in the field next spring. The church now has 1,600 missionaries enrolled, and finds that the example of Americans in good deeds has so impressed foreign peoples that they are in a more receptive mood than ever before to the Gospel message.

The appropriation for church erection was doubled and the program for the year includes churches, homes and hospitals. The Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare is to receive $20,000 more than last year, but is expected to receive large sums from other sources which will be used in co-operating with prohibition enforcement officials.

Reports of the work of the New Era Movement were most encouraging and Dr. William H. Folkes, general secretary, said 280,000 new communicants could be traced to its influence, and that it was largely responsible for the increase in general income from $5,000,000 a few years ago to more than $12,000,000 last year.

Diplomatic Relations Being Resumed

STEPS are being taken toward the resumption of full diplomatic relations with the German Government, and as a preliminary President Harding has sent to the Senate the nomination of Ellis Loring Dresel to be Charge d'Affaires at Berlin. Mr. Dresel has been the American Commissioner in Berlin and conducted the negotiations for the peace treaty, but previously was without formal diplomatic status. He has organized an Embassy staff and also has arranged for the filling of consular posts, so that as soon as he receives authority Americans will take over the government's property which has been in the custody of Spanish consuls.

The German Embassy in Washington is being prepared for occupancy, and Baron Edmund von Thiermann has arrived in the American capital to take charge of the arrangements. The immediate appointment of Ambassadors is not expected, as the German Government is having difficulty in finding a man of outstanding ability who also has enough money to finance the conduct of the Embassy with marks worth less than half a cent each.

Anti-Beer Bill Passed

THE conference report on the supplemental Volstead bill, which outlaws beer and forbids the use of wine except for sacramental purposes, has been adopted by the Senate at last and the bill has been sent to President Harding, the House having acted some time ago. The final vote was 56 to 22, twelve Republican and ten Democratic Senators voting for the rejection of the conference report.

The bill was first passed several months ago and prompt action on it was desired in order to head off the issuance of federal regulations for the medicinal use of beer and wine in accordance with a ruling by A. Mitchell Palmer just before he gave up office as Attorney-General. But the question of prohibition enforcement methods was dragged in, and the House and Senate were unable to agree on amendments, so that the bill was held up. Meanwhile the Treasury Department had issued extremely liberal regulations, which dry leaders feared would open the way for all sorts of violations of the law, but those regulations now are superseded by the action of Congress.

Irish Parleys Delayed

THE negotiations for peace in Ireland have reached a stage where little progress has been evident and Premier Lloyd George's efforts have been centered on reaching an agreement with the Ulster government on the concessions to be made to Southern Ireland in the interests of Irish unity. There were no official meetings between the Sinn Fein and the British representatives during the week, but the Irish envoys were kept informed regarding the progress of the negotiations with Ulster.

Sir James Craig, the Ulster premier, has accepted an

MANY THOUSANDS STAND AT ATTENTION AS THE BODY OF AMERICA'S UNKNOWN SOLDIER IS LAID TO REST
A general view of the solemn exercises at Arlington Cemetery, in which President Harding, the members of the Cabinet and of Congress, and other high officials of the United States and of foreign countries paid their tribute to the nation's hero dead

Reality and Mystery

A Sermon by REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.*

TEXT—John 3:8. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: and so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

LET us try to get the feeling of the happenings on this eventful night. It is the month of April. The land is beginning to be fragrant with the treasures of the spring. And there is a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus, a member of the acknowledged spiritual aristocracy of the Jewish people. He had been moved by the words and deed of one Jesus, a Nazarene. Again and again he had sought more intimate knowledge of this mysterious Being, and he had thereby incurred the contempt of his fellow-believers. He was stirred with disquietude. Some inner chord in his spirit began to vibrate like an Aeolian harp when touched by the fingers of the wind. The little he knew made him eager to know more. He would dearly like the privilege of personal communion. But the menace of his sect was heavy and immediate. He was timid. He was not ready for courageous venture. Truth was luring him, but he was not yet a fearless crusader in her quest. He would follow her under the cloak of the night.

So, when the darkness had fallen, he left his home and went through the quiet streets. He went down the roadway outside the city gate and crossed over the brook Kedron. He climbed the slope of the Mount of Olives to the camp of the Galileans where Jesus lived. He sought out the tent of the Nazarene, and the two drew apart in the moonlight and walked away among the olive trees.

Their conversation probably lasted all through the night, and yet the record given to us is less than three hundred words. What we are told is like the stakes which are erected across moorland tracks to indicate the way, and we can discern the road of their intercourse. Their conversation wound through mystery after mystery. And again and again Nicodemus broke into the words of the Master with the wistful plea, "How can these things be?" "How?" "How?" "How?" Again and again his intellect faltered and the mystery of things plunged him into bewilderment.

Toward morning a wind breathed through the olive trees and set all the leaves a-whispering. And the Lord caught hold of it and made it the messenger of the truth. "The wind bloweth where it listeth; thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth." It is reality, though it is a mystery. Its presence and movement are certain, although its secrets are undisclosed. The wind is a minister of vitality, even though its origin and its destiny can never be traced. It impresses itself upon us with firm assurance, yet it brings no luminous satisfaction to the intellect. "The wind thou hearest is a reality, trailing clouds of mystery!" "Thou canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth." Nicodemus felt the breathings of the morning air, although he had no knowledge of its birthplace or its grave.

SO IT is with the things of the spirit. The Great Teacher told this disquieted Pharisee that there are momentous happenings in the world of the Spirit, and their reality is not in the least degree impaired by the absence of a rational explanation. We can be sure of the wind even though we can not explain it. We can be sure of spiritual realities even though reason limps and loiter on the road. In a word, we can have experience long before we have explanation. We can have a spiritual reality before intellectual clarity. We can have life before light. We can be sure of the wind, even when reason has not put its mysteries into bonds.

Now, this is not a disparagement of the intellect. We do not disparage things by placing them in their appointed rank and order. We do not disparage the fruit of a tree when we place it in the autumn time rather than in the spring. I do not disparage the alphabet when I say that a child can talk long before he knows that the alphabet exists. It is just a matter of grade, and order, and succession. And when it is said that in the realm of the Spirit we can have happenings which are impressive before they are expressive, that life can have communion with realities before intellect has made her survey and begun to offer explanations, we are only proclaiming the divine order, and we are saying that the loitering intellect does not impoverish my assurance because of its delay.

Reality and mystery! The two are wedded together continually. It is even so with love. Love is a tremendous urge of reality of which the reason itself can offer no explanation. And sometimes, when reason makes a venturesome attempt to explain it, the result is always grotesque. Love itself is a glorious reality. We can be perfectly sure we are in love even if the philosopher is dumb.

NOW, we are perfectly ready to acknowledge this order and experience in such things I have named. But a certain unwillingness arises when we turn to even greater matters of the spirit. When we direct our minds to the supreme spiritual realities we are inclined to argue that things are unreal, unless the intellect can unravel their secrets and present them in luminous understanding. In these matters we talk and we reason as if reason were the only faculty of assurance. We argue as though intellect were everything. We speak as if we have no other power of apprehension. But we have many powers. We have powers of intuition. We have higher sense perceptions which give us mystic sight, and taste and touch. That was the Master's teaching to Nicodemus on this eventful night. He told him he could have assurance of spiritual reality long before he had powers of understanding.

There is the darkness of guilt. Clouds of alienation roll between us and the Lord. And then the clouds are riven, and in the bright shining there is a glorious sense of at-oneness with the Light of life. We are conscious of rectified relationships. The soul is bathed in the friendly light of God's countenance. The ministry of forgiveness leads into the treasures of peace. "Lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone. The flowers appear on the earth and the time of the singing of birds is come." Well, may I not know this reality of reconciliation? May I not be sure of it? May I not be as certain of it as Nicodemus was certain of the warm wandering air of the spring-like April dawn? My soul is sure. I know!

But then intellect comes along, or reason, if you prefer the name, and she challenges the experience. "Now let us test it," she says, "let us lay it all out in ordered analysis. Let us present it in the form of propositions. Let us see it in the form of a syllogism." Intellect says to me, "How can these things be?" I answer her challenge, "the wind bloweth, and I hear the sound thereof." "Yes," answers the intellect, "but whence doth the wind come, and whither does it go?" And I can only go a little part of the way in company with the reason. I say to her, "God so loved the world that He gave His only Begotten Son . . ."

Reason impatiently answers, "Yes; but how, why, what, when?" And the questions of the intellect are not forbidden. She is not pursuing an unwarranted quest. She, too, is on the Father's business. But she soon puzzles me. She soon brings me to the frontiers of mystery where the darkness seems impenetrable. My understanding falters and I have no key and no clue. But here is the blessed counsel of the Lord—Reconciliation does not loiter until my intellect can explain. I can exult in the sunshine of God's countenance, long before I can evolve a theory which will satisfy the intellectual schools. Some day reason will light her lamps along every road, and every place will be luminous with understanding.

LET us take the teachings of the Lord to the mystery of the new creation. This was the mystery which staggered the mind of Nicodemus, as he walked on the Mount of Olives with his Lord. There was reality and there was mystery; there was mystery, but there reality. What is the statement of the mystery? It is stated that life can shift its heredity. We are told that life can find another and a vital ancestry. The Master teaches that man can become related to a new Adam who is Christ the Lord. Let us state the mystery with the uttermost candor. The stream which flows from Adam's spring can be stopped, and a new stream can flow from a new fountain, and you and I can be found in the new succession. There are two lines of heredity, the Adam line and the Christ line, and a life can be transferred from one to the other. Life can find a new origin. It can have a new birth. It can flow in amazingly new issues. It can be born again in Christ.

That is a mystery? Yes, indeed. But then there is a mystery about the first birth. What do we know about it? How much do we know about the mystery of life? We know nothing! What can reason tell me about that mysterious germ of life which followed some appointed way of detachment, and formed itself into a separate whole and now is known as thee and me? What does reason say about it? I call you to witness that the explanation is only a statement of the mystery. It darkens counsel with words. It is a lamp without light.

But the presence of the mystery need throw no suspicion on the reality. And as it is with the first birth, and with the mystery and element of life, so it is with the second birth and the mystery of the new creation. The intellect may not be able to ransack the treasury and dispossess the secrets. But it is none the less real. A man knows when his being is flooded with new life. We know it in richer fulness of being. We know it in new avenues of relation. We know it in new discernments. We know it in new delights. We know it in new griefs. We know it in the new goals and the new roads to reach them. We know it in new points of view and in new outlooks. We know it in new correspondences with God, and man, and the natural world. We know it because we have a new heaven, and a new earth. "The wind bloweth where it listeth"! There is reality indeed. How can we doubt it?

MYSTERY? Most certainly there is. And reason comes along and challenges our experience. How can these things be? How? How? How? Trace the circle in intelligent understanding. I can

Continued on page 899

Our Sunday Service at Home

The Christian Herald Sermon is now read in many Homes as a Sunday Evening Service, a simple form of conducting which is outlined below. Neighbors should be cordially invited

Order of Service

Opening Hymn—"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," or "In the Cross of Christ I Glory."

Invocation—"The Lord's Prayer"—all join.

Scripture Reading—Psalm 67. God's Blessing Invoked for the Nations.

Dr. Jowett's Sunday Meditation—(See page 887, first column.)

Sermon—"REALITY AND MYSTERY"—To be read aloud by the head of the household or his substitute.

Requests for Prayer—These may be offered by any of those present who feel led to do so. The requests may be forwarded to Pastor Sheldon, in New York for submission to the Prayer League.

Closing Hymn—"How Firm a Foundation," or "Sweet Hour of Prayer."

Benediction—By Pastor Charles M. Sheldon, to be read aloud:

Father of the mercy we have received, and which we would feel for all who need it, make the meeting of our thought to be in keeping with the trusting place of Thy friendship, tender and true and glad, because we need Thy companionship to make our earthly loves and hopes complete in Him who rounds out all human experiences. In Jesus' Name we ask it. AMEN.

The recognition and acceptance of this teaching would bring a great emancipation to many distressed and bewildered lives. They are giving undue ascendancy to the reason. Shall I say they are making life a monarchy, and they are placing reason on an unshared throne; when life is purposed to be a republic, with many powers in honorable office, and all sharing in holy sovereignty. There are intuitions, there are discernments, there are finer senses, spiritual instincts; there are powers affectional and spiritual, as well as rational; and reality can impress itself upon these with such imperative compulsion that I am able to say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." "I know Him in Whom I have believed." "The wind bloweth!" I know it! I hear it! I feel it! I may not be able to tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth; but I know it; nothing can impair that final sense of real experience.

NOW, let us take the Master's teaching to some commanding mysteries which are nevertheless commanding realities. Take what we call the mystery of Reconciliation. Is it a mystery? Yes, is it also a reality? Yes. What is this reconciliation which is both reality and mystery? I wrote that question upon the paper before me on Tuesday morning. It was a gloomy and a heavy morning. Swift, massive, storm-clouds were moving across the skies. Pelting rain and hail were falling. And then, in a moment, the clouds broke as if some powerful hand had torn a jet-black robe, and the sun shone through.

And that, I think, is the Scriptural figure of the spiritual happening when a man is reconciled to God. The clouds break, and the sun shines through! "Ye were once darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord."

*Dr. Jowett's sermons, prepared especially for the Christian Herald, appear in the first issue of every month.

The Daily Meditation

By Revs. J. H. Jowett, D.D., E. W. Caswell, D.D., H. Hepburn, D.D., D. J. Burrell, D.D., and R. Braunstein

Road-Makers

SUNDAY. Heb. 12:13. "Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way." Is there anything more wonderful than a well-made road, especially a road which hesitates at no eminence, but lays bonds upon it, and opens commerce and communion between distant places? I remember one such wonderful road climbing with a sort of easy laughter over the Maritime Alps. I remember another road which begins on the Dalmatian coast and subdues the fierce mountains which rise between the coast and Montenegro. But we need not go far away for wonderful roads. A noble road crossing some broad plain is extraordinarily impressive; it stretches away like a narrowing piece of white ribbon, and is lost on the horizon, where it suggests the unknown and the infinite.

Horace Bushnell had a fascinating interest in roads. It would probably be true to say that next to his passion for theology, it was his dominant passion. And he connected the two in his thought, and the one ministered to the other in the service of interpretation. He was always planning how roads should be made between this place and that place, or through a new piece of territory with which he had become acquainted. But he was something better than all this. He was a noble road-maker in thought and life. He was a pioneer in bold, firm, venturesome thinking, and in any fearless way of living which his thought demanded. Any disciple of Bushnell knows what a great road-maker he was over perplexing and difficult ground.

But we are all road-makers. There may be no aim and purpose in it, and we may be unconscious of our work. Nevertheless, we are making roads. We cannot help it. Every step we take is the making of a track, even if it be only like an uncertain trail through a forest. But everybody goes the same way many times; acts become habits, and what was once a thin trail becomes a broad and open road. Yes, we are busy road-making; every day and every hour we are at the work. What kind of roads are we making? Is there anything impressive and majestic about them? Do they suggest dignity and strength? Are they straight or crooked? Can we describe them as fearless roads, going right abroad? Or are they wriggling and deceptive roads, stopping dead at the hill, or slinking away I know not where? Are we making rough roads, full of loose sharp flints, or smooth roads, where the stones have been gathered and every thorn removed? What sort of roads are we making?

Why ask the question? Because somebody is following on, and will use our roads. And perhaps the one following on is lame, or only a poor walker, and the character of the road is of infinite concern. Lame, I say. Perhaps lame in will and purpose! Or lame in desire and self-control! Or lame in affection! And the lame one is perhaps your own son, and he is coming down your road! What about it? Is it all right? Is it safe for the son and the family? Is it safe for anybody and everybody else? Will they stumble on your road? Will they get astray? Will they be pilgrims of the night, or pilgrims of the light? Do the roads lead into the darkness, or into the dawn? "Make straight paths for your feet," somebody is just behind! Make them scrupulously straight, and put your best into them, "lest that which is lame be dislocated."

I was once walking with a good American through one of the streets of New York which was in a terrible state of disrepair. "How is it?" I asked. And my friend replied, "The stuff that ought to be in that road is in the contractor's pocket!" The corruption in character had worked itself out into the street. And so it is; the roads we make are no better than ourselves.

J. H. J.

The Man with the Spade

MONDAY. Psa. 119:105. "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." It used to be said that the date assigned to the Pentateuch must be incorrect because the art of writing had not been discovered in the time of Moses; but along came a man with a spade and, from among the ruins of Tel-el-Amarna, he produced satisfactory evidence that kings were corresponding with one another long before Moses was born.

It used to be said that the story of the Exodus was unreliable because an event of such importance would surely have been recorded in contemporary annals, while no such record was found. Then came the man with the spade and, excavating among the ruins of Thebes, he found not only an account of the Exodus but the mummied Pharaoh of the captivity!

It used to be said that the story of the overthrow of Babylon was false because it affirmed that Babylon fell in the reign of Belshazzar, while other records made it clear that Nabonadus was king at that time.

But along came the man with the spade and inscriptions were unearthed in the valley of the Euphrates which showed that Nabonadus, while absent on an Eastern campaign, had placed the government in the hands of Belshazzar, under whom the city did fall.

The fact is that, if the assaults upon the historicity of the Scriptures are to be successful, a permanent injunction should be placed upon archeological research; for this man with the spade is a most disconcerting friend of truth.

D. J. B.

Individual Influence

TUESDAY. Josh. 23:10. "One man of you shall chase a thousand." This is the promise of the wise to him who would do good and yet for lack of confidence does not enlist in the ranks of holy service and helpful ministry. The only thing to do is to try to do one's best. God always blesses our best. One of the memorable things the Master said was, "She hath done what she could." When we do that, God blesses our attempt, even as he multiplied the loaves and fishes—a little store, but sufficient for the feeding of the multitude, under the divine benediction.

A friendly touch on the shoulder together with some kind words transformed the drunkard Gough into a champion of temperance. The determination of one young woman to abstain from the use of sugar in her tea, thus doing her humble bit to lessen the traffic in human blood, caused Sir Fowell Buxton to become an earnest advocate of emancipation. "It made me think," were his words. The driver of an Irish jaunting car, refusing to join Thomas Guthrie in a hot toddy, though he was wet and chilled to the bone, sent Guthrie into the arena to fight for sobriety among men, and made him the enemy of the liquor traffic. And so the record runs and leaps from great epoch to great epoch and from turning-point to turning-point in Kingdom extension and righteous progress.

The Divine Artificer, working by human instruments, prepares those instruments by means under His control, the electric touch of the Holy Spirit acting through the most simple causes, awakening dormant energies and rousing latent abilities.

It is possible for everybody everywhere to be identified with God in renewing the mind of the world and recasting the thought of men into finer shapes and after a nobler pattern. We may not be able to do much, but we can do something, and, by the help of God, the little we may do now shall at last spell much for the coming generations. In the work of the Kingdom there are no little consequences, though great achievements may have sprung from the humblest beginnings.

R. B.

Through Struggle to Triumph

WEDNESDAY. I Pet. 4:12. "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery fire which is to try you." Peter realized that in the world we must have tribulations, being partakers of Christ's sufferings, but that when His glory shall be revealed, we may be glad with exceeding joy.

It is said that there are three mountain ranges between Joppa by the Sea and the City of Jerusalem. After reaching the first summit, the traveler enjoys glimpses of the spires of the sacred city. But the roadway leads down again into the second valley, where struggle and conflict are endured in order to climb the next range of hills. Here a nearer vision greets the eye. Then, after the third valley is passed and the last range reached, Jerusalem appears in full view.

Is not this an illustration of our pilgrimage from this world to that which is to come? After the summits of attainment have been reached, Jerusalem the Golden appears to the vision of the eye of faith. But another Valley of Humiliation, persecution and suffering must be passed through before we ascend to the Mount of our Transfiguration vision, where, communing with the Christ and the angelic visitors, we would wish to remain in the heavenly places, building tabernacles of rest and bliss. But the valley below again is before us, where devils are to be cast out, miracles performed, sufferings endured and victories won, that we may become perfect in Christ Jesus. At last we ascend the Delectable Mountains, where the Celestial City appears in full view to the hopeful Christian traveler.

Our Christ, who overcame the world, had to traverse the dark valleys during the three years of His wonderful ministry, and at last had to enter His Gethsemane and climb His Calvary before He arose upon the last summit on Easter morning and ascended from Olivet. Is it not the final victory that counts? In the valley, we learn to lean upon God, and come to know of His great power to deliver us from all evil and enemies. We learn that without Him we are nothing; with Him, everything. Then we behold the beatific vision of the King in His beauty and the glory that awaits immortals.

E. W. C.

Trouble and Its Remedy

THURSDAY. II Cor. 12:9. "My grace is sufficient for thee." How is it possible for us to keep trouble from our hearts, when it is constantly knocking at every heart, and tribulation and sorrows are beating upon us? When cherished hopes are broken, and the heart in which we had confidence is unresponsive to our appeals? When the road of life is rough and steep and the outlook is appalling; and yet, it must be possible, for our Lord has commanded us not to be troubled.

Do you fear in some unguarded moment you may be caught by the tempter and your face be turned away from the Cross to the world and an unholy ambition ruin the possibility of a victorious life, or, that you may lapse in holy endeavor, and under the power of spiritual atrophy, drift away from God? Christ is not baffled. He knew these dangers when He issued His imperative orders against fret and worry. Nor does He desire you to fear that yours will be a wasted, a worthless, a fruitless life. He promised His Holy Spirit as companion and guide, and the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace. So, backed by omnipotent power we need not be afraid.

We naturally shrink from difficulties and testings, and very frequently we endeavor to escape them, but how much better to go to God for grace and strength to learn to be conquerors through Him that has loved us.

H. H.

The Method of the Master

FRIDAY. John 17:19. "For their sakes I sanctify myself." The tyranny of nature determines the plan by which it must be overcome. The tyranny of the waters determines the shape of the boat. The tyranny of the wind determines the shape of the sail. The tyranny of sin determines the plan by which it must be conquered. It is a self-forgetting, sacrificial, giving-of-self plan that shall at last usher in the reign of righteousness on the earth. Sin overcomes man by sacrificing man. Christ overcame sin by sacrificing Himself.

John Wesley laid down a rule for Christian living when he spoke of "all of a man all of the time." It calls for the application of the whole Gospel for the whole world by all of a man all of the time. Jesus gave us the supreme precedent when He said, "For their sakes I sanctify myself." History and experience have proven that up to date there is no other method than that of the Master, no other plan than that of Christ's program, no other solution than the giving of self.

Whatever honors we may gain from the schools and from the world, there is nothing to compare with the Master's "Well done," given when we have "done well."

The college of consecration is the school of the prophets and of the disciples of the Kingdom of God. The Kingdom of Heaven shall no doubt come by many ways and devious routes, but never unless those ways and routes lead through our modern Gethsemanes and our daily Calvaries.

R. B.

The Fullness of the Fatherhood

SATURDAY. John 14:9. "Philip saith unto Him, show us the Father." Among the mountain fastnesses of the Godhead lies the vast ocean of Divine love, invisible to man. Christ, the River of life, flows forth from the bosom of that sea, bringing the Father's life-giving waters to the thirsty souls of this world. He that has seen and known Me hath known the Father, He assures us, for the waters of the river are the same as the infinite ocean. He who is planted like a tree on the banks of this River will bring forth his fruit in his season. These waters will be in you a well, springing up into everlasting life.

Our Heavenly Father so loved His children that He sent forth this River as a part of His own glorious being, that men might know God through His only begotten, beloved Son. We know that the inexhaustible fountain supplies the everlasting river of life as it encircles the universe. Everything liveth whithersoever the river cometh. The River of our Lord's salvation puts to our lips its healing waters, so we may taste and see that God is our gracious, loving Father, who longs to fill all hearts with all His fullness.

It is then that we become a channel of blessing and usefulness, a branch of the great River, flowing everywhere among men. It is the one element of love in God, in Christ, in man; as Jesus said, "I am in My Father, and ye in Me and I in you." Christ is the Father manifested in the flesh and we are to become like Him; becoming more and more like the Father and the Elder Brother, who enters every door that faith opens to Him, revealing the wonders of the Fatherhood of God.

E. W. C.

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon

The Mind of the World

THE mind of the world was never in a more fluid state than it is at this, the end of 1921. It is ready to run into any mold.

Whether this mold be good or faulty depends on the predominant currents of thought. The only way these currents can be controlled is through the press and the platform, and of the two, the press is the great outstanding influence.

When this fact is squarely faced it is plain what a tremendous responsibility rests on a magazine or newspaper that undertakes to reflect the movements of the times. And no publication can reflect the world's thought without at the same time guiding it into one mold or the other.

It is the pride of the Christian Herald that it is consistently molding for good.

COMING

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in Washington to get the very best, the most authentic and the most colorful accounts of the proceedings of the great International Conference on Limitation of Armaments. Already you have read the first of a series of articles which Dr. Sheldon is sending to us and which will tell in his inimitable way the proceedings from the viewpoint of the man who wrote "In His Steps." These will be supplemented by articles from other writers of importance approaching the Conference from other standpoints; and by articles giving authoritatively the views of the heads of the various foreign delegations on the problems constantly developing. We have in hand now such statements by Dr. Alfred Sao-ke Sze, Chinese Minister to the United States, and Mr. Shidehara, Japanese Ambassador.

The attitude of the Church and the co-operation of Christian Herald readers with the real leaders of the Conference will have an influence that will be felt in the world for generations. Your sympathy and support will go far toward making this effective.

You remember, of course, the articles that have appeared in the last few months on the homey questions that arise with husbands and wives, and their sons and daughters, signed by "A Mere Man." The "Mere Man's" common-sense handling of delicate questions, his very human philosophy and his keen grasp of human nature have attracted wide-spread attention to him. You never could guess who is hiding under this nom de plume and we are not going to tell you—at present—more than that it is one of the best known writers in the United States, and that in coming weeks he is taking up for discussion some of the most vital problems in the social life of today.

Among the men and women whom you can count on as contributing to your information and entertainment in the next year are such people as Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, Dr. Worth M. Tippy, Roger Babson, Martha Candler, Miss Alice Robertson (woman member of Congress), Senator William E. Borah, Edgar J. Banks, Wayne B. Wheeler, Mrs. Abby Gunn Baker, Annie Hamilton Donnell, and others of equal prominence.

Miss Alice Robertson

Three Book-Length Stories

THREE new serials will appear during the year—all of them wholesome, appealing and decidedly Christian Herald stories. They will be supplemented by a liberal collection of the best short fiction obtainable.

At a National Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church held in Detroit in November, one of the subjects for discussion was "Is the Church leading thought in America today?" If it isn't, why not?

A group of the most brilliant men in the Church—ministers and laymen—will answer that question through the Christian Herald the coming year. They will tell the price it must pay in money, in program, in unity of action, and in consecration to the newer ideals of Christian service. It will be a powerful series of exceptional articles.

Adventures in far places are not confined to the professional explorers. No group of men in the world have more varied and fascinating experiences than missionaries and Dr. W. B. Norton is contributing a collection of pages from his notebook, liberally illustrated, as only one feature of our plan to keep you in touch with men, places and affairs the world over.

SEE INSIDE BACK COVER FOR

THE year 1922
termine how Prohibition can big decisions to and women who fight. It is up to see that Amer
but we must lo
Christian Herald
about condition
forcement offic impartial investi
on getting the sometimes hurt.

Most In Constructi Program in

CHRISTIAN HERALD
FOR

A full year of inspiration and a library

read $

ONE of the fea
be the establ
Altar conducted ginning with the
A short, simple morning or eveni
for every day in only a few minu
tion in the averag help set up the homes too, doing missionary serv such homes the scription to the explaining your should follow th
by Dr. Sheldon.

pretty well dessfully National ficed. There are de by the men nrolled in the us, in the end, be really "dry," on the face. The you the truth
 e words of en-re workers and
 You can count even if it may ing and Magazine

 erica Today

STIAN
 ALD

1922 entertainment, information;

 the best for 00 or next year will ut of the Family

 Sheldon and be-issue in the year.
 service for either will be provided week, and needing undivided attenehold. You can Altar in other finest kind of ly by giving to f a year's sub-tian Herald and wish that they ce as indicated

Three Principal Objectives

IN ITS constructive editorial efforts for 1922 the Christian Herald has three big objects in view, in addition to its broad primary purpose of promoting Christian citizenship.

1. To counteract a growing tendency to lower standards of thought and action by interesting the youth of the country in the work of the Church and the agencies for moral and social development along healthy, sane lines.

2. To prosecute actively the cause of disarmament, world peace and international brotherhood by every consistent means.

3. To encourage and promote the spirit of Christian Unity, and to make of the Church a more living entity in the lives of the American people. We want your support in these efforts.

Dr. J. H. Jowett

COMING

DURING the last year or so hundreds of letters have come to us from parents and pastors regretting a tendency toward lower moral standards and lessened interest in the Church and its work on the part of young people. What is the reason? Are the parents and pastors, or the young people themselves to blame, or both? We have set for ourselves the interesting task of answering these questions in a number of articles which are right to the point, and are written by men and women who know what they are writing about. There is little of theory in them, but plenty of plain facts about life in its present-day aspects and the currents in amusements, sports, literature, social activities and business that have a distinctly demoralizing effect on the youth of both sexes. It's a big job to keep the rising generation happy and headed right; to give them joy without jazz. Leaders like Daniel E. Poling, Margaret Slattery, P. C. Claxton, Jane Addams, and Barclay Acheson can do it. We believe the series will be the most valuable from every standpoint that we have ever published.

Amos F. Dushaw made another trip to Palestine last summer and has just now returned with a portfolio filled with new photographs. He knows every foot of the Holy Land and most of the prominent figures in its contemporary life. Before he left New York we told him to keep his eyes and his ears open for us and he has come back with a fascinating story of the new Palestine. He will describe for you the railway development, the new waterworks systems, sanitary measures, colonization plans and the other forms of modern civilization that are expected to make the land of the Bible a great commercial and agricultural state. It provides a new conception of the country that is the center of Christian interest.

What do you know about the government? What does it do for you? During the year you will have a liberal education in its little known functions in articles for the most part by the members of the President's cabinet or writers selected by them to tell you of activities that mean something in your every-day lives. They will give you some surprises in the explaining where the money you pay in taxes goes to.

Old Friends and New

THE whole world is close to us today.

We are only a few hours from Tokio, Calcutta, Buenos Ayres or Constantinople; and we cannot be complete citizens of the world until we know and understand these neighbors of ours. In our special articles and world news we tell you week by week what they are doing and thinking in all important things.

Dr. Jowett's delightful ministry will lead in the first issue of each month and eminent preachers like F. B. Meyer, Bishop William A. Quayle, R. A. Torrey, James M. Gray, Peter Ainslie, S. Parkes Cadman, D. J. Burrell, Edward S. Young, Hugh Black, Charles L. Slattery, Joseph A. Vance, W. A. Sunday and Edgar DeWitt Jones will give their best discourses. Dr. Samuel D. Price will continue his remarkable expositions of the Sunday School lesson, and our greatly beloved Francis E. Clark, founder of the Christian Endeavor, will represent us in a tour of the new states of Eastern Europe, during which he will tell us of the changing religious conditions he finds. Margaret E. Sangster, who is smiling at you from this page, will make you smile with her and cry with her all the year.

Miss Margaret E. Sangster

LIST OF COMBINATION OFFERS

Christmas 52 Times a Year THE YOUTH'S COMPANION

The Companion breathes the Christmas spirit all through the year. It helps to make home a centre of attraction; it increases knowledge, holds fast to the highest standards of thought and conduct and provides wholesome entertainment in overflowing measure.

Our Christmas Present Offer

Every New Subscriber sending $2.50 with this coupon or the name of this publication will receive:

- | | |
|--|--------------------------|
| 1 The 52 Weekly Issues of The Companion for 1922 | All for $2.50 |
| 2 All the remaining issues of 1921 | |
| 3 The Companion Home Calendar for 1922 | |

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

| | | | |
|----------------------------------|--------|---------------|----------------------------------|
| Christian Herald | $2.00 | $4.00 | You save .50 |
| Youth's Companion | 2.50 | | |
| The Christian Herald | $2.00 | $5.50 | All three You save $1.50 |
| Youth's Companion | 2.50 | | |
| Pictorial Review | 2.50 | | |
| The Christian Herald | $2.00 | $7.50 | All four You save $1.50 |
| Youth's Companion | 2.50 | | |
| American Magazine (To one) | 2.50 | | |
| Woman's Home Companion (address) | 2.00 | | |

Attach your remittance to this coupon and mail it today.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 73 Bible House, New York

Housekeepers

should know about

Excelsior Protectors

Desirable for the comfort of the little ones and family. They are made of specially prepared cotton and heavy white muslin, easily washed and dry out light and fluffy as new.

LOOK FOR OUR TRADE MARK—ON EACH EXCELSIOR MATTRESS PROTECTOR

Excelsior Quilting Company
15 Laight Street, New York

Girls! Girls!! Save Your Hair With Cuticura

Soap and Ointment to clear Dandruff and Itching, 25c. each. Samples free of Cuticura, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

SPECIAL OFFER to introduce our goods

Mayonnaise Set $1.00

4-inch bowl with ladle and plate of sparkling cut glass. For salad dressing, sauces, jellies, etc. Beautiful for gift or the home table. Send $1. cash, money order or check. We'll ship at once, all charges prepaid east of the Miss. If west, add 15c. postage. Safe delivery guaranteed. Money back if you're not delighted.

Krystal Krafters
Department E
Trenton, N. J.

Now Only $10.85

Save fuel, food and time—quit standing over hot cook stoves. Take advantage of this low direct-to-price on a Rapid Fireless COOKER. Aluminum lined—genuine Wear-Ever Aluminum utensils. Roasts, bakes, fries, steams, stews. Highest grade cooker on market. Write today. Ask for Free Home Science Book. Wm. Campbell Co., Dept. 2 Detroit, Mich.

The Extra Baby

Continued from page 883

thrust beyond too easy reach. The mellow light from the shaded lamp fell upon her bare neck and quivering shoulders. "Father!" she sobbed, through clenched teeth, "You've just got to help me not to see it!"

She fell asleep, finally, after having diverted her mind by inventing small economies which even Mark wouldn't notice. She had tried, as she lay there, to shut out of her mind the new lines that were cutting too deeply into Mark's face. Probably, she thought, he wasn't eating enough. Men were funny. He would be all right as soon as she was cooking again, and the time would not be long. Already she felt a tide of new vigor rising against the tremendous drafts so soon to be made upon her endurance. Life was marvelous, she meditated drowsily. It was a game to be played jestfully; a goal to be achieved gloriously. "No matter what happens, I'll keep it a romance!" she whispered to her heart, turning her face jealously against the blight of drudgery and poverty that threatened its beauty.

CHAPTER II

THE Spring the twins were five years old the Ladies' Aid Society repapered the front bed-room. After the furniture was moved back and the inexpensive new curtains hung at the windows, Nellie locked the door, drew a rocker into the center of the gray and rose room and sat down, with nothing in her hands and nothing in her lap. At the end of an hour and ten minutes she took her darning-bag and slipped into the study where her husband was tinkering with the old typewriter.

"Mark," she said quietly, "I feel like a dove looks. I've never been so happy in all my life!" She drew a chair near his desk and began a patiently determined attack upon a mass of cavernous holes. After a while she said, "Mark, I've been thinking about Luke."

The minister looked up quickly. "About Luke?"

She threaded her needle before answering. "College," she said. "We can't avoid the issue much longer—either he goes or he doesn't go."

Mark leaned back in his chair and strummed his fingers upon the table. "Yes, I know," he said. "Well," he added presently, with the air of a man who stakes his life upon the throwing of a dice, "he goes!"

"That's the way I feel, too," said Nellie, "only—how?"

They measured glances for a full minute.

"I don't know," Mark said finally. "All I know is—he goes."

"We've always gotten through some way," Nellie conceded.

"It's a lot of fun—doing the impossible," said Mark. "Besides, I have a plan."

NELLIE'S keen brown eyes rested speculatively upon him. "So have I," she announced. "What's yours?"

"They need a man at the general store nights."

Nellie gasped.

"Why not?" he asked seriously. "Folks stood for overalls; now they can get used to a grocer's apron."

"But Mark, dear, filling oil-cans and weighing butter?"

Mark's jaw was set stubbornly.

"They need a man. My job is to do all the good I can to all the people I can—including my children." He smiled.

"Perhaps when I find how tired folks are by Saturday night I won't preach so long Sunday morning."

The work dropped from Nellie's hands. Her eyes softened as she gave them wholly to his countenance which seemed aglow from an inner light.

"Your Sunday morning sermon is the shortest one you ever preach," she said tenderly.

"And I've got another idea," Mark continued with repressed enthusiasm. "The farmers need help. I'm going to give them Mondays and every spare hour. I can plow and pray at the same time. I'll take what I earn in produce. That will cut our bills tremendously.

Moreover," he added seriously, "I'll be getting experience that will come in handy when we get our farm."

"My plan isn't nearly so spectacular," Nellie laughed. "I thought if Luke went—when Luke goes," she corrected, "I would take the school teachers to board. They could have his room. Junior is willing to sleep here on your couch."

BUT her husband wasn't listening. His keen mind had seized upon an idea which he was following with narrowed eyes and a half smile.

"The Old Man on Hate Hill is sick, they tell me up town," he announced suddenly. "His stable boy is taking care of him. Nobody else will work for him for love or money. The bugs are eating up his potatoes and his garden's full of weeds."

"Why don't the neighbors help?" flashed Nellie.

Mark shrugged his shoulders. "Because," he said dryly, "they've been enmeshed in the spirit of his own warped soul. They say if they offered, they'd only be cursed from the door."

"As if cursing would hurt them!"

Mark's eyes twinkled. "I'm going to take a can and a stick and go after those potato bugs!" he announced. "He can't order me off the place, because he's in bed." His shoulders shook with amused anticipation. "Putting something over on the Old Man will be great sport!"

"Has he got a shotgun?" demanded Nellie seriously.

Mark shook his head. "He'll lie there and sizzle! His crafty old mind will be inventing vituperations against the time when I shall have saved his potato crop and come to talk to him about his soul. There's where he's going to get left. This time I'm working for his body."

"Who's getting his meals?"

"The boy."

Nellie sniffed. "Let's leave a basket on his door-step at night—like they leave babies!"

A silence fell between them. After a time, Nellie said, "Are you really in earnest, dear, about the store and the farms?"

He nodded his head.

AND thus it happened that one amazing autumn morning Mark and Nellie and Junior and the twins met with the neighbors and the grocer and some of the pillars who had assembled upon the ramshackle station platform to see a tall, flushed lad in new clothes start away to college.

"God knows how they're going to do it, with everything so high!" murmured the grocer as the minister and his wife bade their eldest son good-bye.

And only God knows how they did do it. But some way, between them, God and the minister and the minister's wife and the lad, who tended furnaces at dawn, they did it. Moreover, before Luke was graduated, Mark, Jr., a giant of a fellow, with his mother's ardent eyes and his father's lust for souls, outstripped the village educational facilities and he, too, was sent away.

Thereafter, at the parsonage, the days lengthened and the nights shortened. A man and a woman took life by the throat and bent it to their wills. Muscles never sagged; determination never weakened, and in spite of drudgery and fatigue the years went zestfully. Always, barely a pace ahead of their trudging footsteps, marched the illusive fulfillment of their hopes. The gleaming black satin gown and aigrette hat of Nellie's secret dreams, deferred year after year, from spring until fall and then from fall until spring, remained untattered from much longing. The new typewriter and encyclopedia, the dining-room chairs and the library table were for the time being only pushed into the background of their desires. In the immediate present, there was always an orphan in India, or somebody without underwear, or an unsuspected need that came to light before the fire on the parsonage hearth.

"It isn't as though we were giving these things up for keeps," commented

Mark one evening as he followed Nellie's sober glance toward the cavernous sugar-bowl, which they had just emptied, "We're a bit pinched just now of course, but it won't last forever. Some day we'll have plenty of money."

"I know, dear," said Nellie. "That's why I don't mind doing without now—some day we'll have everything. And when we get it—" Her words died into an ecstatic sigh.

MARK was sitting with his feet on the fender of the kitchen stove. He glanced up quizzically from the paper he was reading. "Well," he inquired idly, "when we have plenty of money, what will you buy first?"

"The first thing I'll buy," she answered after a moment's meditation, "will be a five-pound box of candy—one with a pink bow perked on top." Her eyes were wistful.

Mark leaned a little forward in his chair and stared at her face which was beautifully flushed with the effort of her imagination.

"What else?" His tone was tinged with tenseness.

She thought a moment. "Under-clothes," she laughed, "enough to last from Monday to Monday without washing in between."

A silence fell between them.

"It's perfectly idiotic, of course," Nellie went on presently with heightened color, "but I hope some time we'll be rich enough so that when we have company for dinner we can have—well, things that are not absolutely necessary for food. Olives and parsley, you know, and oodles of cracked ice and salted nuts. I'd like to feel sufficiently wealthy just once to cut up a whole lemon for garnishing without feeling like I'd robbed a mite box!" She flung her husband a half-smiling, half-serious glance.

To be concluded

A Japanese Woman's Prayers for Peace

WOMEN ADVISERS TO AMERICA'S ARM'S DELEGATIONS
Left to right: Mrs. Katherine P. Edson, of California; Mrs. T. G. Winter, Minnesota; Mrs. Eleanor Franklin Egan, New York, and Mrs. Charles S. Bird, Massachusetts

Continued from page 878
woman is the power that will finally put an end to war around the world. It will not be the power of the diplomat that will prevail, but the power of just such faith in God as is shown in Madam Yajima.

THAT power has already been shown by the opening of the first meeting of the Conference by prayer by Dr. Abernathy, President Harding's own pastor in Washington. And if I mistake not, that same power is going to hover over this gathering in ways that men's stubborn and unspiritual natures cannot resist.

I do not know just how to account for the fact that I have happened to be present at several gatherings where Madam Yajima has spoken. I have gone to gatherings where I might meet persons of influence and commanding personality. And at several of these she has been the most honored and distinguished guest. As one woman, a leader in society circles in Washington, said, "I did not know a word of the language that old woman used, but never in all my life have I felt so awed and moved at the hearing and sight of any human being." This woman was not a church woman, but she could not refrain from this astonishing testimony.

What could that influence be that this woman of the world felt so deeply? What could it be but the power of God moving on her unspiritual life?

AT THE last meeting where I happened, if that is really the word I should use, to hear this wonderful personality, she spoke her regular message through her missionary interpreter, Mrs. Topping, who has been in Japan nearly all her life, and the chairman of the meeting thanked her in behalf of the assembled audience for her words. But it was a business group of men with a very important program to carry out, and the chairman had finished his remarks and had evidently paused in the transaction of the business of the day to take it up at the Madam's departure. She, however, lingered. And after a moment of significant silence while we waited to resume the day's task she said, speaking through her friend:

"I did not come to this country simply to present to your President a formal petition for peace from my countrywomen. My real object in coming was to be near the praying people of America. And I would like to be permitted to pray with you now."

I cannot recall any moment in any revival service or church gathering that was more shot through in an instant with divine power than this one.

This messenger of God spoke five and six times each day for several different days during the sessions of the Conference. The effect of her peaceful presence on audiences large or small or upon individuals was instant and commanding. With her was her secretary, Miss Morinaja, who is the Japanese worker among the children, and editor of their W. C. T. U. paper.

And so I say that among the influences that will determine in spite of them, some of the results reached by the Conference delegates, will be the influence of Madam Yajima. Her prayers and the prayers of her countrywomen joined to those of the praying women and mothers of this and other lands are going to make history. "With God, all things are possible."

The young lady, who is 2½ years old, plays every night. She will have acquired a fondness for music by the time she is ready to take music lessons. It's a good idea, don't you think so?

Give children music early

Only a few little girls will ask for a real player piano this Christmas. That's because they don't know about the

STROHBER DIMINUTIVE

Every child who sees one of these little new pianos is fascinated with it. When they find they can play it—play real "grown up" music on it—all by themselves—it becomes a great companion.

Of course, parents have a share in this pleasure, too, but the children get the great reward—an early love for music.

It's so easy to play

Don't get the idea it's a toy. It's a real piano, just small, that's all. Fits the out-of-the-way places in the home, without crowding. Has a beautiful tone and a very responsive action—plays all standard rolls. Can be furnished without the player also.

There is a music merchant in your community to supply you; we would like to send you pictures and complete information—use the coupon.

This is our latest piano. We have been building fine upright and grand pianos since 1884.

MUSIC MERCHANTS: If we are not represented in your city write for particulars

SMITH BARNES & STROHBER CO.
1872 CLYBOURN AVENUE, CHICAGO

Please send me complete information and pictures of the new piano, the Strohber Diminutive.

Name _____

P. O. Address _____

Genuine Aspirin

Never say "Aspirin" without saying "Bayer."

WARNING! Unless you see name "Bayer" on tablets, you are not getting genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians over 21 years and proved safe by millions for

| | | |
|-----------|-----------|------------|
| Colds | Headache | Rheumatism |
| Toothache | Neuralgia | Neuritis |
| Earache | Lumbago | Pain, Pain |

Accept only "Bayer" package which contains proper directions.

Handy tin boxes of 12 tablets—Bottles of 24 and 100—All druggists. Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid.

Don't Wear a Truss

Brooks' Appliance, the modern scientific invention, the wonderful new discovery that relieves rupture, will be sent on trial. No obnoxious springs or pads.

MR. C. E. BROOKS

Brooks' Rupture Appliance

Has automatic Air Cushions. Binds and draws the broken parts together as you would a broken limb. No salves. No lies. Durable, cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Protected by U. S. patents. Catalog and measure blanks mailed free. Send name and address today. Brooks Appliance Co., 498D State St., Marshall, Mich.

5 — Good — $1 Magazines

Woman's World, (Monthly) Our Price
Good Stories, (Monthly) $1.00
American Woman, (Monthly)
Mother's Magazine, (Monthly) ALL FIVE
The Farm Journal, (Monthly) FOR 1 YEAR

ORDER BY CLUB NUMBER 111

A Dollar Bill will do—We take the risk

Send all orders to

Whitlock & Summerhays
25 North Dearborn Street, CHICAGO

High School Course in 2 Years

You can complete this simplified High School Course at home in side of two years. Meet all requirements for entrance to college and the leading professions. This and thirty-six other practical courses are described in our Free Bulletin. Send for it TODAY.

AMERICAN SCHOOL
Dept. H-916 Drexel Ave. & 58th St. CHICAGO

Cuticura Is Wonderful For Your Hair

On retiring rub spots of dandruff and itching with Cuticura Ointment. Next morning shampoo with Cuticura Soap and hot water. This cleanses the scalp of dandruff and promotes hair health.

Sample Each Free by Mail. Address: "Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. 326, Malden 48, Mass." Sold everywhere. Soap 25c, Ointment 25c and 50c, Talcum 25c. Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

NO JOKE TO BE DEAF

—Every Deaf Person Knows That

I make myself hear, after being deaf for 25 years, with these Artificial Ear Drums. I wear them day and night. They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them. Write me and I will tell you a true story, how I got deaf and how I made myself hear. Address: Artificial Ear Drum GEO. P. WAY, Artificial Ear Drum Co. (Inc.) 6 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS ARE INVITED to send for full particulars of the money-saving
CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK BUYER'S CLUB
Thousands are now members. WHY NOT YOU?
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BOOK DEPARTMENT, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

HOW DID THE BIBLE COME TO US?

Talks on the Bible—No. 6

1. Why have France, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark all recently revised their Bibles?
2. When was the British Revision Committee formed?
3. Who Comprised the American Revision Committee?
4. What sources of knowledge were discovered during the period prior to the American Revision Committee?
5. How many English dictionaries have been necessary in the last 300 years to keep pace with the changes in the meaning of words.

All these questions and dozens more of interest to you are answered in "The Wonderful Story." Write today for it to

Thomas Nelson & Sons 381-1 Fourth Av., N. Y. City

The American Standard Bible text has been adopted by all the leading Colleges, Theological Seminaries, Y. M. C. A., and Bible Schools in the United States.

The American Standard Bible text is used by over 13,000,000 Sabbath School scholars from which to study the International, Graded or other Bible lessons. The American Standard Bible is for sale by all book sellers.

THOS. NELSON & SONS

381-1 Fourth Ave., New York City
DEAR SIR—Kindly send me a FREE copy of your book entitled "The Wonderful Story." This does not obligate me in any way.
Name _____
Street No. _____
City _____

Paul Writes to a Friend

International Sunday School Lesson for December 11
Philemon

By REV. SAMUEL D. PRICE, D. D.

FOR two years Paul was a prisoner in Rome. Chained to a guard, he could still choose his residence, and in this respect had a measure of freedom. Being a prisoner does not seem to have interfered greatly with Paul's purpose in coming to Rome. These two years represent his first imprisonment. Then he was released for a time. Meanwhile he had much to do. The care of the churches which he had founded pressed heavily upon him. Doubtless he received representatives from many of these new organizations or believers.

We know that he wrote four letters during these two years which will always have place in the greatest literature of the world. These were Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians and Philemon. All are extremely rich in helpful teachings, as they come from the mind of Paul through the Holy Spirit in these maturing years of his life. Youths can dash off lengthy essays which never get into print, but it takes a man of experience to write such a letter as the one to Philemon, or the Gettysburg Address of Lincoln.

Among those who came under the blessed influence of Paul when in Rome was a runaway slave, named Onesimus, who belonged to Philemon, a friend of Paul, residing in Colossæ, about 100 miles east of Ephesus. This man was converted under Paul's teaching, and after his spiritual transformation he was ready to go home to his master in Colossæ. Such a willingness indicates how genuine was the conversion. In imagination we can hear Paul and Onesimus talking over the next step, and they reach the same conclusion quickly.

Then Paul shows his great heart as he, in "big brothering" the slave in the flesh but the free man in Christ, says, "I will write a letter to my old-time friend and you shall carry it with you." Philemon is that letter. By studying Col. 4 : 7-9, and Eph. 6 : 21 it will be noted that Tychicus and Onesimus evidently carry all three letters at the same time. They were transporting incalculable values.

There are two facts about this book that need to be noted. In pronouncing the name, accent the "e," which is long. In the Greek it is the long e (eta) and not the short e (epsilon). The other fact can be brought out by an incident that occurred one day in Princeton Theological Seminary. Dr. Purves named a verse in Philemon and a classmate caused a roar of laughter by saying "Professor, what chapter, please?"

THIS great, little letter will bear the closest study. It is rich from the standpoint of literature, social relations, honesty and friendship as well as from the deep religious teachings that are so prominent. Read it at least three times, as was suggested last week. No less than seven persons are named in the opening section, 1-3: Timothy is with Paul in Rome, and five others who are his co-workers there are named in verse 23. Then the home circle in Colossæ is presented as Apphia, the wife, and Archippus, the son, are mentioned. There must have been a group of worshippers who gathered with Philemon, since we read: "and to the church in thy house."

Big-hearted, generous Paul, without appealing for any personal sympathy, tells his far-away friend how Onesimus has found joy and peace in believing. This new convert would have been helpful to Paul, but he was unwilling to keep the slave from his owner without due permission. Paul begs for restoration of relationship rather than any punishment, however much it might be deserved. If Onesimus stole from his owner when he left Colossæ, that amount is to be charged to the account of Paul, who expected soon to follow Onesimus and Tychicus. In fact he asks that a bed be made ready for his hoped-for early arrival.

The Bible does not tell us of the response by Philemon when he read the letter, but there could be only one answer. A noted English preacher was heard delivering a sermon from this book. He pictured Tychicus handing the letter from "Paul the aged" to Onesimus, who read it with marked agitation and emotion. Then he said eagerly, "Where is Onesimus?" He did not say, "Where is my runaway slave that stole when he left me?" Tychicus replied, "He is awaiting your pleasure without." The Christian greeting and full pardon were all that Paul could have desired and when the "church in the house" had its next meeting, it was Onesimus who gave the account of Paul and his work in Rome. It is also safe to conclude that the better service rendered by the returned slave, now a Christian, made Philemon believe that it was worth while to "be a little kinder than necessary."

A phrase, frequently used in jest, has a rich illustration in the act of Paul and the situation of Onesimus—"When a feller needs a friend." Is there some one in your immediate neighborhood, or even in the membership of your Sunday School who right now needs some friend, such as Paul was? People rush to the help of a drowning person, but they frequently let some one stumble on in the pathway of life when friendly encouragement would give them courage in their honest desire to reestablish themselves in ways of right. A look can lift up, a hand can hold up, and to walk at their side makes them bold as they go surely onward.

KNOWING something of the Christian Herald Family, the writer has in mind those who are often called "shut-ins." There are many who are advancing in years and less active than in former days; some are invalids, though young in years. In such circumstances it is easy to think that the horizon of life is becoming narrower. This lesson just lifts such people to the consciousness of heights of privilege with an ever-enlarging view of opportunity. "Shut-ins" they may remain from the physical standpoint; but they can watch the work of Paul the prisoner at Rome, and think about the outreach of shut-ins. We can see that staff meeting in prison, as Paul frequently, if not constantly, called together even those named in Philemon. When in the Roman prison the second time, he wrote II Timothy, and we have named the four letters that he wrote during the first imprisonment. He kept up the contact with his beloved churches and friends.

Paul regarded his letters as weightier than his presence (2 Cor. 10 : 10). This is an unusual contrast and few have literary ability such as Paul possessed. Most everyone can write an interesting, helpful letter, can write just as they would talk. Simple description, short sentences and small words are most effective. Only those who are away from home and their beloved Sunday School can appreciate the pleasure and benefit in receiving a letter from the teacher, superintendent or even the pastor—busy man that he is. Letters of tender, loving invitation have led many to accept Jesus as their Saviour.

Labor relationships are made prominent in this letter. The progress of righting the wrongs of slavery is also a subject for class study and discussion. It is a long distance from the unquestioned institution of slavery as found in Philemon, to the great Emancipation Proclamation of Abraham Lincoln. The very sentiment of abolition of the slave trade is attained in the process of Christian education. This old world has still very much to both learn and do, that men may be free indeed.

The Boy in the Later Teens

IF THE Sunday School board has wisely considered the boy's salvation as of more importance than its promotion program, the older teen-age boy has the same teacher who won his heart at the beginning of the teen years. Little by little he will have opened his heart to disclose to the sympathetic teacher his inmost secrets.

The wisdom of letting the boy keep the teacher he knows and likes will be shown by the large percentage of the class which will decide for some definite Christian work during this important period. The ministry, the mission field, all forms of church activity, are crying for recruits, and if these recruits are to be won in the needed numbers, the young men of the nation must dedicate their lives.

These workers can not be obtained if the boy drops out of Sunday School before he reaches the later teens, for it is at this period that he decides what he is going to do with his life. In any town the interested person will be struck by the large amount of "God's raw material" that is seen on the street corners on Sunday morning instead of in the Sunday School.

How can we get these older boys into the Sunday School? How can we hold them? How can we get them to accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour? How can we get them into the Church? How can we get them to dedicate their lives to definite Christian work?

The boys seem to attend fairly well until the teens are reached. They have been promoted regularly up to that time and have accepted it as a matter of course; but at the age when the gang spirit makes him clannish the boy will accept his teacher as one of the gang and give a loyalty that is for life. Then woe betide the board that promotes him to another class, for he will become a disturbing factor that the school will latter see drop out of attendance with a sigh of relief.

So it is well to promote both teacher and boy through the teens. Then send the teacher back and let him bring another class through the rapids. Repeat the process until the teacher grows too old—and the age limit can't be set by graying hairs.

TO STRENGTHEN the boy in training and interest, give the class president a place and a vote on the Sunday School board. He'll attend and some of his suggestions will reveal the reasons for lack of interest among the boys. He will be the "missing link" between the older people and their viewpoint and that of his crowd. Also he will become interested in Sunday School problems and later, when teachers are needed you will find volunteers with definite ideas. They will understand the value of the teacher training class and be ready to take its work, and the next few years will see a sufficient number of trained young men for the boys' classes.

If the boys are to be interested in the Sunday School, they must be given a program that will challenge the very best there is in them. How often a Sunday School board will deplore the fact that such and such classes will not come for the opening exercises, but do come for the class work. Why won't such boards awake to the fact that the class interests the boys and the opening exercises do not? The only way they can be made to want to attend Sunday School is to make it interesting. If we want to get and hold the boy we must cater to what he wants.

Try putting the different classes in charge of the opening exercises. There will be variety and "something different," and the most cynical boy will be attentive after he has found how hard the thing is to do. The programs may not be as "finished" as though presented by the regular officers of the school, but some good raw material will be getting training.

There are many ways of getting the new boy into Sunday School, but they

Enlisting Him as a Christian Worker Through the Sunday School

By F. GEORGIA STROUP MORRISON

can all be summarized by saying, "Keep everlastingly after him." Let the teacher invite him; let the membership committee ask him; send him cards; ask him again, ask him once each day by appointing or asking for volunteers for each day. Sometimes the boy whom it takes two years to get will become one of the strongest class workers.

THE boy is naturally religious and may be induced to accept Christ if the matter is presented tactfully from the boy's standpoint. First, recognize the fact that the boy is a perverse human being—who of us is not?—and when everybody is doing a thing, he prefers doing something else. Therefore do not wait until the general decision day of spring to get your boy of the late teens to make a public confession.

During the summer, write and talk to your boys who are already Christians and ask them to pray for those members of the class by name, who have not made their confession. Ask them to meet with you to pray for the others. Have definite prayer lists and use them continually.

Then in the fall, a few Sundays after school has begun and the boys are full of new plans, new studies and new friends, tack a "NO INTERRUPTION, PLEASE!" sign on your classroom door. Choose Romans 10:9-10 for your text and talk to your class. Have your Bible in your hand and use other references as you are led. Be Christ's mouthpiece; let Him have your tongue for that day. Preach to your class the strongest evangelical sermon of which you are capable. If you desire, have your pastor present, but ask him to stay in the background unless called upon. Close your talk by asking that every head may be bowed. Then pray as you've never prayed before.

Ask that all heads remain bowed for a few moments of silent prayer. Then ask for the hands of those who have already given their lives to Christ. Note, in your mind, the upraised hands. Ask how many will join you in asking for a closer walk with God. Then ask how many will make a public confession by acknowledging Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour by raising a hand. Close the class with prayer, or ask the pastor to lead.

Through the winter, lead your lessons towards church membership. Show the importance of the Church to the world, to civilization. Show the world's debt to the Church. Show its part in the community, what it really is, what it stands for, what it tries to do. Then some Sunday in the spring prepare a number of questions touching the points that you have been emphasizing all winter.

Give these questions to members of the class for discussion and you will find the boys fair-minded enough to see the world's obligation to the Church.

The next week see each member of the class who is not a church member and ask him to become one. Answer his questions fully, so he may be fully intelligent in his decision. Talk with his parents if he wants you to. Then give your list of names to your pastor.

Decisions for life-work must be individual. Stress life-work at different times in the class, the different kinds and their needs and opportunities. Ask the boys individually, in private conversation, their aim in life—what they expect to give to the world, the reward they expect. Discuss different phases of life-work and then pray with the boy that God will direct his life to the work that will mean most to the world.

The older teen-age boy is God's greatest responsibility to every Christian, for at this period his earlier decisions are cemented or destroyed. Greatest of all, he is at the age when it is possible to take special training and still have long years to use it in God's service.

May the Church recognize her duty to the boy of the later teens.

Actual photograph of Goodyear Cord-equipped truck in winter hauling for Frank P. Andringa, Marne, Mich.

Copyright 1921, by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Safe, Swift Hauling on Winter Roads

"Much of the winter hauling I do on Goodyear Cord Tires is done at night, over hilly country roads, usually with a good deal of snow in the winter months. Yet the Goodyear Cords always carry the load swiftly and safely. They have extended my range of operation, moving grain, live stock and farm supplies, from 100 miles to 700 miles—distances impossible to solid-tired trucks. One of their distinct advantages is their activity on the streets of the cities I haul to or pass through en route. I have got as high as 33,000 miles on Goodyear Cord Tires."—Frank P. Andringa, Marne, Mich.

THE way they climb the hills and hold the roads is the best evidence of the tractive power of Goodyear Cord Truck Tires in winter farm hauling.

Their All-Weather Tread takes a firm, sure grip on the slippery surfaces of paved roads and maintains powerful traction in muddy, slushy going.

The result of their positive road ability is punctual deliveries and more trips with profitable loads.

Their resilient action cushions the truck and its cargo, prolonging the life of the carrier, keeping down repair costs, and protecting the freight they carry.

Their durability, mounting up to thousands of miles of trouble-free running, is a definite product of Goodyear design and Goodyear construction. The full strength of the wide, strong, active tire is always under the load.

Actual experiences of farmers with motorized hauling on Goodyear Cord Truck Tires are reported to those interested by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio, and Los Angeles, California.

GOODYEAR

For Coughs and Colds

Safe and Sane

PISO'S

This syrup is different from all others
Pleasant—gives quick relief Contains no opiates—good for young and old

35¢ per bottle everywhere

Write For This Free Style Book

The Philipsborn Catalog, with its 312 pages of "America's Best Styles at America's Lowest Prices," will help millions of families dress better for less money this Fall and Winter.

In times like these when every dollar must do double duty it pays to take advantage of Philipsborn's wonderful values. With the aid of this style book, you can sit in your easy chair at home and pick and choose from an almost unlimited variety of offerings.

Philipsborn's is a national institution, established for 32 years and thoroughly reliable. Over two and one-half million customers buy from this famous mail order house.

They prepay all delivery charges and guarantee satisfaction or refund money.

A postal card addressed to

PHILPSBORN'S

Dept. 287, CHICAGO

will bring the style book by return mail. Or simply fill out and mail the coupon printed here for your convenience.

BOOK COUPON

Philipsborn's, Dept. 287, Chicago

Please send 312-page Style and Shopping Guide for Fall and Winter free, postpaid.

Name
Address
City State

The Blessedness of Faith

A Woman's Sermon by a Minister's Wife

TEXT—John 20:29. "Because thou has seen me thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed."

WHEN the disciples of Christ met together on the evening of that first wonderful Easter day, Thomas was not with them. People who stay away from meeting on Sunday forego a privilege of communion with their Lord and very likely miss a special blessing, as did Thomas. But Thomas, at this time, was too deeply plunged in grief and despair to have the heart to go anywhere. The dear Master, whom, despite a cold, phlegmatic temperament, Thomas had most devoutly loved—so devoutly, indeed, that he had once expressed himself as willing to meet death with him, if need be—was gone. His tomb had been rifled and the precious clay borne away, to what profanation no one knew. That rock-hewn sepulcher, even though empty, bounded the horizon of doubting Thomas. The story of Mary Magdalene he regarded as the fiction of a woman's overwrought fancy. The assertion of his fellow-disciples, that they had seen the Lord, he discredited, declaring, "Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails and put my finger into the print of the nails and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe."

But when seven days had passed and the world's second Christian Sabbath had come, the disciples were again together and Thomas was with them. Suddenly, without warning and without visible entrance, an ineffable Presence stood among them. It was He, oh, it was He, with whom they had walked and talked and supped, familiar, yet different, the earthly etherialized, spiritualized, the mortal clothed upon with immortality. With that "divine omniscience which knoweth what is in the heart of man, with tender rebuke, but with infinite patience and fathomless love the Presence, turning to Thomas, said, "Reach hither thy finger and behold My hands and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into My side and be not faithless but believing." Thomas waited not to make the test, needed not to make it now. In a rush of faith, in a rapture of joy, with outstretched hands he cried, "My Lord and my God." Jesus said unto him, "Thomas, because thou hast seen Me thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed."

THE tribe of Thomas is a numerous one. His spiritual descendants may be found in all parts of the world today. They say, "I must see, I must handle, I must understand, or I will not believe. My reason must be satisfied before I can accept." They forego the blessedness of faith for the realism of sight. They cast aside the greater to take up the less.

One fancies, perhaps, the experience of those disciples whom Christ, when upon earth, called to Himself. It must have been a wonderful thing to have heard His gentle voice speaking one's name and saying, "Follow me"; to have felt the reassuring touch of His hand; to have looked upon His "human face Divine." They knew Him in the flesh; they walked with Him by sight; they were singularly favored. But centuries since that wondrous Being ascended to His Father, the children of men, as clearly and definitely, have heard His call to follow Him. It may have come in the whirlwind of some great religious awakening, or in the still small voice of that inward monitor named conscience, through the influence of a Christian home, or by the example of a godly friend; but it has come, with an all-compelling power and, responded to, has brought inconceivable happiness.

"Tongue can never express
The sweet comfort and peace
Of a soul in its earliest love."

Indeed the blessedness of faith is something beyond the power of language to make known. It is something that can be felt, but never, in its fullness, can be told.

The giving of sight to the man born blind was a wonderful achievement. It seems to us that none who witnessed it could have failed to recognize the divinity of the man called Jesus, or acknowledge Him Lord of all. It seems to us that those who beheld this marvelous deed were blessed far above the common lot. But a mightier work than this is wrought daily in our own materialistic age, nineteen hundred years later, when the sin-obscured spiritual vision of men and women, touched by the finger omnipotent and bathed in the fountain drawn from Immanuel's veins, becomes as the brightness of noonday.

We imagine what it must have been to have enjoyed, personally, the friendship and companionship of Jesus. We picture to ourselves that favored home in Bethany, where He was often a most welcome guest. We think of Martha, the good housewife, so anxious and careful for His material comfort, of Mary, sitting at His feet, eager to learn of the eternal verities, and of the young man, Lazarus, their brother. Jesus loved them all and they, in turn, cherished for Him an adoring affection. Happy indeed was the lot of the household at Bethany. Yet this same Jesus whom they crucified says, in reference to every home in the world today, "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with me." If only one has faith enough to lay hold upon the promises—faith like every other faculty grows stronger by exercise—then may he realize the unseen to be as real, as vital, as satisfying, yea, far more so than the things which are seen. Then may he know as an ever-present companion and helper and comforter the Friend above all others.

AS WE have stood beside the newly made grave of one who was dear to us, dearer perhaps than our own life, we may have thought of the raising of Lazarus and pictured the joy of his sorrowing kindred, as by the compelling word of Christ, he who was dead became alive. We may have thought, "If only Christ were here today! Then, as a voice out of Heaven, reaching an inner perception to flesh and sense unknown, has come the convincing assertion, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live." If, in our thoughts of them, our loved ones are forever in the tomb, it is the stone of our own unbelief that is keeping them there. Faith declares that they shall come forth. It will not be now, but it will be, for the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ Jesus. One can wait patiently for a certainty.

In many ways, and especially after His resurrection, against that rapidly nearing time when they would no longer be strengthened by His physical presence, our Lord sought to confirm His disciples in their faith. Then, suddenly, as He talked with them, He was taken up and a cloud received Him out of their sight, and left them gazing up into Heaven. It was the end of sight. They had reached the realm of faith, in which henceforth they must walk.

The few incidents and comparisons which we have noted might be many times multiplied. They but faintly intimate the blessedness of faith, the richer experience of those who have believed rather than seen. "The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal."

We have not seen, but we believe. "We believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and earth and in Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord. We believe in the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body and the life everlasting." We believe. Lord, help our unbelief and grant us to know, in full measure, the blessedness of faith, the supreme joy of those who, not having seen, have believed.

MODERN recipes call for accurate measurements. But every housewife has some old, favorite recipes which she has used for years—perhaps her grandmother used them before her. These old recipes invariably call for "butter the size of an egg" or "butter the size of a walnut."

In the first case three tablespoonfuls of Wesson Oil, in the latter case one tablespoonful, is the right amount of fat.

Vapo-Cresolene
Est. 1879

The Vapor Treatment for Coughs and Colds

The time for Vapo-Cresolene is at the first indication of a cold or sore throat, which are so often the warnings of dangerous complications.

Simple to use; you just light the little lamp that vaporizes the Cresolene and place it near the bed at night.

The soothing antiseptic vapor is breathed all night, making breathing easy, relieving the cough and easing the sore throat and congested chest.

Cresolene is recommended for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Influenza, Bronchitis, Coughs and Nasal Catarrh. Its germicidal qualities make it a reliable protection when these diseases are epidemic. It gives great relief in Asthma.

Cresolene has been recommended and used for the past 42 years. The benefit derived from it is unquestionable.

Sold by druggists. Send for descriptive booklet 62. THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York, or Leeming-Miles Bldg., Montreal, Canada

RESINOL

Soothing and Healing
Clears Away Blotches
and Promotes Skin Health
Keep a jar on hand

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your home 30 days. Should you not like it return at our expense. Million members of families now using Hoosier Stoves, best made, the latest design and guaranteed for two years. Ask your dealer to show you "Hoosiers," or write us for our big free book showing photographs. Large assortment and sizes at a big saving. Send postal today.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St. Marion, Ind.

IDEAL XMAS GIFT

Wonder Automatic Pencil—one year supply of leads. Name engraved in 18kt. gold. Holly or floral boxes. All colors. Lasts a lifetime. Dept. C.

UNITED PENCIL CO., 318 Broadway, NEW YORK

You can be quickly relieved, if you

STAMMER

Send 10 cents in stamps for 288-page cloth-bound book on Stammering and Stuttering, "Its Cause and Cure." It tells how I relieved myself after stammering for 20 years.

Benjamin N. Bogue, 6291, Bogue Bldg., 1147 N. W. St., Indianapolis

SEND FOR FREE
THIRTY CIRCULARS

Sacred Duets and solos

FREE—Leaflet showing pages from Herbert Johnson's famous new duets. Free to Pastors, Rock of Ages, and others. Your music store will send these duets, or we supply you by mail. PRATT'S MUSIC HOUSE, Utica, N.Y. Dept. B

Made $1150 in 11 Months
 Mrs. Frank Unger, of New York, needed extra money badly. Finally she saw an Auto-Knitter advertisement and later secured an Auto-Knitter. Mrs. Unger writes:
 "My standard socks have always been cheerfully accepted and paid for by the Company. I have knit over 7,000 pairs of men's half hose. I have had my machine eleven months and have made $1150 out of the socks I knit. With this money we have made the first payment on our home and plan to pay the rest the same way. The people who laughed at me at first now wonder at my luck."

Earned $110 in 4 Months at Auto-Knitting
 "No one but the owner of an Auto-Knitter," writes Mrs. W. J. Colson, of Nevada, "can imagine how much pleasure it is to be able to earn spare-time money without going out of your own home. All the money I made out of the Auto-Knitter goes into the bank, as my husband makes money enough to keep the family. I have not as yet decided what I am going to purchase with it, but I assure you that it will come in real handy some of these days. My bank book shows $110 that I have made with my Auto-Knitter in a little less than four months."

$500 Clear Profit From Spare Time Work
 When Mr. Ward Butler of Illinois, was married he had just $30.00 and no regular job. Things were pretty hard until he learned about Auto-Knitting. His spare-time earnings made it possible for him to get a start in life. Now, he is in business, farming for himself. "Since purchasing our Auto-Knitter," Mr. Butler writes, "we have made up 2500 pairs of socks, from which we realized over $400.00, and a thousand corset covers, which profited us $150.00. So, totaling it all up, our machine has made us over $500.00 clear profit. I can trace my start directly back to the Auto-Knitter."

Earned $472 With Her Auto-Knitter

Mrs. A. L. Heggen is the wife of a Minnesota farmer. She does all of her own housework and cares for her two boys, aged two and four. "Yet with all this," she writes, "I have found time to make 1824 pairs of socks, for which I have received $472.25." This money has helped to furnish their little home, provide many articles of clothing and purchase a number of good books and magazines.

Has Earned $247 In Spare Hours

The Auto-Knitter is now helping to pay for Mrs. Utz's farm home, in Kentucky. Here is part of her letter:
 "I soon had my machine paid for, and I have been working right along in my spare time. In all, I have earned, as near as I can figure, $247, with my Auto-Knitter. Since the first of January I have taken in $72.50 which has helped to tide us over."

Has $400 Bank Account Made by Auto-Knitting

Things were looking bad for Mr. Nathaniel, of Massachusetts. The mill where he was employed was only running part time. He invested the Auto-Knitter and ordered a machine. Now read what he has to say:
 "In the five months I have had the machine I have made 2,000 pairs of socks, and have $400.00 to my credit in the bank. I earned this amount by making socks on the Auto-Knitter, both for the company and for my own customers."

Cleared $100 by Auto-Knitting in Spare Time

"I started right in," writes Mrs. Strunk, of New York, "devoting every spare minute to knitting socks. Once every month I ship the socks I have made to the company. After a couple of days I receive my check and as much replacement yarn as the socks weigh. I work only in spare time, but I cleared about $100 in a year, with which amount I bought a nice Jersey cow."

How These 7 People Earned $2979 —in Their Spare Time—At Home

Men and Women Everywhere Are Now Turning Spare Hours into Welcome Dollars In a Pleasant, Profitable Home Occupation.

HOW often have you longed for some way to make money right at home; some means of turning your spare time into cash? You are seeking not the sort of work that brings a little "pin money" now and then, but some steady employment that will pay well for your odd time. You must have work that does not interfere with your household duties or regular occupation.

And here is your opportunity.

Read the testimony set forth on this page. Here are the true experiences of actual people—men and women who are regularly turning spare hours into welcome dollars. Mothers, with young children to care for, and a little time to spare, devote it to this work. Women with a round of household duties are earning money in spare time to buy fine furniture, clothing, pretty dishes; and all of the things so dear to woman's heart. Men, whose incomes have not kept pace with the cost-of-living, add to their earnings by evening work.

Housewives, school teachers, shopkeepers—people in almost every walk of life—are making money at the new, fascinating occupation—Auto-Knitting.

A Paying Home Business

Most of the people who take up Auto-Knitting use the Auto-Knitter largely to earn money in spare time—but many have found knitting socks more profitable and pleasant than the work they were doing, and now give their entire time to the occupation. You simply knit standard wool socks and we pay you for knitting them. Every time you send in a shipment of standard socks, made on the Auto-Knitter, you promptly receive a check to cover, together with yarn to replace that used in knitting the socks. You are your own employer. You work as much or as little as you please. Every minute you put in at the machine means money for you—money of your very own, that you can do with as you please.

And you don't have to go away to work! Women need not leave house-work and babies. Men are no longer obliged to put in "over-time" at factory or shop in order to earn "extra" money. The Auto-Knitter solves the problem.

Previous experience in hand-knitting is not necessary. Nor is mechanical training essential. Inexperienced persons can learn to turn out standard "Olde Tyme" Wool Socks with the Auto-Knitter. These socks have the real "home-made" quality. Yet the machine operates many times faster than even the most skilled hand-knitter.

Send Your Socks to Us

The beauty of the Auto-Knitter home-work plan is that you never have the least bit of trouble disposing of the standard socks that you make on your Auto-Knitter. We enter into a contract, agreeing to take all the standard socks you knit and send to us, paying for them at a fixed guaranteed price per pair.

This contract does not restrict you at all. You can work for us as much—or as little as you please. If you wish to work up a home trade, selling the socks to local stores, or direct to your friends and neighbors, you are perfectly free to do so. But we are always ready to take as much of your standard output as you care to send, paying you good wages—on a piece-work basis—for the time you put in.

The Auto-Knitter is a practical, efficient machine, which weighs about 20 pounds, and can be readily clamped to any ordinary table. It makes the entire sock—top, body, heel and toe—without removing the work from the machine. And so fast does the Auto-Knitter run that it has been aptly termed, "Better than a hundred hands."

Write Today for Our Liberal Offer

You have read the fact stories of seven people. And these are but a few of the folks who have met success with the Auto-Knitter. Incomes from the machine are being used to furnish and pay for homes, to buy clothes, pay off mortgages, educate children, build bank accounts and bring many little comforts and luxuries that the owners otherwise could not afford.

These people owe their success to the fact that they made up their minds to act! They determined to find out just what we have to offer. Think what they would have lost by dilly-dally and delay. Suppose Ward Butler had said: "I'll write to those folks some day" and forgotten? Would Mrs. Frank Unger have her new home today if she had said, eleven months ago: "I won't send the coupon; I'm afraid I'll never be able to run an Auto-Knitter." How would Mrs. Heggen have bought fine furniture, clothing and books if she had been content to say: "I won't write to the Auto-Knitter Hosiery Company. My housework and two little boys keep me busy. I haven't enough time to devote to the work."

But these people didn't make excuses. They wanted to turn spare time into money—just as you do today. They filled in and mailed the coupon—will you follow their example?

You owe it to yourself to get the facts. Just write your name and address in the space below The Auto-Knitter Hosiery Co., Inc., Dept. 812-K, 630-632 Genesee St., Buffalo, N. Y.—(Adv.)

The Auto Knitter Hosiery Co., Inc.
 Dept. 812-K, 630-632 Genesee St.,
 Buffalo, New York.

Send me full particulars about Making Money at Home with the Auto-Knitter. I enclose two cents postage to cover cost of mailing literature, etc. It is understood that this does not obligate me in any way.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY.....STATE.....

C. H. 12-3-21

CHOOSING YOUR INVESTMENT HOUSE
A SURE ROAD TO FINANCIAL INDEPENDENCE
BONDS QUESTIONS ANSWERED TERMS DEFINED
10 TESTS OF A SOUND PUBLIC UTILITY
HOW TO JUDGE MUNICIPAL BONDS
LOOSE LEAF SECURITY RECORD

A Library of Investment Information

TO AFFORD investors a simple explanation of the elements of safety to be looked for in the selection of securities, the technical terms used in bond descriptions, the various types of bonds, etc., we publish a list of booklets and circulars which comprise a rather complete library of investment information, presented in non-technical form.

Some of these publications are listed below. We shall be glad to send copies upon request.

Mail this coupon to our nearest office

Please send the following booklets checked:

☐ Choosing Your Investment House.
☐ A Sure Road to Financial Independence.
☐ Bonds—Questions Answered—Terms Defined.
☐ Ten Tests of a Sound Public Utility.
☐ How to Judge Municipal Bonds.
☐ Loose Leaf Security Record.

CH-7

Name.....
 Street.....
 City.....

HALSEY, STUART & CO.
 INCORPORATED

| | | |
|--|--|--|
| CHICAGO
209 S. La Salle St.
PHILADELPHIA
Land Title Bldg. | NEW YORK
49 Wall St.
DETROIT
Ford Bldg. | BOSTON
10 Post Office Sq.
ST. LOUIS
Security Bldg.
MINNEAPOLIS
Metropolitan Bk. Bldg. |
|--|--|--|

MILWAUKEE
First Wis. Nat. Bk. Bldg.

Careful Investors Are Buying Electric Light and Power Bonds

Because companies which supply Electric Light and Power have had an excellent record in the past and because they have shown themselves to be steady earners under almost any conditions, bonds of this class are a favored investment among the most experienced investors.

Over $2,000,000,000 of these bonds are now owned by banks and insurance companies alone in the United States.

INTERMOUNTAIN RY. LIGHT & POWER CO.
 7% 1st Refdg. and Improvement Bonds
 Will Net the Investor over 8%

This Company serves 30 prosperous communities and earns over two times its interest charges. Denominations $100, $500 and $1,000.

Send for complete description

Dodge & Ross
 INCORPORATED
 INVESTMENT SECURITIES
 111 West Monroe Street
 CHICAGO, ILL.

Taylor Oven Thermometer
 Lessens work and gives better results on baking day. Saves time and fuel.

Makes Baking Easy

Cook Booklet Free
Taylor Instrument Companies
 6-212 Rochester, N.Y. U.S.A.

There's a Taylor thermometer in every kitchen for every purpose

linene
 Send 2 Cents in U. S. stamps to pay postage and we will send you FREE a SAMPLE COLLAR of our New Style "Cooley." State size wanted. REVISELLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

The World News of the Week

Continued from page 885

invitation from Premier Lloyd George for an informal discussion of the situation, and both houses of the Ulster Parliament were summoned to an emergency session, opening on November 29, to hear a report on the negotiations and to deal with the transfer of various governmental services from the Imperial Parliament to the Ulster Parliament. There was little sign of yielding on the part of the Ulster spokesmen, but efforts to find a compromise acceptable to Southern Ireland, Ulster and the British government were continued energetically.

CHARLES REACHES MADEIRA. The former Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary and his wife, Zita, have arrived at Funchal, Madeira, aboard the British cruiser Cardiff, to begin the life of exile decreed by the Allied Council of Ambassadors. The question of their support has not been settled, and suggestions that Britain should make an annual grant to them have brought vigorous protests from the London press.

FIGHTING NEAR KIEV. A revolt of Ukrainian peasants has assumed considerable proportions and there has been heavy fighting between the insurgents and Soviet troops in the neighborhood of Kiev. Rebel reinforcements have been hastening to the scene and one peasant band advancing on Kiev from the south was commanded by a woman who has displayed aptitude for military affairs.

$1,500,000 GIFT TO SCHOOL. A. W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, and R. B. Mellon, his brother, have given to the University of Pittsburgh a fourteen-acre tract in the educational center of that city which they had acquired at a cost of $1,500,000.

CONFEREES FINISH TAX BILL. Senate and House conferees have finished their report on the tax revision bill, the third rewriting which the measure has undergone, and plans were made to rush the adoption of the conference report, which the four Democrats on the committee refused to sign. One point of difference between the two bodies was settled by the House voting to accept the maximum income surtax of fifty per cent. favored by the Senate, although Administration leaders had favored a compromise on a lower figure. The conferees fixed the corporation income tax rate at 12½ per cent., the figure in the original House bill.

SLAVS and ALBANIANS END DISPUTE. Both Yugoslavia and Albania have promised, as the result of a hearing before the League of Nations Council in Paris, to end the state of warfare which has been maintained in certain border districts for several months, and to accept the boundary line laid down by the Council of Ambassadors.

TWELVE DIE IN ARKANSAS STORMS. Twelve persons were killed and thirty injured by two tornadoes which struck in widely separated districts of Arkansas on the same day. Eight of the fatalities were in a single family.

LARGER STARS THAN BETELGEUSE. Prof. Albert A. Michelson, of Chicago, who created a sensation by his announcement that the star Betelgeuse measured 300,000,000 miles in diameter, has discovered that there are several stars larger than this. Antares, a star in the constellation Scorpio, was named as one of these and while its exact size has not been determined the experiments indicate that it is considerably larger than Betelgeuse.

RIOTING IN BOMBAY AS PRINCE LANDS. Riots in the native quarter of the City of Bombay marked the arrival of the Prince of Wales for his tour of India, but the procession in his honor was not interfered with. Serious disorders in India have continued and 700 Moplah rebels were reported to have been killed in an unsuccessful attack on the Pandikkad post, in which the rebels used artillery.

CAPTOR OF JEFFERSON DAVIS DIES. Colonel Charles Tracy Hudson, who commanded the cavalry detail which captured Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederacy, on May 10, 1865, has died at his home in Brooklyn. For forty years he had been an employee of the New York Custom House.

The Bible and Your Children

By FLORA G. BRENT

ALL children like stories, and it is easy to get them interested in the Bible, history or any other literary material if it is told entertainingly in language they can understand. Teaching the Bible is one of the duties every parent should perform diligently and untiringly. From this the child secures the great truths, the fundamental laws of life, and a wealth of historical knowledge. In this great book there is a liberal and practical education.

How well I remember when a child the family scriptural reading and prayers we had each night before going to bed. My grandmother was leader and how I dreaded the monotonous humdrum reading from which I never gained any knowledge. A few verses were read here and there throughout the Bible. There was never any connection so far as I could see in these selections. A few words and sentences sometimes held my attention, but not sufficiently to impress me. The long prayers which followed were a welcome opportunity to snatch a nap or to play peek-a-boo through my fingers with my two sisters, who disliked this part of the day as much as I did.

I grew to womanhood convinced that scripture reading and prayers at the family altar were as much a part of the daily routine as eating, that it was every parent's duty to set aside part of the day for this purpose. I also knew that the methods used in my home were not practical for small folks.

NOW that I have a family of my own, I, too, hold family prayers but not as my grandmother did. I hope here I have profited by my childhood experience. I would feel deeply hurt if I thought my little ones dreaded this, the most beautiful and holy part of the day, but they enjoy it, and are always glad when the hour comes.

Instead of the usual scripture reading I tell them a Bible story, painting the scenes as vividly as possible. Some times we take a character and imagine how he looked, talked, acted, and was dressed. After hearing the story my little ones eagerly take part in the picture characterizing. We locate the country and cities on the map, and give vent to our imagination as to the setting. I try to make the teaching practical, so that it will serve them in every day life.

Each night after I have put the children to bed I prepare my story for the next night. I am so thankful that my children crowd eagerly about me each night and listen attentively to the story.

Children are easily interested. Just mention story telling to them and see what an interested, open-mouthed, open-eyed group will gather about you. One will not have to worry because Johnny is whittling with his knife or because Mary and Ellen are holding a silent conversation on their fingers. Make the Bible study entertaining and you have begun a spiritual education which will be their guide all through life.

Free Investment Circulars

Interesting and valuable investment literature published from time to time by the leading Banks and Investment Houses are now available for Christian Herald Readers.

As a convenience to you we have arranged with these Financial concerns to send direct to you these Investment circulars. Write us asking for them by number or simply checking list and write name and address plainly on the margin. Financial Department, The Christian Herald, 99 Bible House, New York City.

Conservative Bonds—Current bond circulars, describing recent issues of high-grade bonds, with full details of security, yield, etc. Ask for Circular No. 1.

Public Utility Securities—Circular No. 2, describes a variety of public utility bonds and preferred stock issues, well secured and offering a high yield at present prices.

Real Estate Bonds—Several booklets issued by investment houses in different sections of the country present the advantages of real estate bonds and notes—the oldest and basic form of investment. These issues yield 6 per cent. to 7 per cent. Ask for Circulars 4-6 for city real estate bonds, and Circulars 7-9 for farm mortgages and bonds.

Partial Payment Investing—This method enables investors to buy sound securities by making payments monthly until the bond or preferred stock is fully paid for. Meanwhile all interest or dividends accrue from the time the investment is begun. Ask for Circular 11.

To Invest $25 or More—Two-year time deposit certificates paying 6 per cent., and 5 per cent. certificates payable on demand, secured by first mortgages, can be bought in multiples of $25. Ask for Circular 13.

Liberty Bonds—Circular No. 14 describes the various issues of Liberty Bonds and the remarkable investment opportunities they offer at the present time.

Farm Mortgages—Details also circulars regarding 6 per cent. First Mortgage Farm Loan Certificates issued in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000. Send for Circular 38.

Selecting Your Investments. Strong Box Investments, Creating Good Investments, are three booklets describing the service and safe, high yield investments of a nationally known investment house. No. 43.

How Henry Wilkinson Became Rich—Booklet 52 is the story of the man who was satisfied with Safety and a Fair yield on his investments. Persistence, Patience and sound judgment made him financially independent.

Choosing Your Investment Banker—Recently issued by a well known Investment House. It is the first and most important step to successful investment. Request Booklet 53.

Service to the Investor—Booklet 54 gives details of the service offered to investors by the investment department of one of the largest banks maintaining thirty offices throughout the country.

Booklet 55, The Investment. A booklet which you will read with interest. It contains full information concerning a strong and safe type of investment.

$2000 REWARD

paid in interest on your savings is well worth while.

MONTHLY PAYMENTS of $10 with interest at 6% compounded semi-annually, will produce

$4600 IN TWENTY YEARS

Write for our pamphlet "Saving Made More Profitable" showing results of systematic saving and investment and list of securities offered on our Partial Payment Plan to yield 8% or more.

Ask for circular CH-21

A.H. Bickmore & Co.
 111 BROADWAY, N.Y.

1922 Investment Opportunities

ON the first of each year we issue a booklet concisely describing the high grade securities—municipal, utility and industrial—which we own and offer to investors.

Many of these offerings are Bylesby Securities, back of which is our own experienced engineering and management organization.

Our investment recommendations for 1922 include a long list of sound and safe investment securities, which may be purchased for cash or on our easy Ten-Payment Plan.

Ask for Booklet HE-1

H.M. Bylesby & Co.
 Incorporated

CHICAGO 208 S. La Salle St.
 NEW YORK 111 Broadway
 Boston - Providence - New Haven - Detroit
 Minneapolis - Madison - Oklahoma City

Advantages in Bond Investments

WHEN considering the investment of money, there are attractive features of many splendid bonds which deserve more than passing attention.

Attractive Features Are Offered to Investors, Large and Small

By C. R. LEAKE

In the first place, a bondholder is the creditor of the corporation and not a shareholder, therefore he is not subject to the passing of dividends. In other words, if the earnings of a corporation for a given period are insufficient to meet the payment of dividends on its capital stock its directors are apt to vote against the payment of dividends to its shareholders, one of the main considerations being the protection of the creditors of the corporation and the bondholders constitute the principal creditor.

There are, of course, good sound reasons for investing in stocks at certain times, especially during periods of low money rates and industrial prosperity, as good stocks are always marketable and yield higher returns than bonds during these times. For the past two years high-grade bonds have presented very attractive features both to the large and to the small investor, and that will be true for some time to come.

As pointed out before in financial articles in the Christian Herald, some of the best bonds may be bought in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000, and through certain investment houses on the partial-payment plan, so that they are now available to all of us. The interest return still is high, many good bonds yielding 8 per cent., but business shows signs of improvement and money is easier, so that the time is not far distant when 7 per cent. or even 6 per cent. will be the average return obtainable.

THE sinking-fund provision has been made a feature of the majority of bond issues offered to investors during the money stringency following the war. This provision was adopted by many corporations to attract capital because the sinking fund created a stronger financial structure. For years mortgage houses, in making real-estate loans, have insisted upon the sinking-fund provision, as it goes a long way toward insuring the repayment of the loan by the borrower and is a strong talking point to be used in selling the bonds to investors.

Real-estate mortgage bond issues usually are made to mature in from two to ten years, so that after the first year the borrower pays, in addition to the fixed interest, a definite amount of the loan. Industrial issues are offered for a period of years, but the sinking funds provide for a retirement of a portion of the bonds yearly, to be bought back in the open market. This outlines the general practice in sinking-fund issues, although slight variations in details occur. In the case of real-estate bonds the investor may select any maturity up to ten years; in the latter case the corporation purchases a number of its bonds from investors holding them. The announcements offering the purchase generally take the form of advertisements stating the date upon which the bonds are to be retired, and the amount. Notifications direct to the bondholders are not a general thing, as this is a part of the service offered to customers by responsible bond houses.

The sinking fund is a strong influence in assuring a market and stabilizing the price of the issue.

During the life of both types the total equity behind the entire bonds originally issued remains the same to secure the ever-decreasing number of outstanding bonds. As a rule it is agreed that no further bonded indebtedness is to be assumed by the borrowing corporation until the entire issue is retired.

IN POINTING out to you this splendid feature of many bond issues offered recently it is not our idea to detract from the safety of bonds not issued with a sinking-fund provision but merely to explain a plan that is becoming more and more popular with our bankers and investment houses in arranging new issues and refinancing.

A convertible bond in most instances is a junior lien and therefore not the most conservative type of investment. Those who are accustomed to trading in stocks find attractive possibilities in this type of bond. There are three different types—bonds convertible into common stock, those convertible into preferred stock and those convertible into other bonds. Generally the conversion privilege extends over a certain period of years during the life of the bonds, or for the entire life. Convertible bonds are exchangeable at the option of the holder, and no conversion need ever be made unless the owner of the bonds desires to make the exchange.

There are so many splendid bonds at attractive prices and high yield that are considered most conservative today that for the present we do not advise the purchase of convertible bonds. We wish again to point out the importance of choosing a reputable investment house, because it is a fact that the safety of investments you make depends largely upon the firm with which you do business.

WHAT is a municipal bond? Every city is in effect a gigantic business enterprise, conducted, in theory at least, according to the laws that govern less public corporations. When any corporation desires officially to extend the field of its endeavor it is permissible under the law for it to borrow money for the purpose, issuing its written promise to pay. And so in the case of a city or town, when it desires to make some large economic improvement, it may borrow money and issue its promise to pay in the form of bonds—pledging as security public works such as schools, waterworks, electric light plants, etc. Suppose you were to be asked to invest in the securities of some city or town, how could you be sure that such an investment would be safe?

There are three methods of assurance: one is to leave the matter to the judgment of some bond house with an unquestionable record. Another is to be guided by state laws which prohibit Savings Banks investing in any but certain municipal securities. The third is to make personal inquiry concerning the status of the bond issue in question.

It would seem to most of us that this type of bond has a much higher degree of safety than corporate bonds, yet there are many factors to be considered in determining the safety of a municipal issue. This is particularly the case with small municipalities which have felt the effect of a boom, or are preparing for one. Most bond houses pay large salaries to experts who can accurately judge the value of a bond issue for small cities and towns. These men are not swayed by the natural enthusiasm of the eager townsman but make a most searching inquiry not only of the visible security behind the issue itself but as to the population, the character of the citizens, the progress made since its incorporation, its railroad and water facilities, the political character of the administration issuing the bonds, even whether or not there is a tendency toward municipal ownership. These are some of the things a prospective bond purchaser should know if he desires to be sure of his investment.

If you ask your bond house about it you will be able to obtain the minute statistics, because a reliable house can not afford to be other than absolutely sure of the issue itself. Such a house will have found means to ascertain all about the tax valuation of the city, town, county or school district in question and this valuation will include all taxable property and assets which may be owned in the form of waterworks, lighting plants and available sinking funds. We are not recommending the bonds of foreign cities.

THE negro population in New York is greater than in any other city in the world.

Double Your Income Get 8%, with safety assured

You will find Miller Bonds a thoroughly safe investment, because they are backed by first mortgage security, and are issued only on income earning, non-speculative, fireproof properties in prosperous localities. An ample Sinking Fund provides that all payments will be made regularly. There are people in your locality who are already investing in Miller Bonds. Ask us to put you in touch with them.

$100 Bonds, $500 Bonds, $1000 Bonds
To Yield 8%

Interest payable twice yearly
Partial payment accounts invited

G. L. MILLER & CO.

625 HURT BUILDING ATLANTA, GA.

"First—The Investor's Welfare"

Do you know what happens when you deposit money in your savings bank? Simply this; your money is in turn invested by the bank at a higher rate of interest than the bank pays you. By investing direct in securities such as a bank holds, you not only get the safety of money in the bank, but you double your interest income, because you are pocketing the commission that your bank ordinarily earns. By investing in Miller Bonds, your money will earn a full 8% instead of 3% or 4% in the bank.

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY

G. L. MILLER & COMPANY
625 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Gentlemen:—Please send me copies of "Selecting Your Investments", "What People Say About Miller Bonds" and "Every Man His Own Savings Bank". Please submit your recommendations covering an investment of approximately $ without obligating me in any way.

Name

Address

City and State

Investment Securities

December List on Request

CLARK WILLIAMS & Co.

Investment Securities

160 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Telephone Cortland 3694-3698

6% Paid For
27 Years

This old, conservative Company has paid 6% on Two-Year Time Certificates for 27 years. All its investments are made in first mortgages on improved real estate—the safest security in the world—and its Certificates are always at par. Interest checks mailed semi-annually, or quarterly if desired.

If you have $25 or more to invest, write for our booklet, "6% and Safety."

THE CALVERT MORTGAGE CO.
863 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

WHO SUPPLIES HOSPITALS,

Prisons, Hotels, Needy Homes with the Bible also immigrants, sailors and in raised type for the blind? YOU may help by sending your donation.

Every kind of Bible for sale, Scofield, Oxford, Bagster, Cambridge, Holman, Nelson, at special discounts.

Write us about Annuity Bonds.

NEW YORK BIBLE SOCIETY

5 EAST 48TH ST. (112TH YEAR) NEW YORK

Write for this Booklet

It tells how to receive a generous income for life: regular, unchangeable, non-taxable Investment absolutely safe. Your money helps a Christian enterprise.

Write for Booklet 7

American Bible Society
25 Bible House
Astor Place, New York

KIDDER PEABODY & COMPANY

115 DEVONSHIRE STREET
BOSTON

FOUNDED 1865

18 BROAD STREET
NEW YORK

216 BERKELEY STREET
BOSTON

BRANCH OFFICES

45 EAST 42nd STREET
NEW YORK

GOVERNMENT BONDS
INVESTMENT SECURITIES
FOREIGN EXCHANGE
LETTERS OF CREDIT

CORRESPONDENTS OF
BARING BROTHERS & COMPANY, Ltd.
LONDON, ENGLAND

35 STORIES OF FAMOUS AMERICAN AUTHORS

THE PUBLISHERS CHARGED $5.00 FOR THIS SET. WE SEND IT POSTPAID FOR $2.50. SOLD ONLY IN SETS, OF SIX CLOTH BOUND VOLUMES.

Many thousands of these excellent sets were sold at higher prices.

VOLUME ONE

- 1 The Transferred Ghost, by Frank R. Stockton.
- 2 A Martyr to Science, by Mary Putnam Jacobi, M.D.
- 3 Mrs. Knollys, by J. S. of Dale, author of "Guernsey."
- 4 A Dinner Party, by John Eddy.
- 5 The Mount of Sorrow, by Harriet Prescott Spofford.
- 6 Sister Sylvia, by Mary Agnes Tinker.

VOLUME TWO

- 7 The Spider's Eye, by Lucretia P. Hale.
- 8 A Story of the Latin Quarter, by Frances Hodgson Burnett.
- 9 Two Pursé-Companions, by George Parsons Lathrop.
- 10 Poor Ogla-Moga, by David D. Lloyd.
- 11 A Memorable Murder, by Celia Thaxter.
- 12 Venetian Glass, by Brander Matthews.

VOLUME THREE

- 13 Miss Grief, by Constance Fenimore Woolson.
- 14 Love in Old Clothes, by H. C. Bunner.
- 15 Two Buckets in a Well, by N. P. Willis.
- 16 Friend Barton's Concern, by Mary Hallock Foote.
- 17 An Inspired Lobbyist, by J. W. De Forest.

VOLUME FOUR

- 18 Lost in the Fog, by Noah Brooks.
- 19 A Light Man, by Henry James.
- 20 Yatil, by F. D. Millet.
- 21 The End of New York, by Park Benjamin.
- 22 Why Thomas Was Discharged, by George Arnold.
- 23 The Thachypomp, by E. P. Mitchell.

VOLUME FIVE

- 24 The Bishop's Vagabond, by Octave Thanet.
- 25 Lost, by Edward Bellamy.
- 26 Kirby's Coals of Fire, by Louise Stockton.
- 27 Passages from the Journal of a Social Wreck, by Margaret Floyd.
- 28 Stella Grayland, by James T. McKay.
- 29 The Image of San Donato, by Virginia W. Johnson.

VOLUME SIX

- 30 Marse Chan, by Thomas Nelson Page.
- 31 Mr. Bixby's Christmas Visitor, by Charles S. Gage.
- 32 Eli, by C. H. White.
- 33 Young Strong of "The Clarion," by Millicent Washburn Shinn.
- 34 How Old Wiggins Wore Ship, by Captain Roland T. Coffin.
- 35 "—Mas Has Come," by Leonard Kip.

Every home should have a set of Eleanor H. Porter's Best Works

IN FOUR VOLUMES, CLOTH BINDING

NOW SOLD IN ANOTHER EDITION FOR $8.00. WE SEND THIS SET, POSTPAID, FOR $4.00. SOLD ONLY IN SETS.

Into countless thousands of homes the stories of Eleanor H. Porter have come as harbingers of sunshine and gladness. Wherever the English language is spoken, men and women have grown to recognize her supreme gift. As one woman wrote from a little mountain village in Kentucky, "More than any one else, Mrs. Porter gives back to us the joy of knowing that this is a beautiful world."

57 SPLENDID STORIES

By A GREAT AUTHOR

VOLUME ONE

"The Tie That Binds"

contains

- 1 The Cat and the Painter
- 2 The Heart of a Hunchback
- 3 Polly's Christmas Surprise
- 4 Nuts to Crack and Mary Ellen
- 5 To Let—An Apartment
- 6 Her Wedding Journey
- 7 The Subjugation of Joan
- 8 A Matter of Loyalty
- 9 Jack
- 10 A Woman You Know
- 11 Escorting Harriet
- 12 A Case of the Inevitable
- 13 The Angel of Peace and Billy
- 14 The Second Fiddle
- 15 A Quarantined Quarrel
- 16 A White Rose
- 17 The Squaring of Mr. Jack
- 18 Loosed

VOLUME TWO

"The Tangled Threads"

contains

- 19 A Delayed Heritage
- 20 The Folly of Wisdom
- 21 Crumbs
- 22 A Four-Footed Faith and Two
- 23 A Matter of System
- 24 Angelus
- 25 The Apple of Her Eye
- 26 A Mushroom of Collingsville
- 27 The Angel Boy
- 28 The Lady in Black
- 29 The Saving of Dad
- 30 Millionaire Mike's Thanksgiving
- 31 When Mother Fell Ill
- 32 The Glory and the Sacrifice
- 33 The Daltons and the Legacy

These four volumes give a fine selection of stories for any home library. Order a set now while the opportunity is before you. We cannot make another edition at so low a price. While the balance of the special edition lasts we will send a four volume cloth bound set prepaid for $4.00.

The CHRISTIAN HERALD, Book Dept.
Bible House, New York

Young People's Topics for Dec. 11

By REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

Points in the Pledge We Are Likely to Neglect

C. E. and B. Y. P. U. Luke 9: 57-62

THE story of those who would follow Jesus Christ after personal aims had been attended to. What has that to do with our pledge? This, a pledge, is a vow of loyalty, fidelity, consistency. We have promised to do certain things and it is our word of honor that is at stake if we fail. The points we are prone to forget are the loyalty and fidelity that is expected from us. This involves many things. Some of them are: Attendance at the meetings of the society, the earnest preparation of the topic, lending our assistance in making our organization efficient, putting first things first. We may not be able to do very much, but everybody is able to do what he or she can do. "Every little bit helps." "The kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed." That is to say it has humble beginnings. It is resultant from apparently insignificant and seemingly unimportant circumstances. The instances which might be adduced to prove on what small points large results hang are innumerable. Says a recent writer: "In science, in politics, in education, in religion, there are no little things. Great minds have always recognized this fact. The whole realm of nature asserts it. From a small variation of temperature in the upper regions, storms and hurricanes result. A slight change in the direction of the earth's axis would alter the character of the seasons and send us back into the glacial period of perpetual ice and frost. So with the mysterious providences of human life which affect the subtle springs of our higher nature. There is no chance occurrence in either the natural or spiritual world."

The pledge of the B. Y. P. U. and C. E. means that we seek the New Testament standard of Christian Experience and Life. And there is no way of knowing the New Testament standard unless we read it. Herein we find the final word on every vital subject. It speaks with the final words of authority of the sacredness of the Sabbath Day, about helping others in the wide field of world evangelism and about being faithful to the duties to which we are assigned. Hear what others have to say about pledge-keeping, which in our case is obedience to New Testament principles and procedure:

"A Christian must be a profitable servant, an effective soldier, a loving savior. Group strength is the only form of strength sufficient to solve the problems or overcome the evils of the world. An isolated man is impotent."—Charles Jefferson.

"The only perfect example of a sober mind is Jesus Christ. It takes 'a sober mind' to keep a pledge amid the many downpullings of life. Let us keep close touch to him who will help us think and act soberly." Quoted from Young People's Service, which also states:

"The Young People's pledge is not an unchangeable one. It may vary with the local societies, but the pledge originally written is the one desirable, and generally recommended. Your pledge should be a prominent feature and in accepting new members should be signed by them. It ought to be read at every meeting, or, better, should be learned and recited in concert at each meeting. Many of the younger members have never heard the pledge."

Epworth Herald Day

E. L.

MAKE this a Good Literature Service. Here are some topics for discussion: "Christianity and Good Literature." "Our Denomination as a Publishing Medium." "The Holy Spirit and Current Events." "Can the Doctor, the Lawyer, or the Teacher Afford to Neglect Reading Along the Lines of Their Profession?" Have this question discussed briefly and then by the laws of the same logic have it discussed whether the Christian can neglect to read the Church papers.

Here is an outline: The Church paper furnishes three things to its readers—Food, it brings nourishment for one's spiritual life and quickening and inspiration to the mental life; air, it brings a Christian atmosphere into the home and discusses current events from the Christian standpoint; exercise, it incites the powers and energy of the reader to activity. The opportunities for service are laid before the eye and an outlet for capabilities and energy is suggested. It induces in the reader the will to work. (This outline is borrowed from the Good Literature Day folder of the M. E. Church.)

The Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

IT HAS been a time of bountiful answers to prayers, and fifty-two members of the Prayer League have written in to acknowledge the granting of their petitions. For the encouragement of others, an Ohio member says: "I thank God that He does hear and answer us. A backslider (never thoroughly converted) in rebellion against God—I was convicted of my sins and, in deep remorse of conscience for my unfaithfulness and broken vows, determined to return to my Father's house if He would forgive me and help me to get back; from henceforth to give willing obedience; to abide in Him and He in me. Now having the assurance of His presence and communion with Him, I can not doubt His love. It seems a miracle that His Spirit has thus quickened mine and taught my heart to love Christ and His Church. May the healing power of grace continue to abound toward me and all whose lives are as unsatisfactory as mine was."

W. L. C., Florida, writes: "I am thankful for Divine healing of a weakened, leaky heart when the physicians gave me up to die. The faithful compliance with the prescription as recorded by James 5: 14, 15 gave me if possible a better heart than I ever had, about four years ago. I am now in my eighty-fifth year and I have a sister in her eighty-first year who has paralysis in her left side. Please pray for her healing for His name's sake and glory."

V. E. G., New York, writes: "I wish to acknowledge many wonderful but certain answers to prayers offered in the League for me. I have been seriously ill since a year ago last March. I gave my case into God's hands and reminded Him that as His child, I trusted everything to Him, for He was responsible for my care. I was living alone, having retired from teaching after forty years' work in the public schools of Massachusetts. The very day that I broke down so as to be unable to take care of myself, God sent my niece to visit me. She couldn't stay to care for me, because she had two little children at home, so she proposed taking me home with her and caring for me instead of for her mother whom God had taken to a Heavenly Home. Now I have a home with this niece and God surely led me here."

A. B., Pennsylvania, writes: "I desire to give public expression of my gratitude to God for healing a recent serious affection which deprived me of my sense of hearing. He heard and answered prayer and sent quick relief, for which I praise His Holy Name through our Lord, Jesus Christ."

The following general requests have been received from members: For health, 232; conversion, 154; financial aid, 37; forgiveness, 13; faith, 28; bad habits, 18; reunion, 4; reconciliation, 15; employment, 15.

Reality and Mystery

Continued from page 886

only trace an infinitesimal part of a segment, the rest of the track is closed. How does God renew thy spirit by relating it to new springs? Thou canst not tell. How does God renew the perverted will? Thou canst not tell. How does God refresh the faded emotions? Thou canst not tell. How does God rekindle the smoking and smouldering conscience? How? How? How? And intellect can not get the answers which make the circle luminous.

And therefore intellect is inclined to say, "It is all delusion, pathetic and tragical." But she would not so speak of the first life. Her inability to explain does not discredit the experience. Life precedes light. "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." One thing I know, the wind is blowing! I hear it! I feel it! I am sure of it! But whence it cometh and whither it goeth, I can not tell, I can wait: "Now I know in part, but then shall I know, even as also I am known." Meanwhile "for me to live is Christ."

Let us take the counsels of the Master to another mystery, the mystery of divine companionship. And what is that? It is enshrined in the promise of the Master, "I am with you all the days." Here is a Friend who is always on the road. What kind of a road? Every sort of road. Through the green pastures and by the still waters! By the steep and rugged paths of righteousness! Through the valley of the shadow of death! Through landscapes crimson with the rose of Sharon! Through the trackless desert where the carrion eagle screams! Along the shining way to the marriage altar! Along the dripping way to the grave! The Friend is on every road.

And that Presence is to millions of people a wonderful reality. They have the impressive sense of a strong and chivalrous Companion. "But warm, sweet, tender, even yet a present help is He." He brings comfort when the roads are flinty. He bathes the bleeding feet. He imparts strength for fine ventures. He gives courage when the horizon is gloomy with the menace of the cross. "I will not leave thee nor forsake thee."

HE IS the great Friend on the road. Is it a reality? Yes, indeed. "Did not our hearts burn within us when He talked to us by the way?" Is it a mystery? Yes, indeed. But reason stands abashed if she seeks to explain away an earthly friendship. And the simpler the friendship, the more difficult it is to give it intellectual analysis. And so with this supreme Friendship of the Lord. My understanding can not trace its means and its processes. Its treasures can not be transferred to any intellectual laboratory. It passeth understanding. But the wind bloweth! I hear it! I feel it! I know it! "And His that gentle voice I hear, soft as the breath of even." "I know Him Whom I have believed."

Honor the experimental faculties of your being as well as the faculty of reason. Give high place and office to your instincts, your intuitions, your affections, your faith, your hope. Follow the path of the noblest assumption. Fling yourself in the way of your faith, and follow it with the strength of a consecrated venture. Offer your life to the Saviour-hood and governance of Christ. Do it as a sacred act of dedication, do it as a simple act of will. Let it be as an act in which you solemnly surrender your life to the highest. And you shall surely hear the wind that bloweth where it listeth.

THE phenomenon of red snow has attracted much attention from visitors to the Rocky Mountain National Park, and scientists offer an unusual explanation. It is that the great masses of color are due to countless billions of a tiny organism, which have the power of movement and growth and possess characteristics of both the animal and vegetable kingdoms. This microscopic plant is essentially an Arctic species and is found at high altitudes.

You Can Win $1,000

Extra Puzzle Pictures
Free on Request

Our NO-SEAM
Combination
Hot Water Bottle and Fountain Syringe

OBSERVE THESE RULES

1. Any person residing outside of Minneapolis, who is not an employee of the W. M. Rubber Co., may submit an answer. It costs nothing to try.
2. All answers must be mailed by December 30th, 1921.
3. Answers should be written on one side of the paper only and words numbered 1, 2, 3, etc. Write your full name and address on each page in the upper right hand corner. If you desire to write anything else, use a separate sheet.
4. Only words found in the English dictionary will be counted. Do not use hyphenated, compound or obsolete words. Use either the singular or plural, but where the plural is used the singular can not be counted, and vice versa.
5. Words of the same spelling can be used only once, even though used to designate different objects. The same object can be named only once. However, any part of the object may also be named.
6. The answer having the largest and nearest correct list of names of visible objects shown in the picture that begin with the letter "B" will be awarded first prize, etc. Neatness, style or handwriting have no bearing upon deciding the winners.
7. Candidates may co-operate in answering the puzzle, but only one prize will be awarded to any one household; nor will prizes be awarded to more than one of any group outside of the family where two or more have been working together.
8. There will be three independent judges having no connection with the W. M. Rubber Co., who will judge the answers submitted and award the prizes at the end of the contest, and participants agree to accept the decision of the judges as final and conclusive. The following three registered Minnesota school teachers, now teaching in the public schools of St. Paul, Minn., have agreed to act as judges of this unique competition: Miss Mable Claire Kline, Miss Meta Goetsche, Miss Laura Johnson.
9. All answers will receive the same consideration regardless of whether or not a W. M. Rubber Bag is purchased.
10. The announcement of the prize winners and the correct list of words will be printed at the close of the contest and a copy mailed to each person purchasing a Hot Water Bottle.

ANSWER THIS PUZZLE—CASH PRIZES GIVEN

How many objects in the picture above begin with the letter "B"? For instance there is a boy, broom, basket, etc., and all the other objects are equally clear. See who can find the most. Fifteen cash prizes will be paid for the 15 best lists of words submitted in answer to this puzzle. The person sending in the largest and nearest correct list of words shown in this picture starting with the letter "B" will win first prize; second best, second prize, etc.

Right after dinner this evening, gather all the members of your family together, give each of them a pencil and a sheet of paper, and see who can find the most "B" words. We venture to say you will never have as much fun. You will be surprised to find how large a list of words you can get after a few minutes' study. Sit down and try it—then send in your list and try for the big prizes.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY—EVERYBODY JOIN IN

You don't need to send in a penny to win. This is an advertising campaign to increase the popularity of our Famous "No-Seam" Combination Hot Water Bottle and Fountain Syringe. As a reward for boosting our goods, we are making this special offer, whereby you can win LARGE CASH PRIZES by purchasing ONE or TWO of our "No-Seam" Hot Water Bottles.

YOU CAN WIN $1,000.00

If your answer is awarded first prize by the judges, you will win $200.00, but if you would like to win more than $200.00, we are making some special cash prize offers during the Big Advertising and Booster Campaign, whereby you can win more than $200.00 by sending in an order for one or two of our "No-Seam" Hot Water Bottles.

Here's the Plan If your answer wins first prize and you have purchased ONE of our $3.00 Water Bottles you will receive $300 at your prize, instead of $20; second prize, $150; third prize, $75, etc. Or, if your answer wins first prize and you have purchased TWO hot water bottles (in all $6.00), you will receive $1,000 as your prize, instead of $250, etc.

Although it is not necessary to send in an order with your answer, yet every home should have one or two of our "No-Seam" Combination Hot Water Bottles. In case of sickness they are indispensable, and the syringe attachment makes it doubly useful. Made of the highest grade red rubber, molded in one piece; it has no seams and will not leak.

Note the Low Price

Our "No-Seam" Combination Hot Water Bottle and Fountain Syringe is an excellent value for the money. Only $3.00 for the complete outfit, including all attachments.

Two Bags for $6.00

Our Guarantee

We guarantee our "No-Seam" Combination Hot Water Bags and Fountain Syringe not to leak. If the bag leaks, or the fittings become imperfect, we will replace the bag free of charge any time within one year.

THE PRIZES

Winning answers will receive prizes as follows:

| | If no bags are purchased | If ONE $3 bag is purchased | If TWO $3 bags are purchased |
|---------------|--------------------------|-----------------------------|-------------------------------|
| 1st prize... | $200.00 | $300.00 | $1,000.00 |
| 2nd prize... | 100.00 | 150.00 | 500.00 |
| 3rd prize... | 50.00 | 75.00 | 250.00 |
| 4th prize... | 25.00 | 50.00 | 125.00 |
| 5th prize... | 15.00 | 30.00 | 75.00 |
| 6th prize... | 10.00 | 20.00 | 50.00 |
| 7th prize... | 5.00 | 15.00 | 40.00 |
| 8th prize... | 3.00 | 10.00 | 20.00 |
| 9th prize... | 2.00 | 10.00 | 20.00 |
| 10th prize... | 2.00 | 10.00 | 20.00 |
| 11th prize... | 2.00 | 10.00 | 20.00 |
| 12th prize... | 2.00 | 10.00 | 20.00 |
| 13th prize... | 2.00 | 10.00 | 20.00 |
| 14th prize... | 2.00 | 10.00 | 20.00 |
| 15th prize... | 2.00 | 10.00 | 20.00 |

In case of ties, duplicate prizes will be given

W.-M. RUBBER CO. 218 SIXTH AVENUE, NORTH MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

AGENTS—STEADY INCOME Large manufacturer of Handkerchiefs and Dress Goods, etc., wishes representative in each locality. Factory to consumer. Big profits, honest goods. Whole or spare time. Credit given. Send for particulars. FREEMAN MFG. CO., 77 Main St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE RICHEST MAN IN KANSAS is Dr. Charles M. Sheldon's new book. It is a dramatic story and a test of character. Post-paid for 60c a copy. The Christian Herald New York

A DELIGHTFUL CHRISTMAS GIFT—Distinctive Unique Pleasing

THREE PENCILS in beautiful embossed genuine leather case with your name engraved in 18 karat Gold on pencils and case. Stamps accepted. 60 cents THE IMPRINT PENCIL COMPANY, 530 Broadway, New York, N.Y.

The little matter of 15 cts. (coin or stamps) will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is a cheerful illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center for people everywhere; an independent home paper that tells the story of the world's news in an interesting, understandable way. Now in its 29th year. This splendid National weekly supplies a long-felt want; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to know what is going on in the world, this is your best means. If you want a paper in your home which is reliable and wholesome; if you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, wholesomely, entertainingly, briefly—here it is. Splendid serial and short stories and miscellany. The Question Box Answers YOUR questions and is a mine of information. Send 15 cts. to show that you might like such a paper and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15 cents does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Try it for 13 weeks. Address: The Pathfinder, 619 Langdon St., Washington, D.C.

Are You A Vegetarian?

NATURE places in fruits and vegetables certain elements which help to keep the human body healthy. Those who eat an abundance of such foods seldom suffer from indigestion, sour stomach, biliousness, constipation, headaches, and the endless train of distressing symptoms which such disorders cause.

You may not always be able to choose your diet carefully or to avail yourself of the benefits of a scientifically-selected variety of foods, but you can give your system the benefit of the same vegetable laxative properties contained in vegetable foods.

Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) is made entirely of concentrated vegetable ingredients which are therapeutically the same as Nature furnishes in the most healthful of foods. That is why millions of persons use this pure, mild, natural aid to health in preference to anything else.

Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) does more than a laxative. It tones the stomach, increases the assimilation and elimination, helps to cleanse, purify and enrich the blood by aiding nature to re-establish the vigorous and harmonious functioning which makes the body feel like new.

All Druggists Sell

The Dainty
25c. Box
of
NR Tablets

Used for over 30 years

Chips off the Old Block

NR JUNIORS—Little NRs
One-third of regular dose. Made of same ingredients, then candy-coated. For children and adults. Have you tried them? Send a 2c. stamp for postage on liberal sample in the attractive blue and yellow box. A. H. LEWIS MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

RODEHEAVER PUBLICATIONS

VICTORY SONGS

Our great gospel song book prepared under direction of our Mr. Homer Rodeheaver—unsurpassed for general church and religious purposes. 288 pages of choice music—70 new songs. PRICE REDUCED to 25c. manila—30c. limp—40c. cloth, in quantities not prepaid. Single copies—30c. manila—35c. limp and 45c. cloth, postpaid.

AWAKENING SONGS, 265 pages; 198 songs for service, 198 pages. Same rates as Victory Songs.

JOYFUL PRAISE, 128 pgs., adapted to all religious services, 25c. limp—20c. manila postpaid single copies; 20c. limp, 15c. manila, not prepaid in quantities.

RAINBOW SACRED RECORDS—85c. each. Ask for list. Write for complete catalog.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY

633 McClurg Bldg.
Chicago, Ill.

Dept. 1, 814 Walnut St.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Restore Those Silver Threads

These disfiguring gray streaks which make you look a hundred years old—comb them away with Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer. Mail coupon for free trial bottle and test on single lock. This proves it.

No danger of streaking or discoloration—nothing to wash or rub off. Leaves your hair soft, fluffy, lovely to curl and dress. Restoration complete in 4 to 8 days, whether your gray hairs are many or few.

Fill out coupon carefully—enclose lock if possible. Trial bottle and application comb come by return mail. Full sized bottle at your druggist or direct from us. Don't risk ruining your hair with cheap substitutes.

Mary T. Goldman, 971 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.

Mary T. Goldman, 971 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.

Please send me your FREE trial bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer with special comb. I am not obligated in any way by accepting this free offer.

The natural color of my hair is black...jet black...dark brown...medium brown...light brown...

Name.....

Street.....Town.....

Co.....State.....

OUR MAIL-BAG

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters, nor to those written with the lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

MISSIONARY WILLIAM C. TERRIL, of the M. E. Mission, Inhambane, East Africa, writes to the Christian Herald: "You will be pleased to know that our work for the lepers at Inhambane will soon be enlarged. A year or two ago, I reported to you that two lepers had undergone treatments with chaulmoogra oil and after two years were discharged. It will be three years, the coming Christmas since they were dismissed from the camp, and to the present there has not been the least signs of the disease returning. This has so encouraged us that we have now ten lepers in the camp undergoing the treatment. The estimated number of lepers at Inhambane is 20,000. Nothing is being done for them, other than what our Mission does, and then for ten only! The others are running the streets and roads. Another problem at Inhambane is the aggressiveness of the Moslems. The leaders have learned from Christian missions how to reach the African. In Mohammedan worship there is no singing, except perhaps once a year at the feast of the birth of Mohammed. Yet to reach the African, they have now adopted singing as part of their religious worship. Also in Mohammedan teachings there is no provision for the education of women and girls. Yet, because Christian missions have schools for women and girls, the Moslems are opening schools for that purpose."

W. M. L., Weaverville, N. C. Your lines on the Bible books are excellent, and we regret that they did not reach us sooner. Unfortunately, the subject has now been announced as closed.

B. E., San Antonio, Tex., writes: "Total disarmament is one of the best means to secure the longevity of any nation. The Scriptures herein referred to might be written out and used among those interested also among the delegates to the Armament Conference, and probably most of them are from so-called Christian countries similar to our own. Disobedience to God will shorten life. God is against warring and against preparing for war; Gen. 4:8-12; Gen. 9:5, 6; Gen. 42:22; Exod. 20:13, 21:12, 14; Lev. 24:17; Num. 35:16-34; Deut. 5:17; 19:11-13; II Sam. 12:9-12; II Sam. 16:7, 8; 21:1; I Kings 2:5; 32, 33; 5:3-5; I Chron. 22:8; 28:3; II Chron. 16:9; Psa. 5:6; 9:12; 20:7-9; 33:16-18; 37:14, 15; 44:6; 51:14; 55:23; 59:7; 68:30; 139:19, 20; 140:1-13; 147:10, 11; Prov. 1:10-19; 12:6, 7; 21:31; 29:10; Eccles. 9:18; Isa. 1:15-17; 2:3-5; 3:25; 15:9; 17:12-14; 21:2-4; 26:21; 33:1, 15, 16; 34:1-3, 5-8; 36:5; 49:26; 59:1-4; Jer. 2:34; 48:14; Ezek. 9:9; 16:38-41; 22:1-6; 24:6-11; 30:21; 32:27; 33:25-29; 35:3-11; 36:18; Hosea 1:4, 7; 4:1-3; 6:7, 8; Micah 4:3; 7:1-3; Nahum 3:1; Hab. 2:12; Matt. 5:21, 19:18; 22:7; 26:52; Mark 10:19; Luke 18:20; Rom. 1:28-30; 3:9-15; Gal. 5:20, 21; James 2:11; I Pet. 4:15; I John 3:12, 15; Rev. 13:10; 16:5, 6; 21:8 and 22:15."

J. M., Cleveland, O. The popular movement among the churches in support of the Conference is by no means confined to the United States. Word has been received that the Christian Churches of China are praying for the success of the Peace and Disarmament Conference; that 300,000 Christian converts in Japan are also praying with the same object in view, and that in Switzerland, France and Italy the Protestant Churches especially are doing the same. They want "nothing short of universal peace," and in their petitions earnestly emphasize the desire that the outcome of the Conference may be in line with the teachings of Jesus, and that they may prove a mighty help in establishing the Kingdom of God on earth.

A. M., Solomon, Kan. You are doing well. A Teachers' Bible would help you greatly in your class work. In the Christian Herald every week you will find the regular International Sunday School Lesson discussed in advance for the use of teachers. Why not get your class in line with a host of other Sunday School classes, who are studying the life of Paul—one of the most remarkable lives in New Testament history.

E. S., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Perhaps in your widely read paper you could call attention to the training other than mental that our children and young people receive. Many of our youth are doing well in every way. Some are doing nobly! Some, in their renunciation of the world, have the spirit that glorified the martyrs. But we also have the unstable, the worldly, the selfish, even, alas! those who are dishonest, undutiful and immoral. Would such conditions exist among the young, if they were taught in the impressionable years, when we have them under teachers in our public schools, the seven virtues: fortitude—hope, patience, purity, veneration for everything that is good?"

It is only too true that the present system of education, as a whole, does not tend to develop moral and spiritual character in the young. This is being much discussed today, but thus far no adequate remedy has been suggested.

A Subscriber in Harbor Springs, Mich., sends us a very interesting letter, from which (although he says he does not intend it for publication) we make—with his permission we hope—a few extracts. He asks: "Have we as a nation and as individuals been wasteful? Why should there be 5,000,000 people out of employment? 'There's a reason.' Millions and millions in gold coming to us from Europe, and Uncle Sam doing some hard scratching to meet necessary expenses. Did we manufacture, sell or furnish war material to our neighbor nations? While international law does permit this, yet is it right? Then what about international law? Is it based on God's law? If not, is it any wonder we are paying a penalty? War is even worse than senseless waste. I believe the leading nations could compel peace if they all wished to do so. It seems to me the calling of a Peace Conference is a hopeful sign. Let us hope that something may be accomplished, and that Christian people might have a clearer vision and more reliance on God. Surely we would not be asking amiss to pray for His presence at that Conference. May His Spirit hover over it and guide it in all its deliberations. Honest convictions from an honest heart should not give offense to honest people. In all my life, I have met only two men who said they made no mistakes, and would you believe it, one of them was a Presbyterian minister, and I was a member of his congregation? I told him he had made one mistake—in saying what he did."

J. M. R., Jacksonville, Fla. Washington at Valley Forge, and Foch on the battlefields of France, during the crisis of the great war, both demonstrated in the fervency of their prayers their firm trust in divine direction. History relates how Washington frequently sought the seclusion of the woods for his devotions. Foch, as correspondents have written, was on his knees "alone with God" sometimes for an hour. By the power of prayer both received strength and faith that the right would triumph. Both represented the highest type of the praying soldier. David was probably the greatest praying warrior known to history. See his wonderful prayer and song in II Samuel, chapter 22.

A. W. H., S. Car., tells of an outing which should contain a suggestion worth the attention of Sunday school superintendents. She writes: "One summer day recently, one of our Sunday schools went in a body of four hundred by a special train, to the orphanage of their denomination. Each family carried a large basket of dinner. They spread it out at the orphanage grounds, fed all the orphans, and left the surplus of the dinner, which was enough for all the inmates, for supper. A class of our young men has a fund in the bank for the poor. They have recently paid a nurse, in a poor home, during sickness."

A., Petersburg, N. J., writes: "Where I live is three miles from any church, and often the weather is inclement for walking the six miles. It is then that the Home Service and Meditations in the Christian Herald are my solace. For three years, rain or shine, wet or dry, snow or mud, the weather has rarely kept me from trudging the long jaunt to the Sunday and midweek service."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by the Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President; Rae D. Henkle, Secretary.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittance should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE—For copies mailed to Canada, add fifty cents; outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price. Canadian remittances accepted at par.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least three weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. For example, Dec. 21 signifies that subscription expires with the last issue of December 21st.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Copyright, 1921, the Christian Herald.

Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y.

Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post-Office Department, Ottawa, Canada.

DEAF?

Hearing Is Believing

Though nearly 500,000 who are hard of hearing are now enthusiastic users of the Acousticon because it has enabled them to hear clearly, this is not conclusive proof that it will make you hear. But it should be encouraging enough to warrant your giving the

1922 Acousticon

10 Days FREE TRIAL
No Deposit—No Expense

All you need to do is to say that you will try the Acousticon. The test in your own home, amid familiar surroundings, will cost nothing, for we even pay delivery charges.

WARNING! There is no good reason why everyone should not make as liberal a trial offer as we do, so why send money for any instrument for the deal until you have tried it. But remember, the "Acousticon" has improvements and patented features which cannot be duplicated, so no matter what you have tried in the past send for your free trial of the "Acousticon" today and convince yourself—you alone to decide.

DICTOGRAPH PRODUCTS CORP.
1314 Candler Bldg., 220 W. 42nd St., New York City

Seven-year-old Albert Albin's Club Foot was so straight that he surprised everybody when he came home from McLain Sanitarium. His parents write: "Albert's foot is in good shape. He is walking on two good feet. We are certainly proud of him and also the McLain Sanitarium. You certainly do great work. Everybody says it is more than they expected to see."

Mr. and Mrs. G. D. ALBIN,
235 Milton St., Rensselaer, Ind.

For Crippled Children

The McLain Sanitarium is a thoroughly equipped private institution devoted exclusively to the treatment of Club Feet, Infantile Paralysis, Spinal Disease and Deformities, Wry Neck, Hip Disease, Diseases of the Joints, especially as found in children and young adults. Our book, "Deformities and Paralysis," also "Book of References" sent free.

L. C. McLAIN ORTHOPEDIC SANITARIUM
923 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it. Conserve your body and life first.

The Natural Body Brace

Overcomes WEAKNESS and ORGANIC AILMENTS of WOMEN and MEN. Develops erect, graceful figure. Brings restful relief, comfort, ability to do things, health and strength.

Wear It 30 Days Free at Our Expense

Does away with the strain and pain of standing and walking; replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens and strengthens the back; corrects stooping shoulders; develops lungs, chest and bust; relieves backache, curvatures, nervousness, ruptures, constipation, after effects of Flu. Comfortable and easy to wear.

Keep Yourself Fit

Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank, etc., and read our very liberal proposition. HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co. 171 Rash Building SALINA, KANSAS

Condensed List of Premium Offers for 1921-22

IN COMBINATION WITH THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

You may renew your subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD and receive special low prices on these excellent books, or you may order the books separately at the prices named when ordering the books singly.

THE FAMOUS CHRISTIAN HERALD RED LETTER BIBLE

The text is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and very durable, weighs only 20 ounces. It is bound in American Bible Leather, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, with silk ribbon marker.

PRINTED ON AMERICAN BIBLE PAPER

WHAT IS A RED LETTER BIBLE?

1. In the Old Testament the passages quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are PRINTED IN RED. 2. In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of the Saviour are PRINTED IN RED. 3. A Red Star (*) immediately following a verse in the Old Testament indicates that the verse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah. The Christian Herald Red Letter Bible contains 910 pages for the Old Testament, 284 pages for the New Testament, 32 pages Bible Readers' aids and helps, 16 maps in colors, 1251 total pages.

We send this Superb Bible, together with The Christian Herald for one whole year, both for..... $5⁰⁰
This Bible is sold separately, postpaid, for..... $3.50

PROPHECY EXPLAINED—By DR. GEO. H. PATCH

This is a wonderful book on Prophecy. It will be welcomed by Christian men and women everywhere. It brings solace and consolation and reassurance.

Dr. Patch has shed a flood of light on prophecy and especially on Revelation. His work cannot fail to be commended by Bible students and Christian people wherever the Bible is read and studied. It is the most important work we have ever published on Prophecy. All who are interested in the interpretation of Bible prophecy should read and study this remarkable work. Its publication was recommended to us by eminent students of Prophecy.

1 VOL. 12 MO. 480 PAGES. FINE CLOTH BINDING.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $3⁰⁰

We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $1.50

PRECIOUS BIBLE PROMISES—By DR. CLARKE, D.D.

Those who have little leisure for reading will find it invaluable in keeping this book always near them; and with the glance of an eye they may take in the riches of grace and glory, and derive many a sweet refreshment, amidst their labors and travels. It is of excellent use to lie on the table and now and then to take a sip of the river of life, which runs through it in a thousand little rills of peace and joy.—Dr. Watts.

1 VOL. 16 MO. CLOTH BINDING. 320 PAGES.

The demand for this excellent book is so great that we are continually printing and binding new editions in five thousand lots.

We send this book and the Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $2²⁵

We send the book separately in cloth binding, postpaid, for 60c

THE SCRIPTURE TEXT CALENDAR FOR 1922

COVER DESIGN IN COLORS

A reproduction of the famous painting, "Master, I Perish," is the principal feature of the cover design of the Scripture Text Calendar. By referring to the Scripture Text Calendar you can tell what the Sunday School Lesson will be for any Sunday in 1922.

TWELVE WORKS OF ART IN COLORS

JANUARY—Christ Healing the Sick Child.
FEBRUARY—Returning From Jerusalem.
MARCH—The Story of the Good Samaritan.
APRIL—He Is Risen.
MAY—Christ Teaching Little Children.
JUNE—The Son of a Carpenter.

JULY—Christ Going Through the Wheat Field.
AUGUST—Christ and the Fallen Woman.
SEPTEMBER—Jesus Sitting by the Sea of Galilee.
OCTOBER—The Rainbow Promise.
NOVEMBER—The Story of Jacob's Ladder.
DECEMBER—The Holy Night.

We send this fine Calendar and the Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $2²⁰
The Calendar sent separately, postpaid, for..... 35c

IN HIS STEPS—By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

IN FINE CLOTH BINDING

Every member of your family should read this wonderful book that has been translated into nineteen languages and been sold in editions numbering over 22,000,000 copies.

"The most widely read book of the last 200 years is "In His Steps," by Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, editor of The Christian Herald. It has sold more than twenty million copies, the largest sale of any book except the Bible and "Pilgrim's Progress."—The Publishers Weekly.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $3⁰⁰

We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $1.25

HEART STORIES—By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

Dr. Sandison says:

"Dr. Sheldon's new book, entitled, "Heart Stories," shows his wonderful versatility in depicting the spiritual life in its most interesting phases.

In these seven stories, six of which have never been published until now, the reader will find some of the most interesting themes—but the stories the reader must read for himself. The whole, delightfully and romantically told, is well adapted to reading in the family group. All admirers of Dr. Sheldon's world-famous book, "In His Steps," should read this new book." In the same binding as "IN HIS STEPS."

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $2⁵⁰

We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $1.25

THE RICHEST MAN IN KANSAS—By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

How would you feel and act if you were suddenly to be told that you had come into a big fortune over night? This is what happened to Anson Howard, whose remarkable experience Dr. Sheldon relates in his new story, "The Richest Man in Kansas." From an income of $125 a month, to cutting coupons on $10,000,000 worth of gilt-edged securities is a change so radical that it would turn most men's heads—to say nothing of their wives and daughters. Just what happened is vividly told in Dr. Sheldon's dramatic presentation. At no time in a man's life is there a stronger test of character than when Fortune knocks at the door. Some lose their bearings altogether. Read the book and see how Anson Howard and his folks stood the test.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $2³⁵

We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... 60c

CHILDREN'S STORIES FROM THE BIBLE

A book that has long been wanted. It is often forgotten that the Bible is the greatest story-book in the world, and that it is especially rich in stories about little folk or that have a special interest for children. The old, old stories are here charmingly retold in simple language by Blanche Winder. The illustrations are delightfully fresh and unconventional.

With 48 Plates in Color by HARRY G. THEAKER
Large Crown 8vo. Cloth. 344 pages.
Handsome Binding Design, with Pictorial Wrapper and Endpapers.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $3⁵⁰

We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $2.00

THE WONDER BOOK OF WHY & WHAT?

The most wonderful Wonder Book of all. It deals with many of the questions children are constantly asking on all sorts of subjects. There are hundreds of illustrations of entrancing interest, and the book is without a single dull page. The harassed parent will hail this book with as much delight as the youngsters.

Crown 4to. Picture Boards.
12 Plates in Color. 256 Pages. Over 300 Beautiful Illustrations.
Highly Educational.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $3⁵⁰

We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $2.00

The above list offers a fine selection for gift purposes for both old and young. Please send your orders early to avoid delay in delivery.

Many thousands of present CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have approved of these books and we feel confident that any of the offers will prove satisfactory to all who make a selection from them.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Columbia Grafonola

Give a Modern Phonograph This Christmas

Before you pay your good money for a phonograph, make sure you are getting a modern instrument.

At today's prices you can buy any latest Columbia Grafonola, with all the exclusive Columbia advantages, for less than you would pay for an older design of phonograph without any of these improvements.

After you have looked over all the others, just check up on a Grafonola at some Columbia store.

Present Prices:

Standard Models: $30, $45, $60, $85, $100, $125, $140, $150, $175

Period Designs from $335 up to $2100

COLUMBIA GRAPHOPHONE CO., NEW YORK

Canadian Branch: Toronto

Did you know that Bizet, his genius scorned and unrecognized, died of a broken heart at the utter failure of the first performance of Carmen?

Read it in

The Lure of Music
Published by Harper & Bros.
On sale at all Columbia Dealers and most book stores

CHRISTIAN HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

Algiers, the Gateway to North Africa

The Thick-Skinned Driver

You know him. You have suffered from his ways.

Your protests are like arrows against the armor of his thick, hippopotamus hide. Nothing but the steel-jacketed bullets of an indignant public opinion will make him realize that his slip-shod driving jeopardizes the life of everyone in his path.

The thick-skinned driver leaves Weed Tire Chains in the locker when careful drivers put them on their tires. The thick-skinned driver comes recklessly out of side streets; the thick-skinned driver cuts corners; the thick-skinned driver never inspects his brakes or steering gear; the thick-skinned driver does not signal before turning or stopping; the thick-skinned driver does not give a warning signal of his approach.

Let us get together. Let us mould the steel-jacketed bullets of public opinion that will pierce his thick skin; make him realize that he must consider the rights of motorists and pedestrians.

Maybe he has a conscience and the thick hide is thoughtlessness. Maybe he has only a sense of fear. The bullets can reach that too.

Show this to the thick-skinned driver. Let him choose his own class. And keep on the firing line till every human hippo who is muscle-bound above the ears, is driven from the road.

*This is a sequel to our famous advertisement: "The Slip-Shod Driver".
Reprints of both sent on request*

AMERICAN CHAIN COMPANY, INCORPORATED
BRIDGEPORT  CONNECTICUT

In Canada: Dominion Chain Company, Limited, Niagara Falls, Ontario

The Complete Chain Line—All Types, All Sizes, All Finishes—From Plumbers' Safety Chain to Ships' Anchor Chain
THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS OF CHAIN IN THE WORLD

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

(IN WHICH IS INCORPORATED WORLD OUTLOOK)
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

GRAHAM PATTERSON, PUBLISHER

The chiefs of the various delegations to the Washington Conference—Left to right are: John W. Garrett, Secretary General of the Conference; J. H. A. Van Kernebeek, Holland; Alfred Sze, China; Arthur J. Balfour, Britain; Charles E. Hughes, America; Premier Briand, France; Senator Schanzer, Italy; Baron de Cartier, Belgium; Prince Tokugawa, Japan; and Viscount d'Alte, Portugal

Conference Impressions

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

IN a great international gathering like the one at Washington, it is inevitable that every variety of mind should be present and that every possible angle should be shown towards the questions discussed. The pessimist is there ready and eager to throw cold water on all the program and prophesy failure to all negotiations, loud in press and with talk to prove that nothing would come of nothing.

The idealist is there, declaring that the millennium had come and all that is necessary now is to hold a love feast and buy a ticket for home, so as not to spend Christmas in a foreign land.

The cold and calculating diplomat is there with his European education and his utter disdain of any ethical or spiritual values, ready to bargain and negotiate and gamble and cheat and lie and intrigue, with no faith in any man's integrity or any nation's honesty.

The press correspondent is there not in a majority but a good minority of instances making copy for his paper where no news exists, and writing surmises and inferences and guesses one day that are promptly disproved the next.

The narrow-minded nationalist is there ready to ruin the entire program of world peace if only his country and his interests and his false patriotism can be advanced.

But all through this tangle of sorry human passion and selfishness and narrowness, there was and is and will be a vision in men's hearts of a better world at some time to be redeemed from national jealousies and national stupidity.

THE atmosphere of the Conference was, from the very first day of it, charged with more than human longing for national honor and rights. The prayers of Dr. Abernathy at the opening of the first open meeting expressed a great longing for divine leading:

"We pray for clear vision or we shall grope blindly for the light and lose our way. We pray for the forward look or we shall be overwhelmed in hopeless pessimism.

Out of the depths we cry unto Thee! Save us or we perish."

That does not sound like a godless beginning. That is not repetition of the Paris meeting.

The first important fact that many of the overseas visitors have not realized is the fact that the two men who are perhaps more than any others responsible for this Conference are not diplomats or schemers, or selfish nationalists. But they are two sincere, honest, plain-spoken Christian men, each a member of a Church, each one born and brought up in a Christian home where the Bible and the Family Altar and the Sunday School, and the Church and faith in God and Prayer were as much a part of their daily thought as their daily bread.

This fact, true of President Harding and of Secretary Hughes, is a fact which has been overlooked and ignored. But when one is taking account of forces that move men it is tremendously important to reckon on personality and character. Men like the President and Mr. Hughes, owing to their training and education, will not act from the motives that sway the professional diplomat or intriguer, versed in the old-world methods of secrecy and subterfuge and selfishness.

They will and do act from higher motives and with faith that these higher motives will in the end win over the other. And as the Washington Post truly says:

"Mr. Harding will give the greatest consideration to public opinion throughout the country, and he is known to feel that the Conference is, in a sense, to be the expression of a crystallization of public opinion, rather than a series of arguments drawn up in the old way by training statesmen." (Post, Sept. 14, 1921.)

THAT this is true has already been shown, I believe, in the conduct of Conference affairs, and as time goes on with its inexorable measurement of history, the public generally is reaching the conclusion that this Conference is to take account, as the Paris gathering never dreamed of doing, of the feeling of the people. If nothing else distinguished the Washington gathering from the Paris, this one fact alone would count for the utmost as of the greatest bearing on final results.

The one great conclusion which I have reached in my stay at the Conference is that this is, of all times in the world's history, the time for nations and individuals to exhibit generosity, faith in the reality of a better world and the intelligence to make this a better world practically.

It is a crime against the welfare of the human race to be pessimistic right now.

It is stupidity, in the light of history, to say that war can not be relegated to the scrap-pile. A world that has liberated the slave, abolished the manufacture of drink in a nation of 110,000,000 people, and abandoned duelling, vice segregation and legalized gambling to a large degree, has brains enough to cease killing.

It is a time for the vision of peace to shine forth, not in a fool's paradise where only angels live, but in a real world where men of passions live and nations obsessed by national glory or greed do exist. But not to make impossible to practical realization of a Brotherhood. That vision I find I have after being at the

Here you see the battery of camera men snapping the notable group shown at the top of this page

Conference. I certainly did not catch it from the diplomatist or the war profiteer. You can not make me believe it is only a fond dream.

May the good Lord save us from writing hysterics instead of history at the Conference. There will be no danger of that if the vision splendid is His and not obscured by us.

(Appended Are Some Short Chapters from the New World's History Being Made by the Conference, as Viewed by this writer)

CHAPTER ONE

SECRETARY of State, Charles E. Hughes, by his direct, straightforward proposal at the first open meeting of the Limitation of Arms Conference to scrap the navies of the world and inaugurate a ten years' naval holiday hit professional European diplomacy a blow such as it has never had in the history of international deliberations. It stunned the foreign delegates and it took them all day Sunday and Monday to collect their minds. Old traditions were shattered. To the amazement of those accustomed to the regular procedure of programs at military debates the United States actually started business at the first session. The action of Mr. Hughes made new history for diplomacy, and opened up the long-dreamed-of vista of actually getting something done.

CHAPTER TWO

New history was made when at the next open conference—attended, not by professional diplomats in a majority, but by the common citizens of the republic in greater numbers—the invited powers of Great Britain, Japan, Italy and France accepted in substance the proposal of the United States to begin a reduction of the world navies. Whatever after-history may be written, it is true that at that memorable gathering on the 15th of November, agreement was pledged to a beginning of limitation of armaments. And from that general agreement the nations can not recede without bearing the shame and contempt and righteous indignation of the world.

CHAPTER THREE

Difficulties which the diplomatic world have been saying were insuperable, especially between China and Japan, are going to be faced in a new spirit. In reply to a direct question made by the Editor of the Christian Herald to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of China, Dr. Chung Hui Wang, the Delegate with Dr. Wellington Koo, and the Chief Senior Delegate at the League of Nations, whether the difficulties between China and Japan were insurmountable or impossible of friendly settlement, he said with great deliberation and with profound feeling: "They can be and they will be settled on a friendly basis to the mutual satisfaction of both countries. We want it to be so. All China asks is an open door for equal opportunity for commercial and industrial happy growth. A way must be and will be found without war and without conquest."

This is not the language of diplomacy, it is the language of common sense and, even more, of international friendship. And this Conference has opened the door to such advances of the nations for mutual helpfulness. Gradually it is dawning even on the minds of the nations jealously protecting their own rights, that the best way to enjoy their own rights is to respect the rights of others. This has not been the law of the old world, it is the new law of the world that we believe will be.

Japan's chief delegates—Left to right: Baron Shidehara, Admiral Kato and Prince Iyesato Tokugawa

CHAPTER FOUR

The overwhelming sentiment of the people is on the side of reduction of armament. The people will be increasingly impatient with any course taken by the Conference to block an actual reduction. If the final agreement is reached to have a ten years' military holiday, at the end of that time there will be educated a public sentiment that will not permit the construction of any more engines of war. New History, indeed, is this that the nations contemplate, not alone the paring of the claws of the beast but the final cutting off of its head.

CHAPTER FIVE

Perhaps the most significant chapter in this new history has been written by moral and spiritual forces. The first session of the Conference was opened by prayer by a minister of the Gospel. The two men most responsible for the action the Conference has already taken are members of a church and have been brought up in the atmosphere of the family altar and a faith in prayer and the teachings of Jesus. THE MORAL AND SPIRITUAL PUBLIC OPINION OF THE CHRISTIAN PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES HAS INFLUENCED PRESIDENT HARDING AND SECRETARY HUGHES MORE THAN ALL THE DIPLOMATIC AND ECONOMIC FORCES OF THE OLD OR NEW WORLD. TO TAKE THE ACTION THEY HAVE TAKEN. It is a new atmosphere that the old world of militarism is now breathing. And, thank God, this atmosphere, we believe, has come like a very breath from heaven itself to sweep away the poisonous gases that were choking and stifling the life out of civilization.

This Conference has not brought in the millennium. But it has at least drawn aside the black curtain that war has dropped for so many centuries in front of it and given to heart-broken humanity a sight of what may be behind the pall of the century-old Devil who has sat on his throne until he has grown intolerable to the human race. At least it may be safely said Mars is discredited today as he never was before. His glory is passing. His size will soon require him to get a smaller waist measure for his next suit of military togs. And when the next great painter of History shall be given an order to draw his picture it will not be put in the frontispiece of the world's histories as it always has been, but it will be somewhere near the end, as Peace, and Industry, and Art, and Science, and Education, and Agriculture, and Religion, crowd Mars off the page into the small appendix where in the future he will be catalogued with those other heroes of the past, Duelling, Segregated Vice, Slavery and Drink. If a man who lived five hundred years before Christ was born had the vision to say the time would come when nation would not make war against nation any more, it is to the shame of the present-day men if they can not have the same optimism and faith. Praise God from whom all blessings flow!

The Conference Gets Down to Details

THE Washington Conference has reached the middle stage when little actual progress is to be observed by the public—when, with the committees hard at work on the details of the great agreement which is to come, surmises as to maneuvers for selfish advantage, hints of international jealousies and conflicts, and the utterances of skeptics and pessimists are ladled out in the guise of news until fears are engendered in the minds of many that the Conference will fall far short of its high goal.

It is a natural stage. After the tremendous events of the opening days of the Conference when Secretary Hughes offered his epoch-making proposals for a drastic cut in naval armament and Great Britain and Japan accepted that proposal in principle, there must come a period of apparent inaction; the general propositions which he laid down are worked out into specific understandings and the naval ratios for nations not included in his plan are determined. All this takes time. Even more time-consuming is the task of devising a settlement of Pacific and Far Eastern questions, a matter far more complicated than that of settling the naval ratios of Britain, Japan and America but closely linked with it in the maintenance of world peace. It is the stage when discouragement is easy, but it is the necessary precursor of the final stage when results are apparent, progress seems rapid and agreements are announced which will exercise a tremendous influence on the future development of civilization. So, amid all the cross currents of comment, it is well to remain confident of the outcome and to disregard the petty surmises of the day.

One of the tangible developments of the week was the adoption by the Conference of a resolution embodying the general principles to be observed in the investigation regarding China. It was drafted by Elihu Root, and has as its purpose the reaching of a complete accord on the Far Eastern question through the adoption of a common line of action and policy among the nations with regard to their future attitude toward China. As finally amended it read:

"It is the firm intention of the powers attending this conference hereinafter mentioned, to wit, the United States of America, Belgium, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and Portugal:

"(1) To respect the sovereignty, the independence and the territorial and administrative integrity of China.

"(2) To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself effective and stable government.

"(3) To use their influence for the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China.

"(4) To refrain from taking advantage of the present conditions in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of the subjects or citizens of friendly States and from countenancing action inimical to the security of such States."

This formula touches in general terms most of the principles for which China had asked in her "bill of rights," presented earlier to the Conference, but does not provide in detail for the settlement of the specific problems with which she is confronted. It was regarded, however, as being broader, clearer and more precise than any prior international agreement, understanding, alliance or accord on the subject of China; and it was considered probable that it would supersede the Root-Takahira and Lansing-Ishii agreements between the United States and Japan and might render unnecessary the continuation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

ANOTHER important development was Premier Briand's explanation of France's position regarding limitation of armaments on land and his announcement that France soon would cut her term of military service from three years to eighteen months, which would mean a decrease of 50 per cent. in the strength of her forces under arms. He declared France could do no more than this, because of the menace of renewed German aggression, to which he devoted a considerable portion of his speech and because of the unsettled state of Europe. He expressed France's earnest desire for peace, told of the nation's great sacrifices, and pleaded for moral disarmament, terming it as essential as physical disarmament.

The Premier said that for France to go farther in disarming would be impossible, unless the Allies and the United States were willing to share the danger with France and put at her disposal all means to secure her safety. That would enable her to adopt a different policy, but she did not expect such pledges.

In reply, the spokesman of the different governments gave assurances to France that she did not stand alone and declared that when France, as defender of liberty, was in danger she could count on her friends.

A desire on the part of Japan to obtain an increase in the naval strength proposed for her by Secretary Hughes has caused much discussion, but a final settlement has not been reached. The Japanese desired to have a navy 70 per cent. as strong as the navies of Great Britain and of America, instead of 60 per cent. as proposed by Mr. Hughes, but with the British delegates supporting the American proposal there were indications that Japan would accept the lower figure.

Because of the illness of Baron Shidehara, one of the principal Japanese delegates, Vice-Foreign Minister Hanihara was added to the delegation as a fourth member. Mr. Hanihara had been the chief adviser.

A great part of the press comment of the week was devoted to a discussion of naval demands which France was expected to make. According to these guesses, France was to insist on having a navy equal in capital ships to that of Japan, although that would mean authorizing her to go ahead with the construction of warships during the ten years of the naval holiday, and equal in submarines to the navies of the United States and Britain. British alarmists at once began a loud outcry against such terms for France, declaring that the one power against which France could be building was Great Britain, and one eminent British publicist even went so far as to serve a solemn warning that that was the way to get a war. That age old rivalries between British and French were reviving was sadly apparent in the newspaper thrusts exchanged over the naval proposals, despite the expressions of greatest good-will by those in official capacities.

Premier Briand has returned home, his great purpose in coming to Washington having been accomplished when from that focal point of world interest he had made his brilliant exposition of France's military necessities. As he left America, there was renewed discussion of the coming of Premier Lloyd George if the sessions are prolonged.

Doctoring India's 315,000,000

NEARLY everybody is ill at some period in life and, whether sick or well after one is started on life's journey, every one needs a physician's help in being ushered into this world. It is safe, therefore, to say that to care adequately for the bodies of the people of India a physician's assistance is required at some time or other for each of the 315,000,000 who make up the population of that vast empire.

Can they obtain such help? No. A recent issue of the Indian Witness, a paper published in Lucknow, declared that investigation showed more than 80,000,000 to be beyond the reach of medical aid; that it would require forty times the present number of dispensaries and hospitals to supply the need of rural India; and that in one area investigated 31,221 out of the 49,761 deaths had occurred without the dying person receiving any medical attention whatever.

Will it help your imagination to know that if the state of Iowa was as poorly cared for as is India there would be only one hospital and five doctors for the entire state? There isn't a town in the United States without at least one doctor, most of them have more than one, and some have too many for the health of the doctors and the people. If any one chances to meet with an accident in even a comparatively small American city, he is straightway carried to a hospital. And, if there is no hospital near in which a bone might be set or a major operation performed, there is the railroad with frequent trains by which the patient can be whirled to the nearest city.

In India we have American missionaries working in places where there is no doctor at all, Indian or European, and others where there is no hospital within traveling distance for a person seriously injured or sick. I know this from experience, for I spent six weeks in the jungle where it took 520 miles of travel to get a physician and return him to his station, and where the nearest hospital—and that a very poorly equipped one—was 130 miles away. Because of this lack I will carry the results of my injury all my life, whereas with a competent physician and surgeon and hospital treatment the permanent ill-effects would have been slight. But I am not now thinking of myself so much as of the missionaries whom I had to leave in the jungle to face the same possibilities or perhaps worse emergencies at any time.

IT IS not easy for the comfortably situated dwellers in America to understand or visualize the life of the missionary in the jungle. Two accounts of my accident were printed in my home church paper in America. One stated that I was being well cared for in the "hospital in Sironcha," and the other referred to me as writing from "a hospital cot in Muttra." While not a suggestion of such a situation had been made in the note I sent, the editor no doubt took it for granted that any one needing surgical treatment would be placed in a hospital. The fact is there is no hospital for Europeans either in Sironcha or Muttra. The only hospital bed I had in Sironcha was in the bungalow of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and the "hospital cot" from which I was supposed to be writing in Muttra was in the parsonage.

A Missionary Travels 520 Miles to Get a Physician for One Call

By REV. W. B. NORTON, Ph.D.

Bullock carts of the type used in evangelistic touring among the villages. It would have required twenty days to complete the 520 miles of travel for a doctor in such vehicles

The physician nearest to Sironcha lives at Chanda, 130 miles distant. Why not call him by telephone? The answer is simple—there is no telephone. Why couldn't the doctor, after he had been reached, run down quickly in his own automobile and bring with him the necessary silver wire for fastening together my broken knee-cap? Doctor though he was, he had no automobile, and civil surgeon in government employ though he was, he had no silver wire, and said he wouldn't dare operate if he had because of lack of experience.

The result was that the missionary had to travel the 130 miles four times, going and coming and returning the doctor to his home, a total of 520 miles for the sake of one preliminary visit. Had the accident occurred before last Christmas, the date of the arrival of the first automobile at the missionary station, the trip must have been made in a bullock cart consuming five days each way or twenty days in all at the swiftest possible speed.

On a former occasion one of the women of the missionary staff was seriously ill for four days before a physician could be called, the illness finally resulting in her death.

WITH so many physicians in the United States, some of them Christian men with a serious purpose in life, why does not Sironcha with its splendid opportunities for service have a resident physician?

It is not that such service can not be paid for. The only answer lies in the unwillingness of a competent man to heed the call. There is a hospital building in Sironcha with a dispenser and a nurse at work, with natives coming daily for medicine, advice and any possible treatment, but no physician.

A letter from America asked the question, "Can white men really live in India?" My answer is that they can, but they need capable physicians and surgeons when they are ill or meet with an accident, and proper supplies with which physicians and surgeons can work.

I asked the Indian dispenser, who is not a physician, but is the sub-assistant to the civil surgeon of Chanda, and a distributor of medicine, what a native would do for a fellow native, if one should have a fractured patella. "Oh," he said, "he would burn a ring around the knee and let it go at that."

I know of nothing more essential to an Indian's happiness than a sound knee-cap, for his favorite pastime is sitting on his haunches with his knees thrust out prominently in front of him. Every form of work in the shop or on the bungalow veranda is done in a squatting position, the toes sharing with the hands in work, holding boards, cloth, or any other material. Even in cutting meat the knife is held in a piece of metal with the toes keeping it in place while the meat is drawn toward the butcher against the knife and thus cut into the desired size. Some pieces of meat, especially where a bone must be cut in two, are cut in the American style, but the principle is well established in India that the toes must do their full share of toil, a task made comparatively easy by the absence of shoes and by the ability to sit in a jack-knife attitude for an incredibly long time. For this a sound patella is a prime requisite.

One of the appeals it is hard for any missionary to resist is that for medicine and care in case of illness among the natives. Miss Naylor, superintendent of the evangelistic work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in the Sironcha district, and the only missionary continuously in charge in the jungle for an area covering 1976 villages, finds that everywhere she goes the cry of suffering falls on her ears. At one place on one of her trips 150 persons came to her with some physical ailment, asking for help. "If I could dispense medicine and treat those who are ill who come to me," she said, "I would be crowded with calls all of the time I am itinerating."

WHILE I was in Sironcha a little Hindu girl about eight years of age, who had been terribly burned, was brought to the mission by her parents for treatment. The child had convulsions soon after her arrival and the parents insisted they must take her back to their home to die. "We broke caste by bringing her here," the mother said, "and if she dies here she will die out of caste. If we take her home her caste can be restored."

Accordingly the little sufferer was lifted on to the heads of her parents on a bed of rope and carried to the village three miles away. The next day the parents sent word the child was better and they wanted to bring her back to the mission, where Miss Fales was acting as nurse. Before accepting her

Natives inspecting the automobile, to them a new and awesome means of transportation, at a stop for water on the jungle road. It was this car which made the long run to get a doctor

A Country Parson's Job

It's So Big a Many-Sided Man Is Needed

By H. D. RANNS

The country church, small, plain, unpretentious, but a tremendous force for good

IN THESE latter days we hear a lot about "Back to the Land" movements. All sorts of people tell us that the salvation of this North American continent depends upon an increase of the numbers of country dwellers. Many of these people who are extolling the glories of the country live in the city and write from a safe distance. Sometimes the man in the country smiles at them—a long-drawn smile. Who shall blame him? For whatever he believes about the matter himself, he comes to doubt much of the armchair advice about the country. It reminds him too often of the city office, its glaring electricity and pale men with green shades over their eyes. And he is not convinced.

All the same, despite the rant and cant associated with much writing about country life, no thoughtful man can fail to realize that there is a genuine boom in country life values. The "hayseed" talk is old stuff. The country dweller today is no "hayseed." He is obtaining an increasingly good return for his hard work, and the standard of his life is rightly being raised. He knows his value better than formerly and that makes all the difference. Less and less is he going to be "only a farmer."

All of which means that the institutions and persons which exist to serve the farmer and promote the well-being of country life are bound to become increasingly important. Agricultural organizations, schools and churches and the men who man them, must matter tremendously in the development of that country life movement which promises to bring the countryside into its own.

The country parson today is very much a personage. For one thing, agricultural journals are taking quite a little notice of his work, telling him what sort of man he ought to be and what kind of work he should be busily engaged in doing. The fact that they criticize him only shows his importance. Men do not flog dead horses. They bury them. Neither do they criticize dead institutions. All they need is the burial ceremony. So the fact that criticism of the country parson is in the air only serves to show that his work is beginning to be taken seriously.

In this article I do not want to criticize or to defend him. My purpose is rather to describe him and his work from the inside. I want to try to answer the questions as to whether the country parson has a worth-while job and is he doing his job? Does he justify his existence?

Without more ado, here goes for the story of his doings, as one country parson knows that story. After that the fair-minded reader must judge for himself or herself.

TAKE first the background of his work. By and large, that background is the same as that of the people whom he serves. It is a tale of the open country that he learns to love, of the beauty of field and sky, the joy of the setting sun, of the silver moon, of the still earth, of blends of brown and blue and gold, of cattle-grazing and rural scenes, in fact the whole panoply of God's outdoors. In this country scene his lot is cast and between country church and schoolhouse and farmhouse and his study his time is spent.

His motto is "I serve," and the story of that service covers a wide range of activities, if he be the live wire I know many to be.

The very indefiniteness of the man's job is one of its most exacting features. A country parson does not have to punch his time on a clock. To that extent he is a free agent. But if he is a conscientious man, his work is like a woman's—it is never done. There is always some task to tackle, some church arrangement to be made, some sick person to see, some one in need who telephones for help or information and is never denied, some business or correspondence connected with the three or four appointments on his charge, some community enterprise to be helped or charitable organization to have the benefit of his aid, to say nothing of innumerable calls on his time from his denomination for the larger work of the church. But because he has no stated hours except on Sunday, thoughtless people rush to the conclusion that he has such an easy time and that being a parson is a refuge for lazy incompetents.

Not long ago a certain friendly farmer said to his preacher, "Do you keep a diary?"

The preacher wondered whatever the man meant. "Why do you ask the question?" he replied.

"Because Mr. Blank said the other day that a preacher had a soft snap, only work on Sundays. I told him what I could, but thought then I would ask you whether you kept a diary and would you let me see it?"

That particular preacher was rather sensitive on that subject, for he had a conscience and was working hard for his people.

"I don't keep a diary," he answered. "I would not have time to enter it up regularly if I did. But you can tell Mr. Blank that if he prepared even one sermon a week into which he put his best thought, if he made one-tenth of the calls expected on a large charge, if he were a president of an educational society, chaplain of a number of lodges and secretary of various rural institutions, a member of farmers' organizations, interested in everything that pertains to rural life and anxious to serve in all community doings, was obliged by his position to keep abreast of the latest information on Sunday School work, missionary work, temperance activity, social service and the literature of the world's progress—you can tell him from me that he would find seven days a week hardly enough to compass his work."

THE fact of the matter is that the country parson's job in these days is so big that it takes a many-sided man to fill it. Many of them are not filling the bill. That much must be allowed. These men preach a sermon on Sundays, visit a few people during the week and preach again the following Sunday. Thus they pursue the even tenor of their way. These men lack vision. They are the failures of the country ministry. The colleges of the past have a lot to answer for in producing that kind of preacher. Even in agricultural provinces and states—where you might think they ought to know better—men are trained apparently on the assumption that they are going to be city pastors. Perhaps 20 per cent. will be—what about the other 80 per cent.? Many of them, being young and adaptive, will learn. Others, being young and not adaptive, never will, and their country parishes will meander along with half a preacher. Which is greatly to be deplored.

However, I think it is safe to say that this type of country preacher is diminishing in numbers. The influence of the country preachers in so many of the great farmer organizations, where they are earnestly and eagerly striving to get a square deal for the farmer and to help him to help himself to juster and more spacious living conditions, this influence is an indication that the modern country preacher is concerned about the life among which he lives.

Not long ago I went to a country school fair. It was held out on the great prairies in a modern consolidated school. That day there were exhibitions of school work that would have done credit to a city school. Then there were contests and sports and speeches, all the paraphernalia of a school fair. In the midst of it all, doing anything that came to hand, fetching and carrying, superintending sports, presiding at the gathering, keeping everything going with a swing, was the country parson, genial, energetic and capable. A graduate of one of the best Eastern universities, an athlete and a man with an infectious personality, he was the leader of that community in all that was good. And many a laborer is getting a bigger salary!

That is one picture. Here is another. An epidemic has broken out. It is winter time, deadly cold and the snow piled high. The country parson of whom I am thinking had worked for days taking good things out to scattered patients on the prairies, going into homes where neighbors would not venture. In one he would pray with a dying man or woman, in another try to cheer those who were struggling with the dread disease, to another he would bring a nurse where her presence meant life and hope, and so would spend his days—until he got sick himself. Many a country preacher has proved a hero as much as any soldier on a battlefield—without the glory!

SOME of these things are the high spots of the job.

The daily round and the common task mean travel by buggy or car or sleigh over country roads, a call here and a visit there, fraternizing with the farmer on his farm, talking of crops and cattle and church affairs, of the children and their concerns, of the community and its doings, taking a group of boys in Boy Scout Work, helping in a farmer's organization meeting, giving a speech or lecture here and there, arranging for social gatherings and entertainments, joining in a temperance campaign, and incidentally writing letters and preparing sermons and addresses.

The climax of his week is his Sunday. Some of his parishioners are apt to think that Sunday is his whole week! They remind one of the Scottish parson who fell into a bad hole and a laborer said there was no need to worry, "you're no wanted 'till the Sabbath." Well, I know plenty of country parsons who can give a good account of their week-day work, but any minister worth his salt knows that the Sabbath is his opportunity and his burden.

For many country preachers Sunday is a hard and exacting day. There is no eight-hour regulation for him that day. One country preacher I know starts out in the morning, drives twelve miles and preaches in a country schoolhouse; then departs and preaches again at two p.m. and at that appointment conducts a congregational Bible class in addition; then leaves hurriedly for another service at four o'clock and finishes with a big service in the country town in the evening.

At these services he has poured out his soul. He knows his people with an intimacy and understanding impossible to the city parson. During the week he has moved among them and knows their faults and failings and their virtues and strong points. If he is a "live" preacher he stands in a unique relation to them, and knows it, their mentor and friend. So on the Sunday he brings the gospel of long ago into the actualities of today, showing its application to their needs, revealing Jesus of Nazareth as the Friend of men and women and children of the soil of today. It is a great thing to do and with passion and glow he does it.

Taking it all in all, the country preacher likes his job for the open-air life, for the privilege of knowing honest-to-goodness men and women at close range, for the opportunity of social and religious work (to make a distinction where really there is not one), for the chance to serve God and man—he likes it for these things. Now there are some things about it he does not like. And his dislike is emphatic. I am going to try to indicate one of them rapidly.

NOW the country preacher did not start in on his job with the idea of making a fortune. But—you see there is a "but"—he does want a square deal and often he does not get it. He comes to know the high price of everything except preaching. Now with all his good qualities, the farmer—or, at last, some of him—does not realize that other men than himself need a fair return for their labor, that it is true even of a preacher that "the laborer is worthy of his hire."

One of the troubles is that the farmer himself in many ways lives a different life than his preacher. Many of the staple necessities of his life he raises, while the minister has to buy them with hard cash. And the farmer is very apt to figure on the money he needs to spend and to declare that because he easily lives on such an amount—usually a very small one—the minister should do the same. The farmer may put money aside, but the preacher—he belongs to Heaven! Unfortunately, as many ministers have found in recent years, they are living on the earth at a time when living was never anything like so high. With living two and three times as high—even butter and eggs and meat from his parishioners' farms—the preacher's salary has often remained almost stationary. That is one honest "grouch" many rural preachers have. A country parson's job is too crucial in these days for him to be hindered and hampered by a starvation wage.

And yet, even though economically it is not rated as high as a brakeman's, I maintain that a country parson's job is a big one. I wonder what you think.

The Extra Baby

A Charming Two-Part Story

By CORINNE UPDEGRAFF WELLS

Illustrated by William C. McNulty

Part Two

CHAPTER III

IT WAS the year Luke was graduated that one of those amazing things that never happen—happened. The Old Man on Hate Hill died. And he who had never, to any one's knowledge, given so much as a cup of cold water to a human being, left his cash balance in the bank, which amounted to eighteen hundred and ninety-six dollars and twenty-seven cents to the Rev. Mark Newell. In a drawer of his desk his executor had found a sealed envelope addressed to the minister. When it was delivered, Mark and Nellie, pale with agitation, locked themselves in the little study to read and re-read it.

It was a shocking epistle, a bitter, snarling laugh of a letter that tripped daringly along the coping of blasphemy. Mark read it aloud while Nellie listened guiltily, but, nevertheless, with an unholy flutter of appreciation about her palpitating heart. The money had been left to him, the minister, so the writer explained, because it gave him, an atheist, the satisfaction of partly making up to a minister of the gospel for the "stinginess of a congregation of hypocrites who paid for blood with husks." He knew about the blood; he knew also about the husks. From his hill-top he had watched the smug procession filing by to the parsonage with salving offerings of specked apples, potatoes that threatened sprouts, of pork, when they butchered and were filled to repletion—and the fag-ends of their time and love and service.

In a burst of seething wrath he snapped his dying fingers in the face of a community who had reviled him as ungodly; a community that did not love their neighbor as they loved themselves; that did not love their neighbor even as they loved their dogs. There wasn't an "honest Christian in the whole bunch of psalm-singing hypocrites!" Who but the minister had trudged up the hill to keep life in his body and hope in his soul? Religion that wasn't the dominie's brand wasn't worth a cuss. Toward the close of the letter his bitterness softened. He honestly wished he had been able to believe that God was Love. He thanked the minister's wife for the fresh bread and the broth and the puddings.

"What a Christian he would have made," sighed Mark, as he finished the letter.

NELLIE dabbed her eyes with a corner of her white apron. "It's simply too good to be true." "My dear," Mark remonstrated, "it's just one of those things, in God's providence, that are good enough to be true!"

"I know," she admitted. "You've always told me there were green fields far away. Mark dear," she demanded suddenly, aglow with anticipation, "how will we spend it—what shall we buy?"

They pondered the question until long after midnight. Flushed of face, with heads close together they bent for fleeting happy hours over pages filled with figures and the scribbled lists of their heart's desires. Finally, on their tip-toes, lest they wake the twins, they crept to their bedroom.

"Nell," said the minister as he wound his watch and hung his vest over a chair by the bedside. "I couldn't have stood seeing you go without things much longer. It wouldn't have been so bad," he admitted, "if you had complained a little once in a while."

Nellie was dabbling cold cream into the hungry pores of her skin. "I wonder how I would look in one of those stunning plush coats?" she meditated, glancing sideways into the mirror at the shapely lines of her figure. "Your pajamas are hanging in the closet, darling. I suppose if we're going to the city tomorrow, I'd better put up my hair."

"Wasn't that a funny idea the Old Man had about the church people?" ruminated the minister quizzically.

"Umm," said Nellie, through a mouthful of hair-pins.

"You know, I've an idea—he was beginning to see the light before he went," Mark hazarded thoughtfully.

"Well, I love him, anyway!" exclaimed Nellie.

"Eighteen hundred and ninety-six dollars and twenty-seven cents!" mused the minister.

His wife lowered her gaze before the light that burned like a living flame in his deep-set eyes.

"Just think," mused Nellie as she turned down the bed covers, "this time tomorrow night I'll have a black satin dress and a coat and a hat and you'll have your new typewriter and a filing cabinet and an overcoat, and the twins will have—oh, Mark!" She did not finish the sentence for a sudden convulsive choking in the throat. Covering her face with her hands, she dropped abruptly to her knees upon the threadbare carpet and bowed her head upon the snowy folds of the sheet.

Mark stood gazing down upon her for a moment from the opposite end of the room. Then, very quietly, he turned out the light and knelt humbly at the other side of the bed.

THE following night the lights in the parsonage living-room burned late. Paul and Pauline, having finished their lessons, waited in that tense expectancy which precedes the night before Christmas.

"Gee, I wish they'd come!" yawned Paul.

"I'm going to ask Dad to give me his old typewriter."

"Won't it be heavenly to see Mother dressed up?" murmured Pauline into her knitting. "Mother's a good looker," she remarked with feminine superiority. "It'll be fun to watch the choir when she walks up the aisle Sunday morning in her black satin. I get so mad sometimes when I see everybody but Mother dressed up. It's a good thing she doesn't mind."

They came finally, bursting into the door like a fresh breeze. The minister's hat was set at an almost ungodly angle above a glowing face from which all trace of weariness had been expunged. Wisps of golden hair strayed wilfully from Nellie's close-fitting hat. Her radiant face was smudged with sooty shadows, but her body was vibrant with new vigor.

"Oh, darlings!" she exclaimed, tumbling an armful of small bundles on to the couch. "We've had the time of our lives! Open the packages!" She paused a moment seemingly embarrassed. "We didn't get any of the big things we meant to get. We—we just looked around. We'll go back next week and buy them. It will be more fun that way. These are just some little things we bought for you children."

"But, Mother dear!" exclaimed Pauline, all her beauty-loving feminine soul in her eyes. "surely you got your dress? And your hat?"

Nellie evaded her daughter's accusing gaze.

"Yes, dear, but not the satin. I looked too much like a duchess," she laughed, blushing. "I got to thinking how uncomfortable I would feel sitting beside Aunt Saunders who doesn't have clothes enough even to keep her warm. So I bought a blue serge. It's in that long box."

Pauline lifted the plain blue frock from its tissue wrappings in silence. "Did you get a coat?" she asked tonelessly.

"I found a beauty, but I'm going to think it over a few days. The saleswoman was a peach. She told me to keep it on and look at myself a while, even though I didn't buy it."

"What kind of a typewriter did you get, Pa?" demanded Paul eagerly.

"I looked at several, son. I find that by sending my old one to the factory—"

Paul groaned. "What did you get?" he pleaded.

"Oh, your Father had a glorious time buying thirty-five-cent magazines!" Nellie laughed. "He's always wanted to go to a newsstand and carry off an armful of expensive monthlies—and now he's done it! Moreover," she teased, "he spent a dollar and a half for a necktie."

"Say, Ma, where's that five-pound box of candy?" demanded Paul suspiciously.

His mother placed her hands upon his shoulders and faced him, smiling guiltily. "Son," she said evenly, "I just couldn't spend all that money for candy. It seemed wicked when—you wanted books so badly. So I got a few caramels—and your books are coming by post tomorrow." She turned toward her daughter who was preening before a mirror above the hatrack in the hall. "Pauline, dear, do you like your hat?" Her eyes sparkled. "There's a lovely surprise coming for you tomorrow!" Her eloquent glance brought a glow of anticipation to the girl's soft face.

BUT the weeks sped into months and still there was no return trip to the city. The scribbled pages of items and figures that had littered the study desk for days were finally torn to bits. The unspent remainder of the legacy, which had been deposited in the savings bank, was finally definitely dedicated to the education

Nellie came home to a household presided over by a competent new mistress who had graduated from high school and settled down to the deadly monotony of a small town without so much as an audible sigh of the twins. Paul must have technical training. Pauline must have the crude edges rounded off.

"It will be only a drop in the bucket," mused Nellie one night as her plump fists kneaded bread dough, "but I guess we can manage the rest. I've always been ashamed to tell you, Mark, but that night when the twins came I was dreadfully rebellious! I couldn't understand why we had to have two babies at once. But see how beautifully it has all worked out. We've managed with the babies and now we'll have help with their education. And I'll tell you something else, Mark." No trace of reservation clouded her eyes as she turned to face him. "Ever since Pauline was born, she's been my luxury—like flowers in winter. I haven't minded anything so long as Pauline kept on blooming. But, Mark, if ever our poverty cuts her deeply; if ever she looks at me and says to herself, 'Poor Mother!—I'll—I'll die!'"

"She won't," said the girl's father. He leaned against the wall beside the table, with his hands thrust deeply into his pockets. His face was thoughtful. "So that's the reason for the extra baby!" he exclaimed to himself, "to keep Nellie going." Well, hadn't he always known that back of the providence of the God they served, the God of sparrows and lilies of the field, the God who moved in such mysterious ways His wonders to perform, there had been some unfathomable reason for those arduous, abstemious years of toil and sacrifice? Pauline had been, all unconsciously, white hyacinths, as it were, for Nellie's starving soul.

"Thank God for potato bugs!" he mused devoutly.

BUT alas! The little legacy was never spent as they had planned, for Paul and Pauline. It went, in small, anguishing amounts at first, to buy back strength for their mother's spent body and overwrought nerves. And, having started, it flowed in an appallingly steady stream, seemingly as a grim tribute to the thousand

Continued on page 912

The Editorial Forum

DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON
Editor-in-Chief

RAE D. HENKLE
Managing Editor

DR. GEORGE H. SANDISON
Editor Emeritus

Where Is Your State?

THE National Prohibition Enforcement office has just issued a statement showing the measure of co-operation it is obtaining from the various states through the local police, judicial officers and the press, in its fight to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment.

Is your state among these where improved jury conditions are found:

Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Nebraska, Illinois, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Oregon, Massachusetts, Arkansas, North Carolina, Texas, Arizona, Wisconsin.

Or is it among these where co-operation of officials or a favorable attitude by the press are reported:

Texas, Arizona, South Carolina, Tennessee, North Dakota, Delaware, Arkansas, Montana, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Mississippi, Oregon, New Jersey, Nebraska, Illinois, Iowa, Connecticut, Kentucky, Maine.

In some of this latter group it is made plain that no assistance is being obtained from the public officials but the newspapers, as in New Jersey for instance, are "outsoken in upholding the Eighteenth Amendment." This summary of national conditions, however, leaves entirely too many states either officially hostile to law enforcement or indifferent to it. This hostility or apathy, whichever it may be, can only be corrected by public sentiment.

Make your public officials and your newspapers know how you feel on the question. When they know you want law enforcement, you will get it.

At Famine's Table

A STRANGE banquet was served in one of the leading New York hotels a few evenings ago.

Over 300 men and women, who had paid $10 apiece for the pleasure of sitting at the guest table, found themselves facing a menu such as they had probably never encountered before. Sitting in gold lacquered chairs, they ate from bare kitchen tables, each guest having a bowl, a spoon and a cup. Every one waited on himself. The dinner consisted of soup, a piece of brown bread and a cup of cold coffee! The diners were told that it was identical with the rations supplied to famine victims throughout the vast area of Russia where starvation now reigns. Further, every guest's individual $10 fee, it was explained, would provide food for 180 starving Russian children, and the whole dinner fund would feed 90,000 children.

Mr. Hoover's American Relief Administration has the big task before it of feeding 1,200,000 Russian children this winter. Even then, not half the needy little ones will be reached, and none of the adults. It is the hugest problem of its kind. Bringing the food into Russia is attended with many difficulties, and one may imagine the further troubles that are encountered in reaching the needy ones in their homes.

The Relief Administration has established warehouses, stocked with foodstuffs, at central points in each section where the child-feeding forces are working. It has established free child-feeding kitchens where the little ones are dealt with in masses. Every American has an opportunity to aid these Russian children and also to make it possible for the adults to be fed by buying Food Remittances calling for food worth $10 and up to $500 delivered to any designated person in Russia. The plan is a development of the Food Drafts which proved so successful in the feeding operations last year in Central Europe.

Know the World

JOHAN R. MOTT, General Secretary of the International Y. M. C. A. in an address a few days ago sounded a note which the Christian Herald has been stressing insistently and which should strike a responsive chord in the heart of every American.

"In every way in their power," he said, "the churches must further international thinking, international planning, international fellowship and international action. The churches of America and of other lands are summoned to bear on international relations the principles and spirit of Jesus Christ."

American insularity is a thing of the past. Our interest in the world at large is now more than a picture-book interest to be satisfied completely by a stereopticon lecture by a returned missionary. We have a very definite responsibility in the propagation of Christian American ideals. Our evangelized missionaries are the strong advance guard of the army we must put in the field, but they cannot carry the burden alone. The medical missionary and his associates, the educational and industrial missionaries are strong in support, but two more things must be done. First, we must be represented in foreign countries by commercial travelers and diplomatic and consular agents who live clean, wholesome, Christian lives and do business on Christian principles. All too frequently this type of man is not selected for foreign service. Second, the American people must be brought to the point where they take a keen, intelligent interest in world affairs and be able with sure judgment to pass on questions constantly arising that are of tremendous importance in mission development, trade expansion, political relationships and moral and ethical movements.

Needless Expense?

FROM my window in my hotel during my stay in Washington, reporting a small part of the great Conference, I have a full view of the National Capitol. It is truly a building that every American citizen ought to be proud of. It is a stately, beautiful structure, that has no superior in the matter of architecture. By day it attracts by reason of its majestic proportions, and by night, illuminated by the electric flood of light that comes from an unseen source, it is a thing of graceful outline as it shines white as lace frost, from its hill-top situation towering over the city, and reminding the citizen that he is a citizen of no mean country. Also during the days of the Conference, a most wonderful display of searchlights has streamed from the Congressional Library clear over the Capitol dome and across the entire heavens, ribbons of all the colors of the solar spectrum, reproducing the effect in a most wonderful manner of nature's display in the far north.

All this display is welcomed by the visitors as a token of the welcome the United States extends to them, and which Washington in particular wants her guests to feel. And the average American citizen does not feel like saying anything about the expense of such displays, even if every night several hundreds of dollars are flung into the sky along every one of the colored streamers that vie with the Aurora Borealis.

But while that is true, I have been wondering if it was really necessary for any city or nation at a time when men are walking the streets (some 6,000 here in Washington alone and hundreds of thousands in the big centers of New York and Chicago), to make what seems to me needless expense for display in the name of hospitality or welcome.

As for example, the towers of jewels near the Pan-American Building, where most of the sessions of the delegates are being held.

Counting the cost of the towers of jewels and the colored illumination from the Library, the entire display of light is equal to 9,950,000,000 candle-power. Some light for a candle, our grandmothers would say! And the expense of all this modest candle-light would be $250,000. But the press naively says that this expense is being taken care of by the military electric machinery already installed, so that the actual cost will be ONLY $30,000! We wonder who paid for the original machinery that cost $250,000! We suppose the naval and army officers paid for it out of their salaries. We never knew before how patriotic they were!

But $30,000 spent by the taxpayers for a display of candles that Abraham Lincoln never had in his log cabin seems to be to raise a number of questions.

Praise for China Relief

To the Editor of the Christian Herald:

We wish to congratulate you and your able assistants for the prompt, economical and businesslike manner of carrying out your recent relief enterprise in China. The large amount contributed shows not only the generosity of the readers of the Christian Herald, but also proves their unbounded confidence in your methods, knowing that what they give will reach its destination with the least possible outlay of expense.

The issue of September 24 is a wonderful number and gives your readers a glimpse of the stupendous task which you undertook and which in spite of great difficulties you were able to carry through to such a successful termination. We feel that we voice the sentiment of every reader of the Christian Herald when we say that we heartily thank you, and pray that you may be spared many years to continue your efforts for the uplifting of humanity.

Oakland, Calif.

Mrs. H. E. W.

I take for granted that a large number of readers will be provoked at any criticism of this sort. But meanwhile there will be 1,000 men in the Bread Line around the Bowery Mission this winter. Wonder how many cups of coffee and loaves of bread $30,000 would buy!

C. M. S.

P. S.—At the time of his inauguration, President Harding requested that this special illuminating system designed to usher in his taking of office be not used, as he wished to have simplicity and economy to mark his inaugural. It looks to me that what was good enough for the President then is good enough for the foreign visitors here now.

A Good Precedent

WHAT is probably the first test of the power of the Motion Picture Commission in the state of New York to discriminate between the good and bad movies, has just taken place. It is of such general interest that we commend it to the attention of Christian Herald readers. Application was made to the Commission for a license for the public use of a certain picture. After due consideration the license was refused. An appeal was taken by the distributing corporation, and the case came up for a hearing in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court to determine whether the picture was or was not a fit subject for exhibition in public. The picture in question was exhibited to the court, which, after a brief discussion, decided to sustain the action of the Motion Picture Commission in refusing a license, upon the ground that the picture "is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals and incite to crime."

This picture, it should be explained, was made nearly a year ago, and large sums have been expended in preparatory work. Its suppression means a loss of $200,000 to the producing corporation. But it also means that the public is entitled to the fullest protection from any exhibition that would tend to degrade public morals or stir evil impulses in the hearts of youth.

The whole case is a typical one as showing that in every state which has a Motion Picture Commission, appeal by public-minded citizens against the exhibition of immoral or crime-breeding movies has here a precedent which they might follow to advantage.

It is only just to add that the leading distributors are honestly seeking compliance with the law in respect to the elimination of objectionable pictures. Conditions have so changed that any public movement against bad movies may now choose the proper channels through which to express itself with reasonable hopes of success.

A Word to Our Readers

YOU have had time to read in last week's issue our annual prospectus, setting forth the strong array of helpful and attractive features which will appear in the Christian Herald during the coming year. Never have we been able to present a program combining so many features of national and world-wide interest. Never till now have we had the unusual conditions and the new opportunities our nation is facing today. Not in all the past years has there been such a loud and clear call to Christian service as that which is now sounding in the ears of God's people throughout the whole world.

We believe our readers are duly appreciative of these wonderful opportunities. We know their high sense of duty, individual and collective. The best way to show your appreciation is to begin by sending in your renewal of subscription TODAY. Many readers have responded in these last few weeks, and we are hopeful that the great majority will follow their example, and render substantial help to our subscription department by sending in their renewal now. Delayed subscriptions mean doubling the work of our subscription force, while renewals now help us wonderfully in keeping matters straight, and give assurance to every subscriber of getting the paper on time and without missing a single copy.

And if you can send along an additional subscription for some friend or acquaintance, whom you want to have as a member of our Family Circle, so much the better. There is room enough for all, and a warm welcome awaits any one you may bring along as a new member and subscriber.

We are sure that you understand the situation and we thank you in advance for any co-operation you may extend to us at this busy season, by helping us in the way we have suggested.

A history-making scene—Around the table in Washington to discuss limitation of armament. To the right at the head of the table are Secretary Hughes and the American delegates, with the French spokesmen at their right and the British at their left

The World News of the Week

Special Session of Congress Closes; Anti-Beer Bill Signed

THE extraordinary session of Congress convened by President Harding last spring closed its work the day before Thanksgiving, allowing its members just twelve days of vacation before the opening of the regular session on December 5. Although Congress has been at work continuously, with the exception of one recess of three weeks, since early in the Harding administration, several important measures failed of passage, among them the Fordney-Penrose tariff bill, the bill providing for the funding of railroad obligations, the foreign debt refunding bill, the "truth in fabric" bill, the Copper bill to repeal the guarantee clause in the transportation act, the Alaskan railway bill and the bill for the revision of the laws, the first since 1878. The new session, therefore, will have plenty to occupy its time.

The last act of the Senate was to pass, by a vote of 39 to 29, the tax revision bill, in the form in which it finally came from the conference committee. Six Republicans joined with twenty-three Democrats in voting against the measure, while one Democrat voted for it. In the five hours of debate which preceded the final vote even those Senators who bore the greatest responsibility in framing the bill expressed themselves as dissatisfied with many of its provisions, but declared it preferable to the act it replaces. Predictions were made that the measure would be amended materially within a short time. The chief feature of the bill is a reduction of $70,000,000 in taxes for this year and an estimated reduction of $835,000,000 for 1922.

Fifteen minutes after its passage by the Senate, the tax bill was signed by President Harding, who had gone to the Capitol to expedite matters. While there he also signed the maternity bill and several other measures of lesser importance. The anti-beer bill, which automatically nullifies the federal regulations recently issued to permit the use of beer and wine as medicines, was signed by the President at the White House. This bill was characterized by R. A. Haynes, prohibition commissioner, as marking "a new step forward in the enforcement of prohibition," and he declared no embarrassment was anticipated from the provision imposing penal liability upon officers searching dwellings without search warrants.

In the House's "good-bye," Representative Mondell, the Republican floor leader, listed the emergency tariff act, the budget act, the revenue act, the peace resolution, the anti-beer law, the maternity law, the immigration restriction act, the veterans' bureau act, the farm loan act, the packers' control law, the grain exchange futures law and the good roads appropriation of $80,000,000 as enactments which would give the session a high rank in history.

Porto Ricans Assail Governor

THAT Porto Ricans are conducting insistent agitation for independence from American sovereignty, following the example of the Filipinos, was emphasized by several incidents in connection with the return to the United States of E. Mont Reily, Governor of the island, for a stay of several weeks. In the few months of his administration the Governor has come into sharp conflict with certain leaders in the insular legislature, one big point of disagreement being his refusal to permit them to dictate appointments. He announced some time ago that he would not appoint agitators for independence to office, and since then the fight has grown more and more bitter.

Fire was discovered in the cargo of the Tanamo, the ship aboard which the Governor was returning, two days after leaving San Juan, but the ship was able to reach New York under her own power, although much damaged. There were strong suspicions that the fire had been set by enemies of Governor Reily, as he had received threatening letters, but Porto Rican leaders ridiculed such suggestions. A crowd of several hundred Porto Ricans had assembled at the pier for a demonstration against Mr. Reily, and secret service operatives spirited him away to prevent an attack.

Later a cablegram demanding the immediate removal of Governor Reily and signed by thirty-nine of the fifty-eight members of the Porto Rican Assembly was sent to the island's commissioner in Washington for presentation to President Harding. He was accused of arbitrary and unjust acts and of embarking on "a policy of aggression against Porto Ricans not personally addicted to him" on the "pretext that the President of the Senate and members of the majority party were enemies of the United States."

The Governor declared that the trouble was due entirely to a few persons who seek secession from the United States and that the people of Porto Rico as a whole are the most loyal, faithful and patriotic he has ever known.

Japanese Regent Named

CROWN PRINCE HIROHITO has been designated Regent of Japan because of the failing health of his father, the Emperor Hoshihito, who for some time has been suffering from a brain malady. Despatches from Japan had indicated that a reorganization of the Japanese Court was being arranged, but the announcement that the Crown Prince had become the titular head of the nation came as a surprise to the great mass of the Japanese people, since the government has discouraged any discussion regarding the Emperor's health and few bulletins regarding his condition have been issued.

That the change will have a merely nominal effect, for the immediate present at least, is the expectation of those in close touch with Japanese affairs. The Emperor Hoshihito, although possessing great and very definite powers, has been in no physical condition for a considerable period to exercise them and the real direction of the nation's affairs has fallen into the hands of a small ruling group. The Crown Prince has only recently become of age, and because of his youth it is expected that he will not try to assume the actual leadership at an early date. His tour of Europe, a precedent-breaking event which aroused great opposition in Japan, has given him a more intimate insight into foreign affairs than was possessed by any of his predecessors, and those who came into contact with him on that trip spoke highly of his mental abilities, so that he may be expected in time to attempt the exercise of his powers in an effective way.

The reign of the Emperor Hoshihito, which began on July 30, 1912, was not a happy one, despite the great progress which the nation has made, for the Emperor has been ailing almost constantly and the burdens of state have borne heavily on him. Rumors of his death have been circulated recently, and official statements have given little hope that he ever can regain his strength.

Irish Parleys Seem Near End

WITH Ulster loath to accept the proposed All-Ireland Parliament and the Sinn Fein sticking at swearing allegiance to the British Crown, many of those best informed regarding the progress of the negotiations for peace in Ireland were predicting an early end to the conferences in London. A final break had been averted thus far and the Ulster Parliament had yet to declare its attitude, but hope of adjusting the many points of difference was slight.

The Sinn Fein envoys returned to Dublin to consult with Eamonn de Valera, head of their organization, for the first time in several weeks. It had been assumed that the Sinn Fein would agree, if Ulster consented to Irish unity, to swear allegiance to the Crown, but this proved to be an error, and the idea of the Sinn Fein delegates was that their association with the states of the British Empire should be by treaty, as would be the case with a foreign power. No party in Britain was prepared to accept such terms.

There was a fresh outbreak of violence in Belfast which threatened to cause a suspension of the truce, and in a series of bomb outrages and clashes twenty-six persons were killed and several scores wounded. Each side accused the other of being entirely responsible for the disorders and the situation daily became more and more strained.

League Substitute Broached

THAT President Harding had suggested informally to some of the foreign delegates to the Washington Conference a continuing series of international conferences out of which may develop an "association of nations" has been made known in official circles in the national capital. The delegates with whom the matter was discussed gave their general approval to the idea, but the entire matter still is in indefinite form.

This move represents an endeavor by the Administration to carry out the plank in the Republican platform advocating an association of nations for conference and a world court, as a substitute for the League of Nations. This association would form a looser arrangement and necessitate far less machinery than that provided under the League Covenant, and probably would take the form of annual conferences of the leading nations to discuss the troubles of the world, the gathering to be along the general lines of the present Conference, but on a broader scale.

It was suggested in the comment on the Harding overtures that the present Conference would be able

Continued on page 914

Heaven, the Land of Completion!

A Sermon by REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D.*

TEXT—I Cor. 15:53. "This mortal must put on immortality."

MORTALITY and immortality; mortal and immortal—these words are often on our lips and slip glibly from our tongues. But what do they mean? Is existence, cut short or continued, the only meaning we attach to them? Does immortality simply mean indestructibility?

Perhaps that is the superficial meaning we give the words, when we do not stop to think much about them. Mortality—that is something fragmentary, transient, incomplete. Immortality—the unending, the abiding, the complete. Is not this the true significance of these terms? One denotes the incomplete, the other the complete; one the beginning, the other the fruition; one the bud, the other the flower.

Let us look at the immortal life, the future life, in its true relation as the completion of this fragmentary existence which we begin here. This thought of the future life as the life of completions, the life which gathers up into one whole the fragmentary ends of things, will in the first place be most helpful to us in understanding the mysteries of life and death.

"If everything stood still, or if things only moved around in a circle, it would be a dreadful and a dreary thing to live," says a noted preacher. But we rejoice in life because it seems to be carrying us somewhere, because its darkness seems to be rolling on towards light, and even its pain to be moving on toward a hidden joy. We bear with incompleteness, because of the completion which is prophesied and hoped for.

But it is the delay of that completion, the way in which, when we seem to be all ready for it, it does not come—this is what puzzles and distresses us. You watch your plant growing, and see its wonderful building of the woody fiber, its twining of the strong roots, its busy life-blood hurrying along its veins. The dignity, the beauty, of the whole process is in the completion which it all expects.

Some morning you step into your garden and the deep red flower is blazing full-blown on the stem, and all is plain. The completion has justified the process. But, suppose the plant to have been conscious all the time of the coming flower, to have felt its fire already in the tumultuous sap, and yet to have felt itself held back from blossoming. Not today! Not today! each morning as it tried to crown itself with the glory toward which all its tendencies had struggled. Would it not be a very puzzled and impatient and unhappy little plant, as it stood wondering why its completion was withheld, and what delayed its flower?

HOW often would such a thought as this still our anxious doubts and fears! There is no mystery like the mystery that surrounds the grave, the darkness there is fathomless. On every other subject men have grown wiser as the ages have rolled on, but upon this subject, from the side of science and philosophy, at least, there is not a glimmer. Men have been dying at the rate of one every second for centuries past, and yet, apart from the Bible, the world knows no more concerning the minute that follows the last breath than when Adam breathed his last. No gleam of speculation has come from the glassy eye of the dead man, no word of advice from his palsied tongue, and all we can say today from any other standpoint than the Bible is the old wail of Job: "Man dieth and wasteth away. Yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?"

But here comes in the Bible intimations and the Christian's hope that this life is the vestibule to the glorious temple beyond, that this is nothing but the bud at the most, that the flower is unfolded beyond. What a door of reasonable expectation and glorious hope does this key open, and, my friends, it is the only key that opens any door of the Future. If there were other keys, you might well be careless about this one, but there is no other and this fits every ward in the mysterious lock—the thought of the completions beyond.

In this thought of the future life as a life of completions, the Bible truth of the resurrection becomes intelligible. We have often worried our minds with details and grown confused with minor distinctions concerning the resurrection which were of comparatively little value, and have thus lost sight of the great central truth that the spiritual body, with which we should in the resurrection be clothed, would complete and satisfy and fill out all our longings.

*Founder of the Christian Endeavor organization.

The most unwholesome and grotesque speculations have been indulged in as to how the particles of the body would come together and assume their proper place in the resurrection day. But these are the fancies of the poet and the theologian. Paul, who wrote about all the direct teaching there is in the Bible concerning the resurrection, never indulged in any such crude theories. Read over again the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians with this clue in your hands—the resurrection is the beginning of the perfect, complete life, in the perfect and untrammelled spiritual body, and see if there is not a new significance in these verses. How his hot, impetuous, eloquent words follow one another, all centering in this one grand idea—that the imperfect shall be merged into the perfect, the incomplete into the complete, the partial into the whole.

Listen to them: "It"—this body—limited, circumscribed, bound down—this body, full of aches and pains, and weakness—this body—"is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put die with intellect shrouded with delirium, so that friends can scarcely recognize the one beloved; if these, and a multitude of other divers accidents befall us, are we to enter those worn-out, diseased bodies again, and bear them through eternity?" Nay; "this vile body is to be changed that it may be fashioned like unto Christ's most glorious body." "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we are also to bear the image of the heavenly!"

LET us thank God and take courage as we think of the completions that await us! Here we feel our limitations at every step. In all our plans and our work, we come, as it were, suddenly against a solid blank wall which there is no getting over or through or under. That is our limitation. We must stop, leave our work undone, our plans unexecuted, our designs incomplete.

For a generous, eager spirit, I think this is the hardest trial of life. It is not that sickness and pain are so hard to bear, though these are a sore tribulation. But the fact that he cannot do what he would, that he has found his limitation, that his life must be incomplete, that is the thing that cuts us to the heart. "So much to do, so little done!"

We need to tread reverently and humbly when we are talking about these high things of the future; but it is no presumption for us to say that heaven means completion, perfection, and we may safely carry out that thought as far as we will.

Mr. Isaac Taylor, in his "Physical Theory of Another Life," has thus sketched reverently what we may expect may be the perfection of the spiritual body:

1st, an enlarged power of mind over matter; such as shall enable one to move at will through the physical universe.

2nd, a direct perception and knowledge of all the facts of that universe.

3rd, a perfect memory.

4th, the power of incessant mental activity.

5th, the power of exact utterance—in other words, a perfect language.

6th, the body a perfect instrument and servant of the mind.

In other words, this is only saying that the imperfect shall be made perfect, the incomplete complete, and God all and in all.

YES, that is Heaven! The dwarf shall attain his full stature; the cripple shall be made whole; the blind shall see; the diseased shall attain perfect health; the young, full maturity; the aged, perpetual youth; the clouded mind, clear mental vision. What is this but saying that we shall be made complete? We speak of the blind. But we are all blind. Some can see more than others; but there are many things in the material universe, how much more in the spiritual, to which all our eyes are sealed. The horizon of the longest sight is only a little ways off. There we shall all see.

We speak of the cripple; but that word is used only in the comparative degree. We are all cripples. The roundest and strongest only reach the limit of speed and endurance a little later than the one whom we pity as the cripple. We speak of the healthy and diseased; but again this is only a comparative matter. Some can endure a little more, run a little faster, last a little longer. In some the blood sparkles with a ruddier glow; that is all—the seeds that bring senility and decrepitude and death are in every one.

There, the inhabitant "never saith, I am sick"; there, labor is no exertion, thought never wears out the brain cells, years never write in wrinkles, travel never tires, courage never flags. We sing and take comfort in singing, "There is rest for the weary"; but it is a greater comfort to me to think there is no need of rest, because there is no weariness; no night, because there are none tired and sleepy; no hospital, because there are none sick, and because sorrow and sighing have fled away!

This completeness, crowned by the conscious presence of God the Father and Christ the Elder Brother, is Heaven!

UNDAAUNTED by lack of numbers, five young Christians in the copper-mining town of Valdes, Alaska, organized a Christian Endeavor society, which met in a tent on the beach. Soon increasing numbers necessitated a move to a larger tent and then to a log cabin. A Sunday School was started, a reading-room opened, and finally a church was established. The Endeavorers put in thirty-four days erecting a relief hut half-way across a twenty-five mile glacier on which several men had perished, and in stocking the hut with food, fuel and sleeping-bags. Many have found it a place of refuge, indeed. And all of this from the beginning made by only five!

Our Sunday Service at Home

The Christian Herald Sermon is now read in many Homes as a Sunday Evening Service, a simple form of conducting which is outlined below. Neighbors should be cordially invited

Order of Service

Opening Hymn—"My Days Are Gliding Swiftly By," "Sweet Hour of Prayer."

Invocation—"The Lord's Prayer"—all join.

Scripture Reading—Psalm 46: The Divine Sovereignty.

Dr. Jowett's Sunday Meditation—(See page 909, first column.)

Sermon—"HEAVEN, THE LAND OF COMPLETION!"—To be read aloud by the head of the household or his substitute.

Requests for Prayer—These may be offered by any of those present who feel led to do so. The requests may be forwarded to Pastor Sheldon, in New York for submission to the Prayer League.

Closing Hymn—"From Every Stormy Wind That Blows," or "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow."

Benediction—By Pastor Charles M. Sheldon, to be read aloud:

May the best we have ever asked for our own good be granted to all present today, and to the absent ones, wherever they are. Make our meeting gracious with thought of others, tender in the hallowed emotions of worship, sweet as the ointment that Mary poured out on the Saviour's feet. And may we go to the day's work refreshed with the restfulness of Thy presence. AMEN.

on immortality; so when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

NO PETTY details here, no quibbling about the how and when, but this glorious truth held to, as the shipwrecked mariner holds to the life-line, that completeness and satisfaction await us at the resurrection—incorruption for corruption, immortality for mortality, glory for dishonor, power for weakness. That is always the Bible idea of the spiritual body.

The two Greek words which the Apostle uses in II Corinthians carry out this thought: "If our earthly house of this tabernacle, this tent, were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." One is a tent, a mere temporary, insecure dwelling—that is the nature of these bodies of clay. The other, the spiritual body, which we shall occupy, is the house, the substantial, permanent complete dwelling, eternal in the heavens.

The shipwrecked sailor does not care so much how he gets to shore if he only gets there, and finds health and home and happiness. I do not so much care how I am raised—that interminable question on which so much breath has been wasted—if I know that in my spiritual body I shall be complete in Him.

"If we die wasted with consumption"; it has been eloquently said, "if we die with limbs and features swollen and distorted with dropsy, if we die on the battlefield with limbs mangled and broken; if we die of old age, full of weakness and decrepitude, or if we

The Daily Meditation

By Revs. J. H. Jowett, D.D., E. W. Caswell, D. J. Burrell, D.D., and R. Braunstein

Rejoicing Amid Suffering

SUNDAY. II Cor. 12:10. "I have pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake." This is one of the strange paradoxes of the apostle Paul. He takes the most unlikely and unfriendly things, and he brings them into vital union. You can find them everywhere throughout his life and teachings. Words like these: "Having nothing, yet possessing all things"; "We glory in tribulation"; "When I am weak, then am I strong." It is like the marriage of two quite opposite personalities. It is like marrying summer and winter, or midnight and noon.

The New Testament is full of the strains of this extraordinary kind of joy. Let us listen to just one of the strains. Here are two men, at one time fishermen at the lake of Galilee, and they have been witnessing to the resurrection of their Lord. They have been arrested, and they have been scourged. With their backs still bleeding, they are going forth into the world again. Now then: "And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name!" That is the Lord's beatitude in action. But where does such joy come from? Where are its springs?

It surely is a very extraordinary kind of rejoicing! What do these men and women find in their dark experiences which makes them sing like nightingales in gloomy woods? Do they make any discoveries in the darkness which explains their joy? Yes, that is the secret; they have some supremely precious findings which make reproach and persecution seem like nothing. What do they discover? They have the wonderful joy of discovering God in more and more of His glory. The dark places become the home of vision. They find their eyes in the night, and they penetrate the veil of the darkness and see the Lord. Here is one of them; he is surrounded by men who hate him; they are gnashing upon him with their teeth; the stones are even now in their hands with which they will destroy him. How now? "But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God." That is a typical discovery of apostolic life. The blocked road is wedded to the open heavens. When the apostles are shut in by the enmities and antagonisms of men, their spiritual culture becomes more intensive, and the fruits of the spirit appear in amazing strength and glory.

But there is another discovery which they make in their darkness. They have the joy of discovering other souls, and winning them to the Lord. There are some folk who are only found through the medium of dark experiences. If we never suffered they would never be won. The revelation made through suffering becomes a constraint which they can not resist. What I mean is this: we see some man's noble bearing under reproach, and the splendid testimony, lays its grip upon us. A brave and radiant endurance makes conquests of many men who would be unmoved by words spoken in sunny circumstances. It is the encircling gloom which makes the testimony glorious. I verily believe that Stephen's magnificent bearing in the night laid hold of Saul of Tarsus and would not let him go. Saul never got away from it, and it colored his thought and life to the very end. When he himself was stoned at Lystra, a young fellow was looking on, and looking on with awe-inspired admiration, and the constraint won him to the Lord. It was in the nighttime that Paul discovered Timothy, the strong and vital comrade in the labors of his latter years. No wonder he gloried in tribulation.

And surely it is in antagonism that we discover the joy of battle. To be hit, and yet to go at it again! Is there no deep joy in that? To be stoned in Lystra, and yet to go back again! Coming out of the hospital and voluntarily going straight back to the front. With that sort of courage there goes a strange joy, and it is the joy of the Lord.

J. H. J.

The Changing and the Abiding

MONDAY. I Cor. 7:31. "For the fashion of this world passeth away." When I recently visited Herkimer, New York, the place of my birth, and where I preached in the beginning of my ministry, I found that the home of my childhood and the church of my choice had given place to other structures. I also ascertained that relatives and acquaintances of my early days had nearly all passed away. Standing almost alone in the busy town, a flood of memories rushed in upon my mind. The rose leaves of former friendships were refreshingly fragrant. The loving-kindness of those who had led me to the Saviour, who had trained and educated me in the Christian life in my young manhood, was a sweet-smelling savor to my spirit.

I realized that no changes of seasons, places or years could make any change in the love and devotion of the followers of Him Who is the same yesterday, today and forever. Though the temporary home is dissolved, how grand to know that the permanent residence is prepared, a building of God, eternal in the heavens. Paul and the beloved John had actual knowledge of the Celestial City. They had been caught up into the heavenly places. It is the city of the "No-Mores"—no more death, sin, sorrow, separation, night, wars or evil.

There, in the church triumphant, whose walls are salvation, whose gates are praise, whose choirs are angels, whose congregations are from all races, kindreds and tongues of the world, how glorious must be the family life of the infinite Father!

So the Christian pilgrim exclaims—

"Beyond the sunset's crimson bars,
Beyond the twilight and the stars,
Beyond the midnight and the dark,
Sail on, sail on, O happy barque,
Into the dawn of that tomorrow
Where hearts shall find the end of sorrow
And love shall find its own."

E. W. C.

Workers with God

TUESDAY. II Cor. 6:1. "We then, as workers together with him." "We are workers." It is not possible to conceive of Christian men and women as not being busy. The shirker, slacker, idler and drone are the abnormal items in a normal scheme of things. The word "work" was an important one in the vocabulary of Jesus. "My Father's business" was a fine phrase of His teaching. To be a consistent Christian, a true follower of Jesus Christ, calls for sound thinking and strenuous toil.

Edward Everett Hale said, "The greatest word of the next one hundred years will be 'Together.'" It is a great word in business and in religion. It means co-operation and that means team-work. In unity of purpose and agreement of goals lies the strength of our Christian labors. "We are workers together with Him." It is the will of God that we forget self and selfish interests, and so labor that we shall be helpful to the greatest number. This takes us at once beyond the border of our provincial plans into the wider fields of God's eternal purpose for the world. "The world is our parish." Let us study bigger maps.

A young man entered a florist's shop. Taking an American Beauty rose out of a jar, he said: "See what God has made." The clerk of the shop went into the rear and shortly returned with a wild rose, fresh and pink as it had that morning been plucked from its native soil. Said the clerk, "See what God has made." Then he took the American Beauty rose and said, "See what God and man have made together." God made the forests, but He never made a farm or a garden. Man with God has done that. God made the quarries, but He never made a cathedral. Man with God has done that. The same truth holds in the religious world, in that while man has done some very great things, it is impossible for him to do anything worth mentioning, without the raw materials—the first impulse—as given by God. We are workers together with God, honored as His partners, blessed as fellow laborers.

R. B.

Helping God's Plan

WEDNESDAY. Col. 1:16. "By Him were all things created." It has pleased God to arrange all things in genera; "each after its kind"; and here is where we become laborers together with Him. We can not originate a genus; but within generic lines we can develop better things. This is as far as development can go. There is not a single fact to show for godless evolution or for any "origin of species" apart from a creative fiat.

A wise man named Burbank plants a vineyard. He fences it and fills it with vines. Ask him to create a vine or even a grape seed, and he will smile at you. Let him call in all the scientists on earth, and their combined wisdom can not do it. But he can prune his vines and graft them cleverly, and produce a better vine and a more succulent grape. This is real "evolution," which rests not on guesswork but on established facts. And so far forth Burbank is a laborer together with God.

At evening a boy, sitting at the window and looking toward the west, says to his father, "I wish God would let me help Him." "What would you like to do?" "I would like to help Him paint His sunsets." The boy grows up, studies art and puts a sunset on canvas. The miracle is still God's; but the artist, in painting the sunset, has paid a glowing tribute to the miracle; and thus, according to his ability, has become a laborer together with God.

D. J. B.

The Christ Ideal

THURSDAY. I Cor. 7:20. "Let each man abide in the calling wherein he was called." How happy the man who, by prayer and faith, ascertains God's plan of life for him and is willing to accept the plan and specifications, following the Christ ideal. What an honor to be called to a service by the Infinite One, which means, at the end of life here, a throne and crown of life eternal! We are therefore, not orphans, but children of the everlasting Father. Abraham accepted the call and founded a nation. Moses hesitated because slow of speech, but when the divine Spirit said, "I Am that I Am is with you; I will be with thy mouth," he became the leader of Israel.

More than a century ago the Spirit of God called a youth, saying, "Go, preach my Gospel." Young Matthew Simpson replied, "I never can, for everybody says I am ungainly as a declaimer. My voice is thin and squeaky; I can't commit anything perfectly to memory, and, what is worst of all, it will break my poor mother's heart." Finally, under deep conviction, he went to his mother with the story. She said, with glowing eyes and bounding heart: "My dear son, I have been waiting to hear you say that ever since you were born." Bishop Simpson blew the trumpet of the Gospel with an eloquence that often caused vast congregations to rise to their feet and shout with glory.

How can a person refuse the call of God to service, to honor, glory and an immortality of bliss? He who guides the bee, the birds and planets, will not fail to lead us safely who are but little lower than the angels. Each follower of Christ is chosen for a special service by Him. Who knows what you can do when aided by His almighty power.

E. W. C.

Life Further On

FRIDAY. Eccles. 1:8. "All things are full of labor; man can not utter it." The Suez Canal, which we credit to de Lesseps, was originally projected by Pharaoh Necho, who wrote of "binding the Sea of the Rising Sun with the Sea of the Setting Sun." The Mont Cenis Tunnel, which we reckon as one of the notable achievements of modern times, was originally conceived in 200 B.C. by Hannibal, who having led his legions to the foot of the Alps deliberated as to whether he should "climb over them or dig under them." The trans-Siberian Railway, which is the crowning glory of Russia, was projected by Alexander the Great during his campaign for the conquest of the world. It is obvious that no high purpose fails; but always the future must be reckoned with.

Let our cloud-capped towers vanish into thin air so long as the Valley of Achor is a door of hope. The incompleteness of life argues for a life further on. We shall climb the last mountain on our journey, with the prayer of Moses on our lips: "Let thy work appear unto thy servants and thy glory unto their children: let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it." Though not permitted to enter the Land of Promise, we may from the heights of Nebo behold its fields all dressed in living green.

D. J. B.

The Principle of Sacrifice

SATURDAY. John 17:10. "For their sakes I sanctify myself." If self-preservation be the first law of nature, self-sacrifice is the first law of grace. Without sacrifice on the part of God, there would have been no Gospel to preach, and without sacrifice on the part of the preachers through the ages, the Gospel would never have had such a wide influence. Without sacrifice on the part of the rank and file, there would be no Gospel lived. It costs much to be a follower of Christ, but costs much more not to be His follower.

There are four contributions which every Christian is asked to make for the establishment of the Kingdom. They are: the preaching of the Gospel with lip and life to every creature; a personal witnessing to Christ as the Saviour; prayers for laborers to enter the vineyard of ministry and service; sending of gifts, to make it possible for others to go into the field of noble endeavor. In other words: Preach, Reach, Pray and Pay.

Christianity was founded on sacrifice. It can only be propagated by sacrifice. We can not, dare not, exclude Calvary from our plans and programs. If our faith is rich, it is because we have poured into it the costliest part of ourselves. It can be said of any great institution that it is the life of some man, or woman, group of men or women, who poured out their lives in sacrificial thought and endeavor.

The Son of God died for the continuity and perpetuation of Christianity. If we would reign with Him, we must suffer with him. Calvary precedes resurrection; the Cross comes before the crown.

R. B.

TO THE HOLY LAND

Under Sunny Skies
By Historic Shores

Away from winter, across the seas, following in the footsteps of the Crusaders

LUXURIOUS MEDITERRANEAN CRUISE

Sails February 11th, 1922, on Cunard Liner, "CAR-MANIA"—under the exclusive management of the American Express Company, visiting Madeira, Cadiz, Gibraltar, Algiers, The Riviera, Naples, Pompeii, Rome, Fiume, Venice, Athens, Constantinople, Palestine and Egypt.

These lands so intimately connected with religious history, with its wonder story, its sacred appeal, its divine and significant past. The relaxation of travel under ideal conditions—an inspiration for a lifetime.

Cruise membership limited to 450 on a giant liner carrying normally nearly 800 passengers. PRICE, including all expenses, $850 up.

Write now for Full Information—
Ask for booklet 12

AMERICAN EXPRESS CO.

65 Broadway,
New York

A Small Girl—and a Lesson

A FEW weeks ago I mentioned in one of my articles a small girl named Henrietta. I told you very little about her—I limited myself to a brief paragraph or two—but, if you will remember, I said that I would tell you more of her at a later date. This is the later date!

At the time that I mentioned her, Henrietta was very dangerously ill—she was lying in a narrow hospital bed, trying to recover from an extremely critical operation. I did not like to say very much just then, for we who cared for the child were talking very little—and praying a great deal. But now—I can talk as much as I want to. For Henrietta's daddy has just told me that she is making the most splendid progress—that she is getting well faster than the most optimistic doctor dared hope.

I told you in that article, a few weeks ago, something about the way Henrietta spent her last hour before going to the hospital. I told you how she went, with her mother and father, into a great department store to buy gift stockings—empty gift stockings of colored tulle. And I told you how she said when she was questioned:

"I'm going to fill them for the little children on the East Side—who won't have very much Christmas. I'll have plenty of time to fill them while I'm getting better!"

It is a significant thing that Henrietta did not mention the possibility that she might not get better. For Henrietta could give lessons in optimism to many a grown-up. But, there—I'm getting ahead of my story!

IT WAS when the great epidemic of infantile paralysis swept over this country that Henrietta's trouble first came upon her. She was stricken suddenly, one day, and for many weeks her life hung by a thread. That the thread was allowed to remain intact was almost a miracle—many children, less sick than she, did not stand even a chance of recovery.

I cannot help feeling that God kept her because of the place she was destined to fill—the lesson that she was to teach.

So she got well—partly. Her child mind became normal, and the fever left her, and physicians began to talk with great enthusiasm. But the infantile paralysis is an insidious enemy that sometimes refuses to go. It left Henrietta with great reluctance—and it left its mark upon her. For when she was pronounced well her two legs were very badly crippled.

Of course it meant braces and wheel-chairs and expert medical attention. It meant the unceasing care and vigilance of a devoted mother and father. It meant vast expenditures on "new" doctors and nurses and cures. And that was all that it did mean. For few people have dared even to dream of a cure for the disease that has always done its best to destroy childhood.

At first Henrietta's mother and father did not tell the child how serious her condition was. When, at last, they tried to tell her they found, to their great surprise, that she already knew. And that she had known for some time. But she had kept her silence bravely, never even whispering a complaint—never breathing a single word of bitterness or resentment.

New York City—which is Henrietta's home—is a curious place.

Proving, Once More, That "a Little Child Shall Lead Them"

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The people who live in New York are not very "folksy"; they know appallingly little about the art of neighboring. One may live next door to a celebrity—or a criminal—and never know it. But in Henrietta's case it was quite different. Somehow the folk who lived near her came to be acquainted with her—somehow other folk, who lived farther away, heard about her. There was something in her sweetness of character, in her strangely adult view of life, that attracted people.

You who have children—and you who haven't any—will be able to count the number of years back to that great epidemic. You will know that it wasn't a long time ago—when counted by years. But counted by the friends that Henrietta has made it was a very long time indeed. For she has made many friends, and some very remarkable ones.

There are artists, writers, and poets in her little intimate circle. Great novelists and dramatists have given her private readings. Great humorists have made life brighter for her. World-famous musicians and world-famous ministers have played for her—and prayed for her. And all because God had put a spark of something rather wonderful into her soul!

I have known Henrietta for some time. And I can think of no one who looks on life more beautifully than she does. She sees the romance and the adventure and the wonder of everything. Out of her wee allowance she gives to the charities—she raised money for Mont-Lawn last summer, and for the China Famine last winter. This week she sent a dollar for the Bowery Mission.

WHEN tidings came of a great doctor who made little crippled bodies whole again, Henrietta's father and mother had almost reached the end of hope. They had tried so many doctors—and with such a burning lack of success! It seemed almost unbelievable that anything could be done. But they took the final chance and traveled with her to Boston, where the great doctor performs marvelous operations.

The doctor is a busy man. He cannot undertake to cure all the children who come to him, for he can do only a certain amount of work. But after he had talked with Henrietta for ten minutes, his mind was made up.

"This child must be helped, if possible," he said; "she is worth helping!" And almost immediately he bade the eager mother and father make preparations. And the upshot of the matter was that Henrietta, today, is lying in bed with great plaster casts encasing her small body, and with wedges at each knee joint, and with a frame that might have been built for the Spanish Inquisition, pulling this way and that!

I'm not going to say any more about Henrietta. It's about her influence that I want to speak—about the lesson that she taught. I want to tell you how a certain prayer meeting asked God to protect her, because one of its members was one of her friends. And of how, in a publishing office, there was a prayer for her. And of how, when any of her chance acquaintances feels cross or blue, the thought of her is like a gentle rebuke. I want to tell you how she has, quite unconsciously, preached the gospel of selflessness and good cheer. And how her small, nearly broken life has proved again, that "a little child shall lead them."

FREE 30 DAY TRIAL
SEND NO MONEY
EASY PAYMENTS IF IT SUITS YOU

JUST WRITE AND SAY YOU WANT TO TRY THE

Faultless Automatic Drop-Head, Steel Ball Bearing Sewing Machine

When it arrives use it free for one month. If then you are fully satisfied with it, send us $3.60—and pay $3.60 each month for 6 months—$28.80 in all. If it does not suit you, ship it back at our expense.

Genuine Oak Woodwork, beautifully finished; Iron Stand, enameled glossy black; Head folds inside, leaving flat table top; Automatic Bobbin Winder; Self Threading Cylinder Shuttle; Adjustable Stitch; All up to date improvements. All tools and accessories free.

25 Year NATIONAL FARM EQUIPMENT CO., Inc. Over 100,000 Guarantee DEPT. 44 98 CHAMBERS ST., New York In Use

YARN
100% VIRGIN WOOL

Beautiful sweaters, scarfs, shawls, jackets, hoods, gloves, stockings—dozens of lasting garments—for grown-ups and children cost less when you make them from Homewool 100% Virgin Wool Yarn. Direct from mill to you at big savings. Big skeins. Easy to make up. Attractive colors. Send today for free sample cards and Homewool Catalog.

Home Woolen Mills, Etah, 1876
244 Main Street, Eaton Rapids, Mich.
Send for Catalog—it is FREE.

"HOMEWOOL"

KONDON'S
CATARRHAL JELLY

is guaranteed by 30 years service to millions of Americans. Kondon's works wonders for your cold, sneezing, cough, chronic catarrh, headache, sore nose, etc.

FREE

20 Treatment tin on receipt of your name and address
KONDON
Minneapolis, Minn.

Druggists have it
30c

YARN DIRECT FROM THE MILL

PRICES REDUCED. Popular shades of Worsted and Sport Mixtures. Agents wanted. NORFOLK YARN CO. 739 B Boylston St. Boston 17 Mass. SAMPLES FREE

4-POUND SILK BUNDLES

WONDERFUL SILK AND VELVET BARGAINS
For Quilts, Fancy Work, Portieres, etc. Send 10 Cents for big package of large beautiful silk remnant including free quilt designs and apron, catalogue describing our 4-pound silk velvet, satin, and other remnant bargain bundles. Delicious long life—very money at home by mail. UNION S. WORKS 263 FACTORY ST., BOONVILLE N.Y.

Paul's Last Words

International Sunday School Lesson for December 18
II Tim. 4: 6-18

By REV. SAMUEL D. PRICE, D.D.

TO BE able in old age to write such a letter as Paul sent to Timothy is worth all the cost of suffering and toil involved. The great letter-writer with whom we have kept close company since last July goes on from spiritual strength to still higher spiritual strength as his years increase. As Jesus began His great work of training the disciples and apostles for constructive Kingdom-building after His year of popular favor, so Paul has men like Titus, Mark and Timothy in mind as those who must be well equipped to become Christian leaders in great centers and carry on the work. He writes to them that they in turn may be "thoroughly furnished unto every good work."

After being under guard for two years, Paul was released. Professor Ramsay suggests that the full time had elapsed within which witnesses from Jerusalem must come to Rome and appear against Paul. Either none came or their testimonies were not able to substantiate the charges. It will be remembered that Felix, Festus and Agrippa were personally ready to free Paul after they listened to the charges and rebuttal. The imprisonment at Caesarea and Rome had already been costly to the imperial government. Then there had been an expensive journey to Rome, as well as the cost of the heavy guard placed about Paul from Jerusalem to Caesarea. Paul's appeal to Caesar was justified and he at length became a free man once more.

The letter to Titus of Crete and the first epistle to Timothy of Ephesus were written after being released from Rome. From these pastoral letters it is known that the apostle again became an itinerant preacher and overseer, or bishop. Reading these two letters, you will find that he went at least to Greece, Crete, Ephesus and through Troas on the way to Macedonia. He evidently planned to spend the winter at Nicopolis in Epirus (Titus 3: 12).

MEANWHILE conditions for the Christians in Rome and throughout the Roman Empire had become extremely serious. The terrible persecutions under Nero reached their height and the life of a Christian became a mere plaything. Some of the awful events are described in your Roman histories and encyclopedias. Paul, by reason of his aggressiveness, was a marked man, and after being arrested, was taken to Rome a second time. Now his condition was decidedly different than on the former occasion, when he dwelt for two years in his "own hired house" and had the utmost freedom of utterance. By reason of persistent tradition, the traveler to Rome today is shown that underground cell where Paul was confined in the Mamertine prison. Now there is a door in the wall for the entrance of the pilgrim; but in Paul's time, the only entrance for light or for the prisoner was through a circular hole in the roof.

If Paul was killed in A. D. 66, and if he was born about the time of the birth of Jesus (say B. C. 4), he was 70 when, from his place of misery, the second letter was written to Timothy. Winter was close at hand and the cell stones gave no warmth to the old evangelist, enfeebled by his hardships which covered many years. He greatly needed his cloak which he had left at Troas (4: 13). But more than that eagerly desired garment he wanted the warmth of the love and friendship of his spiritual son Timothy, and of Mark also. This reference to John Mark will have a rich meaning, if you will turn back to the lesson studies for August 7 and 21. The man whom he had deserted at Perga could not have rejoiced the heart of Mark more by any other message; but Mark was worthy of this full restoration to friendship and partnership. Without question, both Timothy and Mark hastened to reach Paul that they might minister to him in things material and spiritual, according to their utmost ability.

Some errands of mercy cannot be put off. While hurrying to Rome, they talked with great sorrow over the fact that when Paul had his hearing or trial, not a single friend was with him except the Best Friend, who never fails any one. Where Dr. Luke was just then is not explained, for he was with his beloved friend at the time when Paul wrote this letter to Timothy. Picture Paul, standing alone with and for his Lord (vs. 17), preaching once more the Gospel of salvation through Christ. But though these two friends hastened, Paul's earthly days were ended before they could reach Rome. Because he was a Roman citizen, Paul did not receive indignities at his death, but was released from further earthly service by the executioner, as the head was severed from the wornout body at one stroke of the sword.

These are days when, by means of the talking-machine, a man's voice is heard after he leaves the earth. Many have been listening with special attention during the past months to the songs of Caruso. How Timothy must have cherished that last letter from his great-hearted friend who had discovered him at Lystra about nineteen years before! Surely when he reached Rome he sought out the prison cell and the place of execution and reread thoroughly, tearfully and thoughtfully this precious epistle, which has become so helpful to the whole Christian world. There are places where books have an added meaning.

TURN now to II Timothy and read the entire epistle. It will take only ten minutes, but you will find encouragement and instruction to last a life-time. Some of the verses are especially rich with meaning, such as 1: 7-12; 2: 3, 4, 15; 3: 16; 4: 2, 5, 7, 8. Choose others for yourself as you again read II Timothy. Commit those special verses to memory if you have not already done so. This letter is especially valuable, because it is written from his last prison; everywhere it is more than courageous, it is bold, it is ringing with declarations of victory! From no book in the Bible are texts taken more frequently at the time of the ordination and installations of ministers and church officers.

"What is success?" is a good question to ask at all times. Was the life of decapitated Paul a failure? His own declaration is the best answer. He said, with a ring of triumph, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith." Nero might order an execution, but that event would merely release him from earth's responsibilities to receive the eternal riches from his Heavenly Father. For him to live was Christ and to die was gain.

Paul's thoughts were on the goal. Those who look for Christ at the goal can run the last lap with added strength. Not Paul's record but his relationship to his Lord made him sure of the crown of eternal life, with all its attendant blessednesses. Paul rejoiced in the fact that his heavenly possessions would not deprive any one from receiving similar joys. The highest and best things are "for all those who love His appearing."

It seems very fitting that, as we conclude these studies in the life of Paul, we should devoutly weigh the rich meaning of the apostolic benediction, which is Paul's prayer for each of us as well as for the Christians who were at the time in Corinth: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all."

IF THE Jews in New York City should establish a city by themselves it would equal the population of Philadelphia, and be the largest Jewish city in the world.

Be More Careful

of your teeth—combat the film

If you are brushing your teeth in a wrong way, learn what this new way means.

Authorities now advise it. Leading dentists everywhere are urging its daily use. Millions of people employ it.

Make this ten-day test and let the results show you what really clean teeth mean.

That dingy film

Film is what clouds the teeth's beauty. It causes most tooth troubles. Countless teeth discolor and decay because the old ways of brushing do not effectively fight film.

Film is that viscous coat you feel. It clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays. That is what discolors—not the teeth.

Film is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Germs breed by millions in it. They with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Ways to end it

Dental science has in late years found two ways to fight film. It has proved them by careful tests. Now they are embodied in a new-day tooth-paste—called Pepsodent—for daily application.

Pepsodent PAT. OFF.
REG. U. S.

The New-Day Dentifrice

A scientific film combatant, whose every application brings five desired effects. Approved by highest authorities, and now advised by leading dentists everywhere. All druggists supply the large tubes.

Dentists here and abroad now advise it. It is now bringing a new dental era to some 40 races of people.

Other new effects

Pepsodent brings three other effects, natural and very important.

It multiplies the salivary flow—Nature's great tooth-protecting agent. It multiplies the starch digestant in the saliva, to digest starch deposits. They may otherwise cling and form acids.

It multiplies the alkalinity of the saliva, to neutralize the acids which cause tooth decay.

Thus every use does five things which dental authorities now regard as essential.

You'll quickly see

A 10-Day tube of Pepsodent is sent to all who ask. That shows the delightful effects. In a week you will realize that this method means much to you and yours.

Send the coupon for it. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth whiten as the film-coats disappear.

Watch all the effects, then read the reasons in our book. That test may lead to life-long benefits. Cut out the coupon now.

10-Day Tube Free 755

THE PEPSODENT COMPANY,
Dept. 482, 1104 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Mail 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to

Only one tube to a family.

A DELIGHTFUL CHRISTMAS GIFT—Distinctive Unique Pleasing

THREE PENCILS in beautiful embossed genuine leather case with your name engraved in 18 karat Gold on pencils and case. Stamps accepted. 60 cents
THE IMPRINT PENCIL COMPANY, 530 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

PATENTS Send sketch or model for preliminary examination. Booklet free. Highest references. Best results. Promptness assured. Watson E. Coleman, Patent Lawyer, 624 F St., Washington, D. C.

MEDETS - WONDER MONEY MAKERS mend leaks instantly in all utensils, hot water bags, etc. Insert and tighten. 10c and 25c package postpaid. AGENTS WANTED. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 444-A, Amsterdam, N. Y.

Hygeia

—the SAFE Nursing Bottle

The broad, flexible breast is so like mother's that it makes weaning easy. Look for "Hygeia" on bottle, breast, and box. Sold in red and black cartons at drug stores everywhere.

How Often Do You Endanger Baby's Health?

Every time you give baby a feeding in a narrow-necked bottle you invite dangerous sickness. The Hygeia was invented by a doctor to protect his own child. It is the safe bottle for your baby. It is wide-mouthed and cleanable. Write for free booklet "Healthy Babies."

The Hygeia Nursing Bottle Co., Inc.
1206 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Don't Use

this dangerous narrow-necked bottle. The narrow opening prevents perfect cleaning. Every time you use it—over 2000 times a year—you endanger baby's health and life.

Don't neglect a Cold

Dangerous sickness often starts with a cold. Ward off your colds with Musterole before pneumonia starts.

Musterole is a clean, white ointment made with oil of mustard. It has all the healing properties of the old-fashioned mustard plaster but none of the unpleasant features.

Musterole is not messy to apply and without the blister.

At the first sneeze or sniffle take down the little white jar of Musterole from the bathroom shelf and rub the ointment gently over the congested spot.

With a tingling warmth it penetrates the skin and goes right down to the seat of trouble.

Rheumatism, tonsillitis, lumbago, coughs and colds are all symptoms that call for Musterole.

Order Musterole today from your druggist. 35c and 65c in jars and tubes; hospital size, $3.

The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio
BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 88
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

The Extra Baby

Continued from page 905
times when Nellie had smiled when she wanted to weep and lashed herself on when her body cried for rest and did without that others might have. It was turned over in heart-sickening sums to physicians who introduced specialists and to specialists who recommended a sanatorium.

And finally, after many uncertain months, when Nature had demanded what human nature had denied, and the physical scales were adjusted once more to life and work, Nellie came home to a household presided over by a competent new mistress who had graduated from high school and settled down to the deadly monotony of a small town without so much as an audible sigh.

Then, one day, Fate, that sardonic croupier of life, gave his wheel a spectacular spin and when it stopped, with the whole community looking on breathlessly, Pauline, who, in spite of blight and drouth and chilling winds, had never for an instant ceased her blooming, became the bride of one of the wealthiest and most worthy young gentlemen in the vicinity. With youthful stateliness she had walked up the dingy aisle of her father's little church, to the music of soaring organ notes that were like heartbeats under tulle. Her lips were parted in a rapt, incredulous smile as she was led by stalwart magnificence past her mother and her brothers in the familiar family pew.

The next evening, after the last crumb of the meager wedding-cake had been devoured, the last colorful bit of confetti swept from the brick walk, the boys returned to school and business, Mark and Nellie found their way out into the fragrant rural stillness that brooded over the little town. The spring evening was opalescent and alluring. The sun had set. Dusk was blurring the trees that arched the broad roadway that traversed the length of the town. Before them, glimmering in silver streaks between the trees, the river shimmered. Arm in arm they strolled past friendly groups who beckoned from porch and garden as they continued slowly downward toward the water. Their meditations blended in profound silence. Mark was the first to speak.

"As soon as the wedding expenses are cleared up, we'll be on easy street, Nellie. Since the older boys insist upon helping Paul, we can think now of ourselves."

Nellie tightened her grasp upon his arm. "What will we ever do with all our money!" she exclaimed.

"By the first of September the bills should all be cleaned up. Then we can begin on some of the things we've wanted all our lives," he said.

THEY reached the river, sat down upon a fallen tree and talked until darkness prompted them to turn and retrace their steps. When they were within sight of the parsonage again, Nellie's voice, a trifle strained, reached him through the darkness.

"Mark," she said, "would you mind very much if we didn't begin on the clothes and furniture until, say, October or November?" She hurried on breathlessly. "There are things I can't tell even you, dear, but Amelia Crofton, poor girl—The judge's wife and I are trying quietly to get her away—before Thanksgiving. You don't mind, Mark?" she questioned anxiously.

He did not reply at once, then, as though startled from a reverie he answered: "Of course not! A few months won't make any difference. I was just thinking," he concluded, "that perhaps we had better give ourselves a little leeway—say, until the first of January. That would give us a chance to help a little toward the memorial tablet and do something for the new hospital, before we thought of ourselves."

When they reached the parsonage, which was dark and lonely and noisily quiet as a last year's bird's nest, they drifted into the dining-room where Pauline's unpacked wedding gifts made a multicolored splash of sophisticated splendor against the drab and sordid background. For the hundredth time they went over them all, from the plated pickle-fork, a gift from the butcher's wife, to the chest of silver, from the family of the bridegroom.

Suddenly, and for no apparent reason, just as the stentorian clock in the kitchen struck eleven, Nellie flung her arms fiercely about Mark's neck and fell upon his shoulder, sobbing.

"Why, Nellie!" he exclaimed, enfolding her trembling figure within his powerful grasp, "what's the matter?" "Nothing," she sobbed, clinging tighter. "Nothing—only I'm so happy about Pauline!"

CHAPTER IV

AND at that very moment, while the mahogany clock on the mantel of a reception-room in a hotel a hundred miles away was chiming eleven silvery notes, Pauline Ronaldson, who had just returned from a concert, gazed into her husband's eyes and whispered. "Don, dear, I feel in my bones that Mother is weeping!"

She flung her apricot-colored cape over the back of a capacious chair and draped her lithe figure against its ingratiating folds. Her eyes were glistening and there was a tremulous twitching about the corners of her tender mouth.

"That's a foolish hunch, darling," said her husband.

"But, Don, they always do cry—don't they?"

"How should I know, sweetheart? Possibly she is. She never struck me as being that kind, though. She went through the ceremony and reception like a thoroughbred—why should she weep now?"

"Silly!" Pauline laughed unsteadily. "That's why. There's room for you in this chair," she suggested coquettishly.

"Your mother's a corking good sport," remarked Donald presently. "I feel awfully sorry for her, cooped up in a dead little town with no money—"

Pauline's blond head raised itself from his shoulder. She sat erect, looking at him with eyes that blazed in sudden defense. "Don," she began evenly, growing a little white about the lips, "if you love me, never, never, never even think pity for my Mother!"

"Why, what's the matter?" Donald exclaimed.

Pauline gulped. "The loveliest thing about Mother and Dad and the only thing that made being poor and having to scrimp along bearable, was not being sorry for ourselves." Her blue eyes lighted with enthusiasm. "Of course you couldn't know, but Dad and Mother have always lived a thrilling adventure. They've done the funniest things all their lives and been perfectly serious over them. Dad has dressed like a bricklayer and worked like a farmer and acted like a parson, and Mother's even taken in washing—"

"No!" interrupted Donald.

"Yes, really!" Pauline nodded vehemently. "To earn extra money to slip into the boys' letters when they were in college. She took school-teachers to board and when she thought nobody was looking, she slipped their clothes into the tub back of the washboard. When they were ironed, she wrapped them up in packages and the teachers never suspected who their laundress was. It was very exciting for Mother. If she had thought anybody ever knew, it would have been drudgery—and it would have killed her."

DONALD felt her heart racing against his shoulder. "That's great stuff," he conceded.

Pauline started to speak, then flushed painfully and fell silent.

"Don't mind me, Duck," encouraged Donald, squeezing the hand that lay in his.

"Well, you probably won't understand, Donald," she went on reluctantly, "because you know nothing about being hungry, but I've always had a perfectly absurd feeling that Dad has always wanted every bite I ever ate! You see, there was never any more than just barely enough to go around." She lowered her eyes. "If there had been one less of us, you see? I suppose they well they never thought of—twins," she explained, flushing. "I always felt,

The LAMP with the CLAMP

It CLAMPS Everywhere STANDS Anywhere

Adjusto-Lite

THE lamp of a thousand practical uses. Clamps—stands—hangs—anywhere and everywhere. All the light you need where and when you need it. Prevents eye strain—reduces light bills. No other lighting device like it.

Solid brass; handsome, durable and compact. Clamp is felt-lined—can't scratch. Guaranteed five years. Complete with 8-ft. cord and plug $5

Get an Adjusto-Lite today. If your dealer doesn't carry it, order direct.

S. W. FARBBER
141-151 So. Fifth St., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Prices in U. S. A., complete with 8-foot cord, plug and socket. Brush Brass finished $5.00; Statuary Bronze or Nickel finish $5.50. West of Mississippi, prices $5c per lamp higher.

TRADE MARK

Here Are Prices You've Been Waiting For

Why look further for low prices? "Kalamazoo-Direct-to-You" prices have hit bottom. Our savings to you are now the biggest in the history of our business. Prices quoted here show but a sample of what we can save for you.

Send for New List of Prices $18.95

and see the savings you can make on articles such as furnaces, washing machines, cream separators, fencing, shoes, paint, sewing machines, and a great line of farm and home needs.

Quick shipment. Cash or easy payments. Send a postal today and Ask for Catalog No. 103

Kalamazoo Stove Co. Mfrs., Kalamazoo, Mich.

A Kalamazoo Direct to You

IT SELDOM FAILS

Many boys and girls as they progress in their teens, outgrow strength.

Scott's Emulsion

should be given generously and regularly to most children of school-age. Scott's Emulsion is tonic-nourishment that seldom fails.

Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J. 20-47

LOOMS ONLY $9.90

Big Money in Weaving. rug, curtains, portieres, etc., at home; from rags and waste material. Weavers are rushed with orders. Send for free loan book, it tells all about the weaving business and our wonderful $9.90 and other low priced, easily operated looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 282 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

among so many boys, that I was the odd child. Since I've been older, I've felt that, since I was the extra baby, so to speak, it was up to me to make myself either excess baggage or — good measure."

Donald grinned. "Great dope!" he exclaimed. "Well, things will look up for them now. The boys are getting on. You've got a meal-ticket. They'll have everything for themselves."

Pauline smiled with wordly sophistication which contrasted charmingly with her inexperienced youth.

"Mother and Dad will never have anything all for themselves, Don," she exclaimed. "If they ever get an extra dollar ahead, they'll have a perfect gorge buying Bibles for the heathen or mending the washwoman's roof."

"But what are they going to do eventually? Your Father can't preach forever. Is there an Old Preachers' Home, or something?"

PAULINE shrugged her shoulders. A puzzled frown puckered her brow. "Oh, God's going to take care of them," she said, half smiling. "They have absolutely terrific faith. It's queer how it works out, too," she conceded, venturing a furtive glance at her husband's profile. "I never could understand it, but when Dad took to locking his study door and Mother got busy in her room—the queerest things began to happen!"

"Honestly?" Donald was serious.

"Cross my heart!" declared Pauline.

"But what's the hallucination—what do they think is going to become of them?" Donald asked soberly.

Pauline's eyes bubbled with merriment. Her tone, as she answered, was like that of one who speaks of visionary children. "They're going to have a little farm and raise pigs and chickens and have a cow. Why, Dad's already got a collection of old hoes and rakes in the cellar."

"But have they any money saved toward it?"

"Not a sou!" Pauline exclaimed.

"Then," demanded Donald, "where is it to come from?"

"Why—from God, of course."

"I see," said Donald quietly.

After a long silence Donald spoke.

His voice seemed to have become tangled about his Adam's apple.

"If your father wasn't so cock sure God was going to give him his farm—I might do it myself."

PAULINE sat upright, her passionately earnest eyes riveted upon his face.

"Last year," Donald continued, without looking at her, "when Uncle Henry's estate was settled, they wished a little farm on me. I've got a man there now farming it on shares," he explained. "Your father might let the man run the place until he was ready. Then, if the congregation got peevish—or anything."

Pauline caught her breath sharply. Her newly ringed fingers went up to her throbbing throat. The reflection of a dawning light gleamed in the depths of her luminous eyes.

"Donald," she said slowly, "I believe I begin to see—how things—work out!" She trailed her fingers across her brow. "I've always thought there was something frightfully mysterious about God. But—why, Don—isn't it all simple?" she gasped. "It's just through ordinary people, like you and me."

She leaned back and closed her eyes for a second and in that instant her winged imagination traversed the blackness of the night without and stole noiselessly through the locked front door of the distant parsonage, up the uncarpeted stairs, past the open study door and on through into the bedroom where she dropped to her knees beside the spent figures of her father and mother, who lay quietly, side by side. She was aroused, presently, by Donald's voice, thoughtful, but matter-of-fact.

"Of course, it's simple," he was saying, "So long as ordinary people—like you and me—don't put sand on God's side."

And he bent and kissed her.

A hundred miles away, in a still gray bedroom, a woman emerged suddenly from sleep. She sat up, opening heavy eyes, and spread her arms out eagerly to the darkness.

"Oh, Mark—Mark, dear!" she whispered softly, "I dreamed that Pauline had come back to us!"

Christmas 52 Times a Year

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION

The Companion breathes the Christmas spirit all through the year. It helps to make home a centre of attraction; it increases knowledge, holds fast to the highest standards of thought and conduct and provides wholesome entertainment in overflowing measure.

Our Christmas Present Offer

Every New Subscriber sending $2.50 with this coupon or the name of this publication will receive:

- | | |
|--|--------------------------|
| 1 The 52 Weekly Issues of The Companion for 1922 | All for $2.50 |
| 2 All the remaining issues of 1921 | |
| 3 The Companion Home Calendar for 1922 | |

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

| | | | |
|----------------------------------|--------|---------------|----------------------------------|
| Christian Herald | $2.00 | $4.00 | You save .50 |
| Youth's Companion | 2.50 | | |
| The Christian Herald | $2.00 | $5.50 | All three You save $1.50 |
| Youth's Companion | 2.50 | | |
| Pictorial Review | 2.50 | $7.50 | All four You save $1.50 |
| The Christian Herald | $2.00 | | |
| Youth's Companion | 2.50 | | |
| American Magazine (To one) | 2.50 | | |
| Woman's Home Companion (address) | 2.00 | | |

Attach your remittance to this coupon and mail it today.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 73 Bible House, New York

FREE to you FREE

Introducing NEW Hymn Book

TABERNACLE HYMNS NO. 2

Song Book of Quality for Particular People

320 PAGES Art Buckram 60c Manila 35c 351 SONGS

FREE—A 36 page Pamphlet containing 38 select songs from our new book Tabernacle Hymns No. 2 will be sent on receipt of four cents in stamps.

ACT TO-DAY — DON'T DELAY

TABERNACLE PUBLISHING COMPANY

ROOM 1410 29 SO. LA SALLE ST. CHICAGO, ILL.

NO JOKE TO BE DEAF

—Every Deaf Person Knows That

I make myself hear, after being deaf for 5 years, with these Artificial Ear Drums. I wear them day and night.

They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them. Write me and I will tell you a true story, how I got deaf and how I made myself hear. Address: GEO. P. WAY, Artificial Ear Drum Co. (Inc.) 6 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

You can be quickly relieved, if you

STAMMER

Send 10 cents in stamps for 28-page booklet and book on Stammering and Stuttering, "Its Cause and Cure." It tells how I relieved myself after stammering for 20 years. Benjamin N. Bogue, 6292, Bogue Bldg., 1147 N. W. St., Indianapolis

No Rats By Sunday

On Thursday scatter small bits of "Rough On Rats" mixed with chopped meat about the place; on Friday mix dampened oatmeal and "Rough On Rats"; Saturday chopped ham with "Rough On Rats" will get all that are left. Sunday comes but rats and mice are gone. "Change of bait fools the pests. Get "Rough On Rats" at drug and general stores. Write for booklet—"Ending Rats and Mice", sent free to you.

E. S. WELLS
Chemist
Jersey City, N. J.

ROUGH ON RATS

THE RICHEST MAN IN KANSAS

is Dr. Charles M. Sheldon's new book. It is a dramatic story and a test of character. Post-paid for 60c a copy

The Christian Herald New York

Go Into Business For Yourself!

Establish and operate a "New System Specialty Candy Factory" in your community. We furnish everything. Money making opportunity unlimited. Either men or women. Big Candy Booklet Free. W. HILLIER RAGSDALE, Drawer 37, EAST ORANGE, N. J.

For Church Union in Canada

By REV. E. RYERSON YOUNG

AN IMPORTANT step toward the consummation of union between the Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches in Canada was taken by the Joint Union Committee, which met in the Metropolitan Methodist Church, Toronto, on October 24, when a Standing Committee on Legislation was appointed to consider measures necessary to give effect to the union of the negotiating churches and to prepare bills for submission to the Parliament of Canada. This committee consists of fifteen members—six Methodists, six Presbyterians and three Congregationalists—with the Hon. N. W. Rowell, K. C., ex-President of the Privy Council of Canada, as the convener.

A Standing Executive Committee also was appointed, consisting of ten Methodists, ten Presbyterians and five Congregationalists, with the Rev. Dr. G. C. Pidgeon, of the Presbyterian Church, as the Chairman. A Committee on Co-operation also was appointed which will extend its work to colleges, publications, Sunday School work, and all boards of the three churches.

An interesting and important feature of the conference was the presence of representatives from the General Council of Local Union Churches of the West, Rev. T. A. Munro, Rev. John Reid and Rev. C. B. Lawson, who presented a statement of the working of these union churches and suggested methods for further union. The Council of Western Union Churches was asked to send three members to the sessions of the Joint Executive Committee on Union as corresponding members.

At the opening session of the conference, statements were made by the leaders of the various denominational delegations to the Joint Union Committee. Rev. Dr. Hugh Pedley spoke for the Congregational Church and declared its readiness to proceed with union. Rev. Dr. Chown, General Superintendent, spoke for the Methodist Church and reviewed the progress of the negotiations. Dr. Pidgeon did not disguise the fact that in the Presbyterian Church there was a strong minority against union which was determined to maintain the Presbyterian Church. But, he declared, the delegates were instructed to co-operate with the negotiating churches to the utmost limit.

The Union Committee then proceeded to business and followed the plan suggested in appointing committees. The Committee on Legislation appointed a sub-committee, of Hon. H. W. Rowell, Angus MacMurchy, K. C., and John T. Field for the purpose of engaging a legal firm and preparing a bill of incorporation and all other necessary legislation for the proposed United Church of Canada. The Committee on Co-operation will speed up the work of drawing the various parts of the workings of the churches together. The amalgamation of the Sunday School papers has already been partially achieved.

The following figures will show the strength of the two largest negotiating churches:

| | Presbyterians | Methodists |
|----------------------------------|---------------|--------------|
| Property value..... | $26,334,848 | $44,178,371 |
| Annual givings..... | 9,554,593 | 11,311,259 |
| Church members..... | 350,674 | 400,789 |
| S. S. pupils and teachers..... | 318,819 | 470,399 |
| Ministers' stipends.. | 2,513,993 | 2,711,077 |
| Missions and social service..... | 1,274,510 | 1,160,563 |
| Women's Missionary Society..... | 401,543 | 476,103 |
| Education..... | 119,183 | 103,181 |
| Pension schemes.... | 132,474 | 425,628 |
| Ministers..... | 1,606 | 1,820 |

Clubbing Rates of the Christian Herald with other Magazines

Any of these excellent offers saves money for you.

| COMBINATION | Reg. Rate | Clubbing Rate | Saving to Subscriber |
|--|------------------------|---------------|----------------------|
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Woman's World..... | $2.00
.50 | $2.10 | $.40 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Today's Housewife..... | $2.00
1.00 | $2.25 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
The Pathfinder..... | $2.00
1.00 | $2.35 | $.65 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
McCall's Magazine..... | $2.00
1.00 | $2.50 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Today's Housewife
Woman's World..... | $2.00
1.00
.50 | $2.50 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
People's Home Journal..... | $2.00
1.25 | $2.65 | $.60 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
McCall's Magazine
Today's Housewife..... | $2.00
1.00
1.00 | $2.75 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Boys' Life..... | $2.00
2.00 | $2.75 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
The Pathfinder
Today's Housewife..... | $2.00
1.00
1.00 | $2.75 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Modern Priscilla..... | $2.00
2.00 | $2.85 | $1.15 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Boy's Magazine..... | $2.00
1.50 | $3.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Today's Housewife
People's Home Journal..... | $2.00
1.00
1.25 | $3.00 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
American Cookery..... | $2.00
1.50 | $3.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Normal Instructor..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.10 | $.90 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Sunset Magazine..... | $2.00
2.50 | $3.25 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
People's Home Journal
McCall's Magazine..... | $2.00
1.25
1.00 | $3.25 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Little Folks..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.00 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
The Etude (for Music Lovers)..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.50 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Pictorial Review..... | $2.00
2.50 | $3.75 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Collier's Weekly..... | $2.00
2.50 | $3.75 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
McCall's Magazine
The Etude (for music lovers)..... | $2.00
1.00
2.00 | $3.75 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
American Boy..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.75 | $.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Woman's Home Companion..... | $2.00
2.00 | $3.75 | $.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Junior Instructor..... | $2.00
2.50 | $4.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Youth's Companion..... | $2.00
2.50 | $4.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Little Folks..... | $2.00
2.00 | $4.00 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
McCall's Magazine..... | $2.00
1.00 | $4.00 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Modern Priscilla or The Etude (for music lovers)
Today's Housewife..... | $2.00
2.00
1.00 | $4.00 | $1.00 |

If you prefer any other combination, write to us for a money saving rate

CLUBBING ORDER BLANK THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Bible House, New York

$..... remittance is enclosed for which you may send me for ONE YEAR each of the following at the special clubbing rate.

| | | |
|--------------------------|----------------|---------------------|
| 1. The Christian Herald | New or Renewal | Begin with Issue of | | 2. | | |
| 3. | | |
| Name..... | | |
| Street or Route No. | | |
| Town or City..... | State..... | |

Continued from page 907
to accomplish little toward a reduction of armaments on land, and that the next international gathering might well be convened to deal with that problem. There also will be need for further international exchanges on Pacific and Far Eastern problems, since changing conditions in China render it impossible at this time to say the final word regarding her problems. The list of subjects which might be treated with advantage by such a series of conferences could be elaborated almost indefinitely.

The President's overtures along this line have purposely been kept free from discussion of details, in order to reduce to a minimum the probable causes of complications. But the response so far has been encouraging, and further developments will be awaited with the greatest interest.

PRINCESS MARY TO WED BRITON.

Official announcement has been made of the engagement of Princess Mary, only daughter of the British King and Queen, to Viscount Lascelles, son and heir of the Earl of Harewood, one of richest of English peers. The Princess is twenty-four years old, while her fiancé, who was wounded three times while serving in the trenches, and who won several decorations for bravery, is thirty-nine.

AMERICAN TROOPS LEAVE RHINE.

Reduction of the American forces along the Rhine has begun with the return to America of eleven officers and 600 enlisted men, who sailed from Antwerp. The wives of eighty-two soldiers who had married in Germany accompanied the party.

SIXTY-FOUR BRITISH PRISONERS PERISH.

The death from suffocation of sixty-four out of 100 Moplah prisoners who had been crowded into a closed railway coach, an incident recalling the tragedy of the famous Black Hole of Calcutta, has created a sensation throughout India and intensified the opposition to British rule. British officials have begun an inquiry and have issued statements deploring the loss of life. The Moplah revolt has continued to spread, and 15,000 men are under arms and defying the British forces in area of 3,000 square miles.

GOVERNOR E. MONT REILLY whose administration of Porto Rican affairs is being attacked

NEW JERSEY DRY LAW UPHOLD.

The New Jersey Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of the Van Ness prohibition enforcement law, which had been attacked because it provided summary arraignment before a magistrate without a jury. The court ruled that this provision was a proper exercise of the police power of the state.

RAILROAD RATE INQUIRY ORDERED.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered a general inquiry to determine whether any further reductions on railroad rates could be required.

Young People's Topics for Dec. 18

By REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

Conscience: Teaching It, Quickening It, Obeying It

B. Y. P. U. and C. E. Prov. 20: 27;
Acts 4: 13-20

THE dictionary defines "conscience" as one's inmost thoughts, the moral sense or consciousness within oneself which determines right and wrong. And the word "conscientious" is defined by Crabb as the possession of moral intelligence, the perception of right and wrong. The word must not be mixed with that other word so often used in its place, when we say that we have "scruples." A conscientious man is so altogether, but a scrupulous man may have only particular scruples. A conscientious man does nothing to offend his conscience, but a scrupulous man has often his scruples on trifling or minor points. The Pharisees were scrupulous without being conscientious; we must, therefore, strive to be conscientious without being over-scrupulous.

For a very satisfactory definition of "conscience" we may take the words of the author of Proverbs: "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord," that is to say, "the Christian spirit, or conscience is lit up by the Lord, illuminated by the divine light." Or in other words, there is no conscience worthy of the consideration of the earnest student that is not shaped by the teaching of the Gospel and influenced by its precepts and examples of righteous character and conduct. An individual may do a certain thing and that action be fundamentally wrong and out of relationship with the highest ethical standards of thought and action; nevertheless the individual responsible for the deed may defend himself with the plea that his conscience dictated the act. It is a question not of conscience, but the quality of conscience.

Paul, before his conversion had a certain kind of conscience. He was under the impression that he was doing the correct thing when he breathed out threatenings and words of condemnation against the Christian Church. But after his conversion he changed his mind and he said, "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." Another phase of the trained Christian conscience is found in the second reference wherein is recorded the words of Peter and John, "For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard."

And obeying that sort of conscience—that compels one to speak the things which are seen and heard—is the glory of the church at home and abroad. No soul can go amiss in the realm of duty who has heard the voice of God and who has been made restless by the desire to be up and doing to make the world better.

The Ten Commandments in the Life of Today

E. L.

HAVE the Ten Commandments read in unison. Request each member to give a brief reason why, in his or her opinion, the Ten Commandments are valid for the life of today. Contrast these principles of Christian ethics with the principles of pagan ethics. Give this topic plenty of preparation and make this meeting notable by the thought that we get out of a meeting exactly what we put into such a meeting. It would be an evening of great profit if you would ask your pastor to take charge, and busy no doubt as he is, he will be glad to assist you with his mature counsel and knowledge of the subject.

Doctoring India's 315,000,000

(Continued from page 903)

again the mission sent a Bible woman to find out what the parents had done to the child. She found they had acted on the assumption the child was possessed of the devil, had rubbed a fowl up and down her back and then let the fowl go so as to carry away the devil. (The priest no doubt had chicken for dinner that day.) The mother had rubbed a yellow powder over the child's face, which the little girl said hurt her, while what the missionary nurse did made her feel better.

The Bible woman explained to the idolatrous parents they were not only doing wrong but were hindering the chances for the recovery of their little daughter, but offered to intercede with the missionaries to take her back. So after sending a messenger to know if she might return the parents came back, bringing the little girl again over the three miles of road. After eight days of incessant care it was found the burn was too deep for human healing, and the little girl was relieved one night by death. The parents said the mission could bury her as a Christian, but it was thought best not to do so and the parents took the body away.

"When she was with me," the mother said, "I told her to pray to Jesu Christi, for Miss Fales had said, if she prayed to Jesu Christi He would help her bear her pain." This her mother said she had done notwithstanding her performance of heathen rites.

PERHAPS the thought of what the missionary may suffer from lack of proper medical care may impress, the dweller in the United States more than the neglect of the Indian, because the missionary came from America and is of the same stock as those who read these lines. But I want to assure you that the missionaries themselves talk much less about the privations they suffer because of lack of medical and hospital care than they do about the distress of seeing the great multitudes who must meet the diseases of a tropical climate, bear the pains of motherhood or pass through the days of helpless childhood unaided by competent skill or the inventions of modern science and often positively injured by the incantations and treatments born of superstition.

In the issue of the Indian Witness to which I have referred was an editorial on "The Art of Healing," in which were these sentences:

"Medical missionary work in India and Burma deserves attention. Investigation shows that over 80,000,000 of the population are beyond the reach of medical aid. Under present conditions they must live and die without such care. Even where government hospitals and dispensaries are established under the care of subordinates the common people are suspicious of them because of unfair and dishonest practices towards those who are too poor or are unwilling to offer bribes. The waste of child life is appalling. The difficulty in medical missions at first was that doctors were given so many other things to do, educational and evangelistic, that they could not give their best to the relief of suffering. Even now there are capable and worthy physicians who are overburdened with cares not related to their principal effort."

The editorial gave encouragement by saying that "recently there is a decided change in sentiment and purpose" and held out hope that in time there will be adequate medical staffs who can devote their entire time and skill to the one work for which they have especially fitted themselves. But at the time that was written the war had reduced the number of English medical missionaries holding degrees from British institutions so that there were eighty-three fewer than in 1914. Hence there is a louder call than ever for reinforcements. Concerning the Indian Christians of one denomination statistics were presented showing that the increase in the percentage of deaths from influenza and other diseases during the years 1915-1919 was 100.5, while the increase in church membership for the same period was only 20.3 per cent. Such data, said the editor of the Witness, should convince Christian people that they are facing one of the greatest problems ever placed before the church.

ONE of the medical missionary contributors to that issue, Dr. Hugh H. Linn, of Vikarabad, Deccan, corrected one idea which has prevailed extensively in America and that is that only women physicians can have access to Indian women because of their seclusion in zenanas. Dr. Linn said that physicians and ministers are excepted classes and are allowed to see women in purdah, the ministers of course being of a faith approved by the man of the household who must grant the privilege.

"I have found," he said, "that the purdah system does not hinder the medical man from seeing the strictest Mohammedan lady when she is really sick and needs help. They excuse themselves by saying that the doctor and the priest are not excluded from seeing any of their women; purdah does not hold with them. I have often been called to see and examine Mohammedan ladies of the better class, as well as of the poorer classes, and have even performed operations for them that would have been quite impossible had they held to their rules of purdah." It might be said, perhaps, in explanation that Dr. Linn is in south India where there are fewer women in purdah than in north India, and where the rules of purdah are less strictly kept.

The government of India has established some fine, large and well-equipped hospitals and the idea may prevail that these are sufficient for the need and that only prejudice keeps the native Indian from availing himself of the medical help offered. From personal testimony of missionaries and others I can say that multitudes are constantly being turned away from these hospitals because there is no room. I know of one particular case where a man tried for three months to get into the hospital in Calcutta for a needed operation, only to give up in despair, because it was said there was no room.

No ministry in the jungle can be more beneficent than one which will point out the real nature of disease and supply skillful and rational treatment for its remedy. Government officials live in the jungle to care for its forests, build its roads and collect the taxes. Why should not some American physicians be willing to volunteer their services for the still higher task of healing the souls and bodies of men, women and children?

OF THE 6,448,366 farms in the United States, 4.1 per cent. were operated by women last year, there having been 261,553 women whose occupation was classified as farming, says the report of the Joint Congressional Commission of Agricultural Inquiry. The total land area in farms on January 1, 1920, was 955,676,545 acres, the report shows. Men operated 929,878,145 acres, or 97.3 per cent. of the total farm acreage, while women operated 25,798,400 acres, or 2.7 per cent. The average size of the farms with women operators was 98.6 acres, while the average for the farms of men was 150.3 acres. Of the 6,186,813 men, 3,737,326 were owners, 67,762 were managers, and 2,381,725 were tenants. The 261,553 women farm operators were distributed as follows: 187,769 owners, 763 managers, and 73,021 tenants.

How It Works. "The door to success must be a revolving-door."

"Huh?"
"If you don't dive in quickly somebody will have you out on the sidewalk."
—Houston Post.

SUBMITTED. After a young lawyer had talked nearly five hours to a jury, who felt like lynching him, his opponent, a grizzled old veteran, arose, looked sweetly at the judge, and said:

"Your honor, I will follow the example of my young friend who has just finished, and submit the case without argument."—Life.

Spectacles SENT FREE ON TEN DAYS TRIAL

Don't Send Me One Penny

I Am Going To Mail You a Pair of the Latest-Style, Extra-Large, Round-Eye, "Sight-Improving" Spectacles Absolutely Free of Charge

I want you to take a good look at the spectacles in the above heading. Notice their size and shape. Compare them with the glasses you or your friends may be wearing right now.

Notice the extra-large round eyes in these latest-style "sight-improving" spectacles. The glasses are as large and as round as a silver dollar, as you can see in the above picture; and completely cover every part of the human eye so you don't have to look over the tops of them or squint your eyes under them like you have to do when wearing the old-style small-eye spectacles for sale at stores.

These Latest-Style, Extra-Large, Round-Eye "Sight-Improving" Spectacles Have Taken the Country by Storm

Thousands of spectacle-wearers from Maine to California have quit using the old-style small-eye egg-shaped glasses and are now wearing the latest-style extra-large round-eye "sight-improving" spectacles—which have practically taken the country by storm—and I am going to send you a pair of these up-to-date glasses complete in a very neat and handsome 10 karat gold-filled spectacle frame, to try fully ten days on your own eyes in your own home without a cent in advance or even a reference.

You Can Wear These Latest-Style, Extra-Large, Round-Eye "Sight-Improving" Spectacles for Far or Near, for Reading or Looking Away Off in the Distance

As soon as you get them, I want you to put them on your eyes no matter how weak they may be from age; sit down at your fireside these cold wintry nights and you will be agreeably surprised to discover that you can again read the finest print in your newspaper or magazine; you will be able to thread the smallest-eyed needle and do the finest kind of embroidery and crocheting with them on and do it all night long if you like without any headaches or eye-pains and with as much ease and comfort as you ever did in your life.

You Can Use Them When Out Hunting, Driving or To the Movies If You So Desire

If you like to go out hunting occasionally, put on these latest-style, "sight-improving" spectacles, go out into the woods some bright sunny morning and you will be delighted to find how greatly they help you in sighting your gun and taking aim at your game.

Or if you are fond of going to the movies once in a while, you can take a seat away in the back end of the theatre—to avoid the glimmer of the lights—and you will be pleased to notice that even the smallest words and pictures on the screen look just as clear and as plain to you as though you were sitting right in the front row, with the aid of these latest-style, "sight-improving" spectacles.

Seeing is Believing

Now I realize that it may be hard for you—or any other spectacle-wearer whose sight has become greatly weakened from age—to believe that these latest-style, "sight-improving" spectacles will again bring back to you the absolutely perfect sight of your younger days.

But you know the old saying "Seeing is believing" and I positively will not accept one single solitary penny from you until you have seen these latest-style spectacles and have found them more sight-improving to your own eyes than any spectacles you have ever bought anywhere at any price before. That is the reason why I am only asking you to fill out and mail me the coupon below, and I will immediately send you a handsome 10 karat gold-filled pair of the latest-style, "sight-improving" spectacles by mail, all charges prepaid to try fully 10 days on your own eyes in your own home without a cent in advance or even a reference.

Cut Out this Coupon on this Line

AMERICAN SPECTACLE HOUSE, Room 10, 55th & Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—I have read your liberal offer and want you to send me by mail all charges prepaid a handsome 10-karat gold filled pair of your latest-style, extra-large, round-eye, "sight-improving" spectacles complete with an up-to-date leatherette spring-back pocket-book spectacle case which you are offering on ten days absolute free trial.

I am going to try them out for reading or looking away off in the distance, for far or near, indoors or outdoors and in every way you have mentioned above, and if I find them all you claim them to be after a 10 days trial, I will pay you your advertising price of $2.85 and no more. I want you, however, to distinctly understand that if I do not find them to be right up-to-date in every respect or if they do not restore the absolutely perfect vision of my younger days, I will return them to you without a cent of pay as I don't intend to keep them unless they are much better than any spectacles I have ever used before and even then I positively will not pay for them unless I consider them a bargain at the advertising price of $2.85 which you are asking for them and you will have to take my word as final in this matter. Be Sure and Answer the Following Questions:

How old are you? Ans..... How many years have you used glasses (if any) Ans.....
Name.....
County..... Post Office.....
R. R..... Box..... State.....
Street and No. (if any).....

COPYRIGHT 1921 - BY A.S.H.

CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS ARE INVITED to send for full particulars of the money-saving

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK BUYER'S CLUB

Thousands are now members. WHY NOT YOU?
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BOOK DEPARTMENT, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

The A, B, C's of Safe Investment

The principles of sound investment should be taught to the youngsters with the same care that they are taught other primary essentials preparing them for future life.

We now have some literature that you will find interesting and instructive—booklets that contain information of value to present and prospective investors. They are yours upon request.

Send today for Literature No. 912

AMERICAN BOND & MORTGAGE COMPANY

American Bond & Mortgage Building
127 North Dearborn Street, Chicago
562 Fifth Ave., New York City
Columbus, Ohio Davenport, Iowa
Grand Rapids, Mich. Rockford, Illinois

Make Your Money Earn More

Join These People Who Are Getting 8%

8%

Year after year, shrewd and experienced investors in the North and East send us their money for investment in Miller First Mortgages and First Mortgage Bonds, secured by improved Miami real estate. These good judges of mortgage loans, including bankers, lawyers, and capitalists, have never lost a dollar in these investments.

Number yourself among these people who are getting 8% with assured safety.

Write for descriptive offering circular, A-25, and for booklet, "Miami Mortgage Investments."

G. L. Miller Bond & Mortgage Co.
Miami Bank & Trust Building
MIAMI, FLORIDA

OUR REPUTATION IS IN YOUR HANDS

"Duplex" treats YOUR envelope order as if it were the only one in the house; as if all others it hopes to receive depended upon the accuracy and promptness with which YOURS is filled.

The Duplex Envelope Co.
RICHMOND, VA.

Skin Tortured Babies Sleep Mothers Rest After Cuticura

Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. For samples address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

IDEAL XMAS GIFT

Wonder Automatic Pencil—one year supply of leads. Name engraved in 18kt. gold. Holly or floral boxes. All colors. Lasts a lifetime. Dept. C.
UNITED PENCIL CO., 318 Broadway, NEW YORK

FORD OWNERS!

Learn about wonderful new power maker. Eliminates spark lever—stops misfiring—adds power and speed—saves gas and is waterproof. It is a wonderful new ignition system now in use on several of America's high-grade motor cars. Price low. Ask about Free Trial Offer.

A. B. M. Co., Box 1289, Brightwood, Mass.

OUR MAIL-BAG

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any questions addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters, nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

READER, Pennsylvania, writes: "Recently I read in the Christian Herald where a reader in Peoria, Ill., asked: 'Is it not time for the door to begin to open? What would Jesus do at such a time as this? The world is not a fit place for Christian people to live in any longer.' I often wonder if a great deal of the trouble does not lie with the Christian or so-called Christian people themselves. How very few are living up to what the name Christian really means? How many of our homes, where boys and girls are being brought up, have the Christ-like spirit taught by example or precept, by the parents whose names are upon the church record? Really this to my mind is a serious issue, and in many instances it is very hard to discern which really are sheep and which goats, so many times they are to be found feeding upon the same worldly pasture. We know what Christ said about lukewarmness. Let's get closer to Him and learn of Him and live like Him, and very soon that sinning brother, neighbor or friend will be anxious and willing to yield his life to Christ. Let us go to Him with all our cares, worries and troubles, and He will solve them for us, as He did for the Israelites in the wilderness when they were willing to trust Him alone, first, last and always."

Our correspondent's well-meant remarks are deserving of consideration. We should help to awaken the Christ spirit in others, but we are not to judge them. God alone knoweth the heart. Many a soul is won to Christ through kindly encouragement, helpful acts and a good example, who could never be drawn by harsh criticism and the assumption of superiority.

A. J. B., Johnstown, Pa. The whole Conference was publicly placed under Divine guidance in the prayer at the opening session. It should not be forgotten that the Conference's aim is the reduction of armaments to a peace footing. The Conference can not usher in the millennium; no human power or combination of powers could assume to do that. What it is doing bravely, and with faith in God to make it a success, is to make war more and more difficult, to lighten the heavy burdens imposed by naval and military rivalry throughout the world, and to draw all the nations closer together in bonds of friendship and mutual co-operation. The nations are rejoicing at this auspicious beginning, and Christian people everywhere share this hope and see the hand of God in it. They regard it as a very substantial step toward peace and are praying that it may lead in that direction, under God's blessing.

Reader, Nashville, Ark. Esau's sin was that he "profanely flung away his spiritual privilege for the gratification of his palate." It was done wilfully and recklessly. (Gen. 25:34). To the Jewish mind, the sin of Esau was a terrible and far-reaching one, casting away eternity for a trifle, and the right of primogeniture, which involved the privilege of being "ancestor of the promised seed and heir of the promises." It was little wonder that Esau, on realizing the true character and extent of his sin, "found no place for repentance." "But," writes one commentator, "had he sought it with true penitence and tears, he would have found it. (Matt. 7:7). His tears were those of vain remorse, not of true repentance."

Pastor E. H., Big Fork, Mont. Your inquiry has been submitted to a reliable authority, who writes: "There is no Jewish court in New York, from a legal standpoint. Occasionally it comes to pass that Jewish cases, relating to their worship in the synagogue and other things connected with it, are so complicated that the Judge of the court calls to his aid a rabbi, and one or two prominent Jewish business men. But there is certainly no Jewish public district court."

A. R. M., Freeport, Ill., writes: "When husband and I began housekeeping, we neglected family prayers, although reared in homes where they were never omitted. Recently, we took up the custom of our parents, and I can not tell you sufficiently the change for the better that took place in our lives. One can not pray God 'that the words of my mouth and meditation of my heart be acceptable in Thy sight,' and then nag each other, or speak of people in an unkind manner. The confession in the presence of our family helps us, and one is wonderfully strengthened by the knowledge that we are obeying our Master, who gives us strength for every emergency."

Rev. D. J. Jenkins, Charleston, S. C., writes: "Please accept our thanks for the gift to our Orphanage from one of your subscribers, which you so kindly forwarded to the Jenkins' Orphanage here, an institution which has done so much for little orphan and destitute boys and girls. We have trained more than 3,251 during the thirty years of our existence, principally on voluntary contributions. We knew the Christian Herald long ago, and also that veteran, Dr. Klopsch, who was the Founder of the Christian Herald Children's Home at Nyack. When we met him in New York in 1892, he took us up to the Home, where the Jenkins' Orphan Band enjoyed two of the pleasantest days of their lives. Somehow, we feel as if we have a claim on the Herald and its many readers. The Editors know us and the struggles we have been making for thirty years. Our 30th anniversary celebration occurs soon, and any gifts your readers may send to the Christian Herald, in aid of the 'black lambs,' will be greatly appreciated."

J. A. W., Wayne, Nebr., writes: "All over the corn belt states, we are having to get our corn crop husked the best way we know how, as laborers will not touch it at the price for husking. The women, old and young, are compelled to go to the fields. We simply can not get corn huskers. I think, with Paul, 'that if any would not work neither should he eat.'"

E. F. B., Los Angeles, Calif. Jacob's struggle with the angel at the brook Jabbok was that he might obtain a spiritual blessing. He had come to regard his vision at Bethel as an experience which should urge him to greater confidence in God, and greater courage to ask for blessing and protection. He was now almost on the border of the promised land, and it was not improbable that, at the very last moment, as he was about to enter, he would encounter the strongest opposition. The all-night wrestling at Jabbok, "until the breaking of the day, was, as the Scripture account declares, no dream or phantasy of the excited brain, but a reality. It was to win from this strong spiritual contestant the crowning blessing, that Jacob struggled, and would not let him go until he gave it. Having that final assurance he was satisfied to be temporarily disabled, for through the graciousness of his opponent, he was now assured not of safety alone, but of the validity of the inheritance. Some commentators hold that the shrunken sinew and subsequent lameness were to keep him mindful of that strange experience. They remind us that, in the greatest of our spiritual victories, there is always some reminder to keep us humble. Josephus, the Jewish historian, wrote of this: 'for his (Jacob's) sake, it (the sinew of animals) is not eaten by us'; not because this observance is founded upon the law of Moses, but simply as a traditional custom which honors Jacob's memory."

D. MacK., Brockton, Mass., writes: "As an old subscriber, and a constant reader of the Mail-Bag, I want to congratulate Rev. J. W. Wells on his suggestion for a People's Parliament or a People's Advisory Council, centrally located, with city, state and national headquarters, where one could properly express his true political sentiments, unhampered by the corrupting influences of the modern politician, and his henchmen. Then the average American citizen could express his political sentiments in no uncertain way, not only on disarmament of nations, which is vital, but on all important political issues that concern our very existence." Letters in the same vein of approval have been received from Mrs. J. A. L., Santa Barbara, Calif., Emily S. B., Los Angeles, Calif., Rev. H. G., Cincinnati, O., and others.

M. J. H., New York City. In many different ways, the Conference has been made to realize that the eyes of the world are looking toward it, and that hearts everywhere are praying that its labors may not be in vain.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by the Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Editors are Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President; Rae D. Henkle, Secretary. SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittance should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald. FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed to Canada, add fifty cents; outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price. Canadian remittances accepted at par. CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least three weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed. EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. For example, Dec. 21 signifies that subscription expires with the last issue of December 21. CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address. LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Copyright, 1921, the Christian Herald. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post Office at New York, N. Y. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada.

Free Investment Circulars

Interesting and valuable investment literature published from time to time by the leading Banks and Investment Houses are now available for Christian Herald Readers.

As a convenience to you we have arranged with these Financial concerns to send direct to you these Investment circulars. Write us asking for them by number or simply checking list and write name and address plainly on the margin. Financial Department, The Christian Herald, 99 Bible House, New York City.

Conservative Bonds—Current bond circulars, describing recent issues of high-grade bonds, with full details of security, yield, etc. Ask for Circular No. 1.

Public Utility Securities—Circular No. 2, describes a variety of public utility bonds and preferred stock issues, well secured and offering a high yield at present prices.

Real Estate Bonds—Several booklets issued by investment houses in different sections of the country present the advantages of real estate bonds and notes—the oldest and basic form of investment. These issues yield 6 per cent. to 7 per cent. Ask for Circulars 4-6 for city real estate bonds, and Circulars 7-9 for farm mortgages and bonds.

Partial Payment Investing—This method enables investors to buy sound securities by making payments monthly until the bond or preferred stock is fully paid for. Meanwhile all interest or dividends accrue from the time the investment is begun. Ask for Circular 11.

For Aches and Pains

Sloan's Liniment is recommended as an external application in the treatment of rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, lame back, sprains and strains, sore muscles and a host of other external aches and pains.

Don't rub Sloan's, it penetrates. At all drug-gists, 35c, 70c, $1.40.

Keep it handy

Sloan's Liniment

Pain's enemy

Easy to Play Easy to Pay

BUESCHER
True-Tone Saxophone

Saxophone Book Free
Tells when to use Saxophone—singly, in sextettes or in regular band; how to transpose cello parts in orchestra and many other things you would like to know.

Easiest of all wind instruments to play and one of the most beautiful. You can learn the scale in an hour's practice and play popular music in a few weeks. You can take your place in a band within 90 days, if you so desire. Unrivalled for home entertainment, church, lodge or school. In big demand for orchestra, dance music. The portrait above is of Donald Clark, Soloist with the famous Paul Whiteman's Orchestra.

Free Trial You may order any Buescher Instrument without paying one cent in advance, and try it six days in your own home, without obligation. If perfectly satisfied, pay for it on easy payments to suit your convenience. Mention the instrument interested in and a complete catalog will be mailed free.

BUESCHER BAND INSTRUMENT CO.
Makers of Everything in Band and Orchestra Instruments
6534 BUESCHER BLOCK ELKHART, INDIANA

PELOUBET'S Select Notes

The World's Greatest Commentary on the International Sunday-School Lessons
By AMOS R. WELLS, Litt.D., LL.D.

Let us send you a pamphlet containing the first lesson taken from the volume of 1922

Price, $2.00 Net; $2.10 Delivered
W. A. WILDE COMPANY
120 BOYLSTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.
Madison Terminal Building, Chicago

What 15 Cts Will bring You From the Nation's Capital
The little matter of 15 cts. (coin or stamps) will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is a cheerful illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center for people everywhere; an independent home paper that tells the story of the world's news in an interesting, understandable way. Now it is the 25th year. This splendid National weekly supplies a long-felt want; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to know what is going on in the world, this is your best means. If you want a paper in your home which is reliable and wholesome; if you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, entertainingly, briefly—here it is. Splendid serial and short stories and miscellany. The Question Box Answers YOUR questions and is a mine of information. Send 15 cts. to show that you might like such a paper and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15 cents does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Try it for 13 weeks. Address: The Pathfinder, 519 Langdon St., Washington, D. C.

This Book and Calendar would make splendid Christmas Gifts

"PROPHECY EXPLAINED"

By GEORGE H. PATCH

A book showing that we are living in times of prophetic fulfillment

1 Vol. 12mo. Cloth
(size, 7½ x 5 ins.)
480 Pages of Large Type

1 Vol. 12 mo. Cloth (size 7½x5 inches) 480 Pages of Large Type

The following is a condensed list of contents

PART ONE. INTRODUCTORY. THE THEME AND PERSONNEL OF PROPHECY

1. Life. The Great Theme of the Bible.
2. Satan. The Destroyer.
3. The Holy Spirit. Author of Prophecy.
4. Jesus. Prophet, Priest, and King.
5. The Prophets. Through Whom God Spoke.
6. Israel. The Chosen People.
7. The Church of Christ. His Bride.
8. The Kingdom of God. The Kingdom of Heaven.
9. The King. King of Israel; King of Kings.

PART TWO. SOME FULFILLED PROPHECIES

10. Tyre and Sidon.
11. Egypt.

12. Broken Vows.
13. Israel's Idolatry.
14. Israel in Exile.
15. Israel's Enemy.
16. The Death Blow.
17. The First Advent.
18. The Final Dispersion.

PART THREE. WORLD EMPIRES

19. A Great Dream.
20. Four Great Beasts.
21. The Ram and the He-Goat.
22. The First Beast Slain.
23. The Seventy Sevens.
24. Daniel's Great Vision.
25. Antiochus Epiphanes.
26. The Time of the End.

PART FOUR. THE JUDGMENT DAY

27. The Day of Jehovah.
28. Jesus the Judge.
29. Letters from Jesus.
30. The Laodicean Church.
31. A Vision in Heaven.
32. The Seven-Sealed Roll.

33. The Conqueror Crowned.
34. The End of the Age.
35. Separations and Sealings.
36. The Seventh Seal Opened.
37. The First and Second Woes.
38. The Challenge.
39. Joy in Heaven.
40. The Closed Door.
41. A Great Sign.
42. The Two Beasts.
43. The Lamb on Mount Zion.
44. The Seven Last Plagues.
45. The Great Harlot.
46. Babylon the Great.
47. King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

PART FIVE. THE MILLENNIAL AGE

48. The Repentant Wife.
49. Millennial Thrones.
50. Millennial Palestine.

PART SIX. AGES OF AGES

51. The Final Consummation.
52. The New Jerusalem.

Covers the whole field of Prophecy and clears away all difficulties

"This excellent book appears opportunely at a time when, more than in any previous period in modern history, Prophecy is uppermost in the minds of thoughtful men and women throughout the world. This is a wonderful book on Prophecy. It will be welcomed by Christian men and women everywhere. It brings solace and consolation and reassurance.

"Mr. Patch has shed a flood of light on Prophecy and especially on Revelation. His work cannot fail to be commended by Bible students and Christian people wherever the Bible is read and studied. It is the most important book we have ever published on Prophecy."—Dr. George H. Sandison.

We will send the Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and a cloth bound copy of "Prophecy Explained," both for..... $3.00

We will send a copy of the book free of charge to any one sending us $4.00 for two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald. Extra copies of "Prophecy Explained" may be had, postpaid, for $1.50.

Bible Classes may order 10 copies or more at $1.20 postpaid

Actual size 16 x 9½ inches

Every page printed on fine enameled paper in full colors with golden text for each day

The Scripture Text Calendar FOR 1922 AND THOUGHTS FOR DAILY MEDITATION

The Scripture Text Calendar for 1922, with its combination of the beauties of art with the daily words of inspiration from the Bible, will meet with general approval. The art work, including both the front page and the inside pictures, is reproduced in the beautiful four-color process printing.

COVER DESIGN

A reproduction of the famous painting, "Master, I Perish," is the principal feature of the cover design of the Scripture Text Calendar.

A 200-YEAR CALENDAR

On the back of the Calendar is a 200-Year Calendar, by the use of which you can locate the day of the week on which you were born, or any important event in recent history; in fact, the dates within two centuries. A table of the Easter Sundays between 1860 and 1955 is given; also a table showing Standard Time Around the World. These educational features add to the practical utility of the calendar and enhance its value to old and young.

TWELVE WORKS OF ART

Besides the cover design, the calendar contains a four-color picture for each month. We present herewith a list of these works of art:

- JANUARY—Christ Healing the Sick Child.
FEBRUARY—Returning from Jerusalem.
MARCH—The Story of the Good Samaritan.
APRIL—He Is Risen.
MAY—Christ Teaching Little Children.
JUNE—The Son of a Carpenter.
JULY—Christ Going Through the Wheat Field.
AUGUST—Christ and the Fallen Woman.
SEPTEMBER—Jesus Sitting by the Sea of Galilee.
OCTOBER—The Rainbow Promise.
NOVEMBER—The Story of Jacob's Ladder.
DECEMBER—The Holy Night.

By referring to the Scripture Text Calendar you can tell what the Sunday School Lesson will be for any Sunday in 1922—an aid to the busy teacher.

We will send the Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and a copy of the Scripture Text Calendar, both postpaid, for only..... $2.20

We will send extra copies of the Calendar, postpaid, for 35c a copy.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

If your children do not possess a keen appetite, try homemade bread

CHILDREN love the irresistible flavor of the home loaf; and they need the uncommon nourishment that the home quality alone can give them.

For sturdy boys and girls make good homemade bread the first law in your home.

An important new discovery about Yeast Foam

People also eat Yeast Foam. You need vitamins; they create vitality—help you resist disease. Thousands are benefiting from the energy-making qualities of Yeast Foam, one of the richest sources of the remarkable element in food called vitamin.

Send for instructive booklet "Dry Yeast as an aid to Health"

Send for free booklet

To have a sweet, light dough in the morning set your sponge to-night with Yeast Foam.

Magic Yeast — Yeast Foam — just the same except in name
Package of 5 cakes — at your grocer — 10¢

Northwestern Yeast Company, 1746 N. Ashland Ave., Chicago

CHRISTIAN HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

Lavinia

Painted by Titian

CONTRASTS IN INDIA

Above, through the gateway, is seen the gorgeous Golden Temple of Amritsar, its dome overlaid with precious metal and in its vaults gems worth millions. At the other end of the scale we see—

A mendicant "holy" man putting on his caste mark

A professional scribe in the market place writing a letter for one of India's 280,000,000 illiterates

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

(IN WHICH IS INCORPORATED WORLD OUTLOOK)
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

GRAHAM PATTERSON, PUBLISHER

Austria's first Inter-Society Total Abstinence and Prohibition Committee, meeting around the famous table at which the Austrian Cabinet in 1914 approved the ultimatum to Serbia which precipitated the World War. This room is in the palace of the President of Austria, and President Hainisch, who is chairman of the committee, is seated at the right at the head of the table. Mr. Hinshaw is the third from the right in the photograph

Austria's President a Prohibitionist

I WAS sitting only a stone's-throw from the Capitol steps in Washington, D. C., in the office of Dr. Clarence True Wilson, General Secretary of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

We were discussing the subject of World Prohibition and were naming the countries easy and difficult of access. Finally Dr. Wilson said: "Austria is an interesting field. Its President, Dr. Hainisch, is a Prohibitionist."

From that moment the name of the Austrian President dwelt upon our minds. Could it be possible that old, conservative Austria, ruled by the Hapsburgs for over four hundred years, had produced a President who took such a stand? If so, Austria should be investigated, we agreed.

Two months later found me in Vienna. By the help of the American Embassy, through Mr. Eugene Shoecraft, I was soon in the President's Palace holding my first interview!

Large of frame, tall, dignified, yet pleasant in manner, the President possesses that politeness so characteristic of the Austrian, and immediately puts one at ease. He is quick to understand, decided in opinion, and ready in retort. One could easily imagine, if he judged from pictures, that he was sitting beside Carranza while interviewing Dr. Hainisch.

"I stand for the prohibition of all intoxicating beverages," said the President, emphatically. "This position is nothing new with me. My early teachings were such that I could not well do otherwise. My mother gave me three kronen each week from the time I was a small boy till I reached manhood, to abstain from the use of alcohol and narcotics. I saved the money and bought a house with it, and now when I take my friends to that house I tell them that it is my Drink-smoke-house."

"Austria should do something of a bold

By VIRGIL G. HINSHAW

(Chairman of the National Committee of the Prohibition Party)

nature in order to extricate herself from debt," he continued. "We have issued fifty-six billion kronen of paper money. Our chief assets are a fertile soil and an earnest, industrious people, ready always to work. If we can add to these virtues the virtue of sobriety, with the savings that will result therefrom, we will be a hundred per cent. better able to meet the world's demands and to put Austria on her feet."

THE President is not content with precept alone. He is ever emphasizing noble example. It appears that a party of Americans, some fifteen in number, including the mayor of a great city, some men of finance, others of the American Legation, recently invited him out to dinner. Liquors were served in quantities and all imbibed freely except Dr. Hainisch. When the dinner was over all agreed that the President of Austria had proven himself the best American citizen of any present.

Again the President continued:

"MY MESSAGE to America is this: Stand by Prohibition, enforce the law, because in proportion as you enforce it, there will be a decrease in criminality, pauperism, insanity, and the other things that make for ill in human society."—President D. M. Hainisch, of Austria.

"America can help us very much in the dissemination of facts about alcohol. Just a little American money will go very far in Austria. Make no mistake while you are here. Get representatives of all classes into the Prohibition organization; get the Jews, the Catholics, the Protestants, the Socialists, the Laborers, the Employers, the Farmers, and the Men of Business! It will require the united efforts of all to make the movement a success!"

These words were typical of President Hainisch; he is true to principle and broad in his sympathies.

Not only is the President of the Republic a prohibitionist, but the leading political party, the Socialist Party, in its last national platform, declared for total abstinence, and named Prohibition as the ultimate and inevitable solution of the liquor problem.

When I arose to leave after two hours of conversation, the Chancellor of the President's Cabinet, Mr. Lowenthal, said to me: "That table is where the Austrian Cabinet sat for two days in earnest discussion when they delivered the ultimatum to Serbia which started the great World War. The seat at the head of the table is where sat the Prime Minister who controlled the proceedings."

I asked him if I might not sit in that seat for a moment, and the President said, "Yes, but please understand you must sit there in meditation of thoughts of peace and not of thoughts of war."

I promised him, and then occupied the chair for a minute.

With President Hainisch acting as Chairman, we formed a Committee representative of different groups; among them were Anton Holzl, prominent leader of the Socialist forces in Parliament; Dr. Joseph Longo, President of the Agricultural School, also in charge of the education of the Hainisch family, and of Elizabeth, daughter of Crown Prince Rudolph, son of Joseph; four hospital physicians, including the treasurer of the Austrian Medical Association; the leader of the Blue Cross; the head of the Catholic Abstinence Association; and the Superintendent of the Methodist Church in Austria.

THE Committee asked of the American branch of the World Prohibition Federation six million kronen. Two of the constituent bodies of the Federation—the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, and the Prohibition Foundation—were gotten in touch with and the money quickly provided. Now comes the surprising part of the transaction.

Six million kronen before the war represented one million two hundred thousand dollars, whereas now it equals only two thousand dollars.

While only a trifle to the American, two thousand dollars is a vast sum to the Austrian. Let us cite a few examples in order to show the power of the American dollar in Europe at this time.

After going to fourteen hotels, I finally located a room in the Hotel De France upon the Ring, a reputable place. My room for two weeks was fourteen cents a night in American money. I sat one morning at breakfast in the dormitory of the Agricultural College when a student entered, who had just lost his parents. He was unable to continue school for the lack of funds. I inquired the cost of sending him to school for a year and was informed that twenty-seven thousand kronen, if paid in advance, would provide him for a period of ten months with board, room, books, and incidentals. I looked up the exchange rate and discovered that this could be purchased for nine dollars of American money. Needless to say I purchased it and gave it to the young man with the understanding that he work for one hour each day for total abstinence and prohibition.

With these rates of exchange in mind, it will doubtless be interesting to know how the six million kronen appropriated for temperance work will be spent. Nine hundred thousand kronen, or three hundred dollars, will pay the salary and traveling expenses of Prof. Longo, for two-thirds time, plus the salary of one full time stenographer, plus the cost of stamps and envelopes, and certain literature. Nine hundred thousand kronen, or three hundred dollars, will pay the expense of printing six hundred thousand copies of Der Abstinent, a monthly publication. The same would cost in the United States three thousand dollars.

Six hundred thousand kronen, or two hundred dollars, will pay the salary and expenses for a year, of a man to organize the universities and colleges of Austria. One million, five hundred thousand kronen, or five hundred dollars, will be used for the purchase and running expenses of an auto truck to be used for the transportation of wax demonstrations of the bodily organs, showing the effects of alcohol.

We still have left two million, one hundred thousand kronen to be spent as the wisdom of experience may suggest.

WHEN the work of organization was completed, the President invited us down to his palace in order to have a photograph taken of the Committee. We sat around the famous table, ten in number, where

Dr. D. M. Hainisch, President of the Republic of Austria, who since early boyhood has been an ardent prohibitionist, and who today is leading this reform movement in his country sat the Austrian Cabinet after the murder of the heir to the Austrian throne, when they delivered the ultimatum to Serbia. Many thoughts passed through our minds as we sat there. This same table was used only seven years before for a conference by a reactionary Cabinet of one of the oldest of the world's monarchies to plunge the world into the worst war of all the ages. Since that time eighteen million graves of fallen heroes had been dug. Thrones had toppled and crashed. Kingdoms had fallen.

What had become of the famous history-makers who sat around the table upon the occasion of such moment? Count Sturgkh, the Prime Minister who governed the proceedings that were to spread such a canopy of horror over the earth's domain, was later shot in a Vienna hotel by a man who now holds a conspicuous place of leadership in the Austrian Parliament. Count Berchtold, minister of foreign affairs, died in exile in Switzerland; Count Tizra, Prime Minister of Hungary, was killed in Budapest; Minister Bolinske for Bosnia, is in exile in Poland.

Certainly these are endings worthy of the picture of world catastrophe and ruin, of devastation and death. Judas sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver and then went out and hanged himself. These men had unwittingly been indirectly the executioners of one-sixteenth of the mature male population of the globe, and the despoilers of one-sixth of the world's wealth. Where were they now? In ignominious graves; in exile.

Truly a new day had dawned. This same table was now being used by the head of the Austrian Republic for the organization of the first Inter-Society Total Abstinence and Prohibition Committee, of which the President is executive head.

WHEN the picture had been taken, I turned to the President and asked, "Will you not please give us a message for the American people?" He readily assented and dictated the following expression to which he added his signature:

"MESSAGE TO AMERICA Through the World Prohibition Federation:

"My message to America is this: Stand by Prohibition, enforce the law, because in proportion as you enforce it, there will be a decrease in criminality, pauperism, insanity, and the other things that make for ill in human society.

"I regard the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution of the United States of America as one of the greatest and most far-reaching pieces of legislation ever enacted by any nation of the civilized World.

"We are thankful to America for the help she is giving us in the providing of food for starving children, and we thank the World Prohibition Federation with its constituent bodies, including the Methodist Episcopal Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, and the Prohibition Foundation, for the help they are giving us in the furnishing of means for the dissemination of facts relative to intoxicating liquors.

"We realize more and more that the world is one great family. Let us pull together and help one another when help is needed.

"Sincerely,
"D. M. HAINISCH."

Succeeding with Religion in Business

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

MR. WILLIAM J. STITT, at first glance, is all business man. As he sits at his broad desk in the center of the busy office of the Joseph Adler Glove Company, he is almost appallingly impressive. But at second glance one can not help noticing the kindness of his face—the sympathetic twist to his mouth and the humorous sparkle of his eyes. It is after the second glance that one realizes that Mr. Stitt is a business man—plus.

I have always found that the folk who have really made good are loath to talk about themselves. And Mr. Stitt was no exception to the rule.

"But what," he asked me, "can I say to you? I never give interviews—never!"

I explained. "The Christian Herald," I told him, "is publishing a series of talks with the big men of our country on religion in business. Many people do not believe that there is any religion in business. And so we—"

Mr. Stitt interrupted.

"I never give interviews," he said, "but—well, I'm going to, this once. I'm going to because of my respect for the Christian Herald and because—" he hesitated slightly—"because I want to do everything in my power, always, for the furtherance of The Kingdom. Don't think that I'm just talking for effect—please—" He paused again, and then:

"I was a very young boy when I went to work for Mr. Adler," he told me. "He was a Jew—but he was broadminded enough to be willing to let his Christian employees follow their own religious bents.

"I started to work for Mr. Adler—let me see—forty-seven years ago. I went to the office on my first day with a very proud feeling in my heart and the advice of the best mother in the world upon my soul. 'Always,' my mother told me, 'through the whole of your business career, be brave enough to sail under true colors. Don't ever pull down your flag!'"

"It was my mother's advice that gave me the courage to refuse to drink, to smoke and to use unpleasant language. It's hard for a boy, sometimes, when he doesn't do these things. The other fellows are quite likely to make fun of him—to call him a sissy. I remember sitting at my desk, perfectly silent, as I fought some of my hardest battles! And I remember how the other boys would say to me—'Oh, it's all right, now. You can be as good as you want to, here. But wait until you're a salesman (being a salesman was the common objective of every boy in the office) then you'll have to be a regular fellow!" I used to worry secretly about that—wondering if I'd have to pull down my flag to keep from being a failure!

WILLIAM J. STITT

"Eventually I did get to be a salesman. I was taken out of the office and put upon my own resources. I had to meet buyers, other salesmen, the heads of great firms. And some of them—most of them—wanted to introduce me to card-games and to drinks and to other forms of so-called amusement I had so long avoided.

"It was difficult sometimes to remember my mother's advice. But I never allowed myself to forget. And, as time went on, I found myself rising to the position of head salesman.

"The morals that I, as well as my associates, had expected to be a handicap had been of surprising value to me. I discovered, to my intense astonishment, that the men who had wanted me to drink with them were the ones who bought my goods. They drank with other men—but when they bought they came to me. Instead of sneering at the colors I sailed under, they respected them!

"The step from salesman to something better was not slow in coming. It was marked with big triumphs for the firm and smaller, more personal ones, for me. I worked hard and enjoyed every moment of my work. And today—" Mr. Stitt laughed, but his glance, as it swept the busy office, was eloquent—"today I feel almost satisfied!" He paused a moment, and then—

"It doesn't at all follow," he said, "that a business man need—in the pursuit of a career—lose sight of his religious life. He can put much more into his work if he has the solid foundation of a Christian life and a home church back of him. I am one of the trustees of my church—and I have never, in all the years of my business, been too crowded for time to take the active interest that such a position requires. I have raised a family on the same principles that my mother gave to me. And I have endeavored—with all that's best in me—to make those principles the underlying fact of the firm that I head!"

Through the Open Door

An Interview with China's Delegates in Washington

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

THE average American citizen who thinks he understands everyday matters fairly well does not pretend to understand the intricate web of politics and policies called by the easy name of the Far East. Neither does he pretend to be able to define exactly what is meant by "the Open Door," as China and the public, especially the newspaper public, uses that term.

And it is hardly necessary for the Editor of the Christian Herald to tell his readers that as far as he is concerned he is innocent of a great quantity of inside knowledge that belongs to the history of the troubles that exist between China and Japan. This article is not a treatise on the political situation that at the present moment engages the attention of students of Oriental policies. I confess the thing is too intricate for my feeble mind to grasp in its true outlines, and I am perfectly willing to leave it to Mr. Wells and other historians who can put into a single sentence the entire policy of a whole nation, covering calmly any number of centuries and as many policies.

This is the story of seeing two men who, more than any others in the Conference at Washington, so far as China is concerned, know more about its real history and its ambitions and purposes and aims than any other two men, unless it is Colonel Harvey and Mark Sullivan. What these two newspaper men do not know about any world subject is perhaps worth knowing, but not when they are writing or speaking. At any rate they will not care to criticize the historical statements in this article, because there are not going to be any. Nothing but about two very interesting men of China and what they think about—but it will be plain what they think about when we get to it.

IN VISITING the official embassies of the Chinese and Japanese representatives during my stay in Washington I was always impressed by the total absence of any signs of ostentation or officialdom. On the other hand I was struck with the general air of freedom from all gilt braid and fancy uniformed attendants. I do not recall seeing any Japanese or Chinese clothed in any garments that were national in appearance, and I am sure I never saw any officials or doorkeepers who for one moment equalled the gorgeous doorkeeper I remember seeing once at the portals of the London Times some years ago, and past whom it was difficult to get unless one had a previous appointment to meet the third assistant reporter of court news. As to seeing the editor or proprietor himself, that could not be accomplished without a signed letter of endorsement carried on one's person and written by the Lord Chief Justice or some equally august and well-known person. Matters may be different in the Times now that Lord Northcliffe himself is an editor and proprietor.

The Chinese Ambassador to the British Empire, Dr. Wellington Koo, has his official residence in Washington during the Conference on Massachusetts Avenue, a long ways from the center of the city. But for that matter so do the Japanese Ambassador and many of the other diplomats. It took me nearly an hour's brisk walk to reach the embassy of Dr. Koo, and as I had no letters of introduction and his secretary had told me over the Ambassadorial telephone he was facing at any moment a most important conference, I went up the steps with some doubt, but with great admiration for the wonderful iron grided door, with its serpents of Æsculapius forming the center decoration so strikingly that I looked instinctively at my finger-ring, which bore the same sign of the medical corps of our own country, and I could not help wondering why a Chinese official residence was marked with a Greek symbol.

BUT when I had presented my card to the door usher—and by the way he was the nearest to an official I had yet seen and wore a "swallow-tail" evening suit and was an Irishman—I found myself in a large entrance which was too large for a hall and not big enough to be called a "parlor." I put my coat and hat down on a very handsome marble table some six feet long, because I saw other hats on it, and I noticed as I did so that the pedestals of the table—one could not call the supports legs—were also of Greek design; in fact, they were grotesque imitations of satyrs, and I could not help wondering where the furniture had come from.

The Irish major-domo in the evening clothes had taken my card somewhere, and while I waited I noted again the democratic freedom of the entire embassy.

There were perhaps a dozen different persons, Japanese with Chinese, Americans, one officer, the only man in uniform in sight, two servants sweeping the floor and stair railings, and doing it very leisurely, and half a dozen men evidently in waiting like myself. All the hats on the table except mine were bowlers, and I felt a little relieved when another man came in and put a soft hat down by the side of mine.

I had waited perhaps five minutes when an exceedingly wide-awake and smiling young man came running down the broad stairs at the end of the waiting-room and called my name, getting around the "Shel" part of it admirably. I rose, and he said he was the Ambassador's secretary, and if I would come up-stairs he would see me. As I went up the stairs with the Secretary he said, still smiling—and he smiled constantly as if life were one grand song and there were no such thing as a closed door on him—"The Ambassador will be glad to meet any one from the Christian Herald. In fact all of us feel under the greatest obligations to the Herald for what it has done."

THAT was a good enough introduction for any one, and I thanked him as well as I could and felt like asking him if he had been married last night, he looked so supremely happy; but he suddenly left me to go up another broad flight of steps where he said seemed to have nothing else to do but smile and be perfectly agreeable, and I asked him to write me down the names of the Chinese delegates, and he wrote the name of the Chief Justice just as I have put it down. The Secretary ought to know if anybody, and I am inclined to think the printer of that program got his spelling from the Irish doorkeeper in the dress-suit.

THE Chief Justice seemed so friendly that awaiting the coming of Dr. Koo I ventured to ask him a number of questions, displaying several volumes of ignorance of Chinese in the asking, but in reply to my asking just what China meant by the "Open Door" he said with great earnestness: "The open door that China wants is simply equal opportunity with all nations to develop her resources of commerce and industry without being exploited by any other nations." He went on to say that the United States had never sought to interfere with China's sovereignty, and for that reason was held in the highest esteem and friendship by all the people. Then I asked him if he considered the problems that confronted China so far as Japan was concerned to be insuperable, or if they could not be met in a spirit of friendly co-operation.

It was a direct question and the Chief Justice might not have wished to answer it in the presence of some of China's Jingoos, for she has her Jingoos as all nations have, but he said gravely and with the deepest feeling: "I believe these differences can be and will be met to the mutual satisfaction of China and Japan. They must be solved by the spirit of good-will."

Dr. Koo came in at that moment, the smiling Secretary by his side. His greeting was, I felt at once, extended to the entire Christian Herald family. "Tell them it was a magnificent expression of your sympathy to our suffering people, your contribution to the famine. We shall never forget it."

Dr. Koo is a strikingly handsome man, of commanding look and one would not mistake the statesman. He asked me to pardon him if he withdrew to make a very important engagement with a conference committee, but before he went out he said again the same thing he had said about the Christian Herald and its contributors. "We of China feel the utmost friendship for America for what you are and for what you have done."

I LINGERED, as I have said, for a few minutes with the glad young Secretary. He seemed to have absolutely nothing on earth to do but make himself smilingly agreeable to me. The duties of his office, if he had any, rested as lightly on his young shoulders as a wedding rose on the lapel of the bridegroom's coat or the orange blossoms on the brow of the sweet young bride. I felt certain as I lingered that he must have been married last night or at least was engaged to some charming Chinese graduate of Vassar or Smith where the old type of China is passing into the new type of a new world.

And I could not help again comparing as I had before, the difference between the men of the East and the West. For at all the embassies of the Oriental delegates I visited there was an air of leisure and of calm that we of the West do not seem to understand or express. I wonder if it is because they are so deep settled in the fact of their centuries-old solidity that they have such an atmosphere of not being in a hurry. Dr. Koo and Dr. Chung Hui Wang were soon to go into a very important conference meeting where matters of tremendous meaning to China would be discussed. But they both appeared to me to be no more concerned and no more in a hurry about it than if they had a summer's day in front of them to choose which out of a dozen ways they would spend it.

I at last managed to bow myself out of the embassy and reluctantly shook hands, I think for the fifth time, with the genial Secretary. I felt sure he was the right young man in the right place.

I hope the readers of the Christian Herald will not think this article is too lightly written. I am not in the mood after my interview with Dr. Koo and the Chief Justice of China to feel gloomy about the Open Door or the Far East or the Pacific or anything else. The smiling face of the Secretary rises before me, and somehow I cannot help feeling that God is in His world working among the nations, bringing them together in ways they themselves do not know how. At any rate as I walked away to my hotel, I found myself saying, "He hath made of one blood all nations that be upon the face of the earth." China and Japan. "With God all things are possible."

Mrs. Alfred Sze, wife of China's minister to the United States, who is one of her principal delegates to the Washington Conference, and their two-year-old daughter Betty

Dr. Koo's office was, politely ushering me into a real "parlor," and as he did so introducing me to a tall, interesting looking man, whose name I did not get, but he looked all right. After eying each other a few seconds the man said, speaking such good English that I wished I had a dictionary to pick out a few good words in reply, "I understand you are representing the Christian Herald of New York. I wish to say for my people that we deeply appreciate all you have done for us in the great famine."

That was a good enough opening and I made reply that we appreciated the lasting friendship of China, and could say as a country that we had never tried to exploit—I pulled up at that point, not knowing just to whom it was I was talking, when the Secretary came running down the stairs still smiling as if he had just got word that his rich uncle had died and left him a fortune, and said Dr. Koo would soon be down.

"Oh!" he said, just as any one might say it, "I am afraid I did not make very clear the name of the Chief Justice." And he introduced him again and this time I caught the name of Dr. Chung Hui Wang, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of China, the Senior Delegate to the League of Nations and the member sitting with Dr. Koo and Dr. Alfred Sze at the Washington Conference. I may say here that a public program of the Conference gave Dr. Wang's name as Hui Wang Chung. But all I know about it is that after the Chief Justice and Dr. Koo had gone I remained to talk with the smiling Secretary who

Christmas in the "Department House"

Toddlekins Does Her Bit to Brighten the Day

By IDA ALEXANDER

Illustrated by William C. McNulty

THE soon-to-be Christmas was with Toddlekins as she was being put to bed. Thoughts of it hovered around her, as they had done for weeks.

"It's goin' to be the icy Christmas ever was!" prophesied Toddlekins.

"Icy! Not much, in California!" disagreed Ben, his hands in his pockets.

"Nice," elucidated Esther. "You knew what she meant, Ben."

But Toddlekins was talking again. "Icy Christmas!" she cried. "Know what I wants Santa Claus to bring me?"

Everybody knew and nobody said. Their attention engaged, Toddlekins went on.

"I want a doll—a weally, twuly doll, 'at goes to sleep, an' wakes up, an' talks, an' says its prayers—"

"Some doll," interrupted Ben, in an undertone.

"All full o' clothes," went on Toddlekins, "an' openin' an' shuttin' eyes. 'Nen I wants a wockin' horse—a great big, one 'at Benny can wide on."

She smiled ingratiatingly over at the hostile Ben, and he smiled back.

"An' a new hat wiv a fevver, an' a coat—all fur 'wound it—an'—"

"Toddlekins," sighed Mrs. Grayson, "you'll break the bank!"

"An' there ain't any bank," added Ben.

"Santa Claus have got banks," smiled Toddlekins. "Maybe he keeps 'em over in the department house."

"Apartment house, you goose," corrected Ben, in his superior manner.

"Sh! S-h-h!" they cautioned him.

"That's the cutest thing she says."

The mention of the apartment house had centered the interest of Toddlekins on that.

"It's a awful icy house," she went on, "winders, an' winders, an' winders, way up. But I like my lady's winder best. She have flowers, an' a bird, an'—an'—everything. You fink Santa Claus will bring her somefin' icy?"

"I shouldn't wonder," Esther cheered her.

"Naw," put in the disagreeing Ben, "he won't go there at tall. He don't go where there's no babies."

Toddlekins pondered that with a drooping lip.

"I want my lady should get somefin'," she said. "Can't she get somefin' if she haven't any baby?"

"Well, maybe," Esther allowed.

"Maybe God'll send her a baby, way, way down from Heaven—in a basket—wiv a tur-key—"

Toddlekins' head was nodding, her thoughts becoming confused. She lisped out her sleepy prayer after her mother, and that was all.

Mrs. Grayson put her in bed and marshalled the others out of the room—one, two, three, four—and Toddlekins made five! "Such a lot of children!" people said. The cottage seemed to be overflowing with them.

AT LAST the four others were tucked away, like Toddlekins. Mrs. Grayson picked up the little clothes, looked ruefully at Ben's worn shoe, sighed a little, smiled a little, and sat down to wait for Mr. Grayson. He was working late, these nights. Five little children meant early work and late work for both father and mother.

Mrs. Grayson's fingers stitched busily at a dress for Toddlekins' doll. Some of the other things might fail to materialize. But the doll was a sure-to-be thing. Not exactly as ordered would that doll be. It would not talk, it would not know its prayers. But at least it could be "full of clothes." Night after night, the mother worked that it might be.

The dress was finished and still Mr. Grayson did not come. The mother put the dress away with the other things and wandered to the window.

"There are always accidents!" she worried. "I never really rest till Frank is safe at home."

Her eyes turned from the street to the apartment house across the way. Here and there a light shone out. But most of the windows were in darkness.

The window of Toddlekins' lady flung out its brilliant light, defying passers-by to make much of the drooping figure at the window. Mrs. Grayson knew she would be there before she looked up. She always was there at night—late, late. However tardy the home-coming of Mr. Grayson might be, the return of the one Toddlekins' lady watched for was later still. Never had Mrs. Grayson seen that light extinguished before her own.

"I wonder who she watches for and why," she thought. "Perhaps she just likes to sit at the window and look into the night. I used to, when I was young as she. It might be that she's lonely—no little child to keep thoughts and fingers busy; no planning how to make a Christmas. Of course, she wouldn't have to plan. The managing, planning days are over for the ones who live in that 'department house.'"

THE apartment house towered over the little cottage, even as the incomes of the inmates towered

In Toddlekins' brain a daring project was born. She would take her lady over a present her very own self!

over that of Mr. Grayson. All around the few cottages tall buildings had sprung up. The cottages, indeed, but awaited the settling of the estate of a hale old man of eighty-four. Once the fingers of the opinionated owner released their clutch on the cottages and life, the heir-at-law would make haste to tear them down, and replace them with tall, fine buildings, such as those with which the neighborhood was sown.

In the meantime the Graysons continued to twine their nasturtiums and sweet peas over the shabbiness of the place, to rejoice in the reasonable rent, to live up to their knowledge that the evil thereof is sufficient unto the day.

People looked askance at the cottages, incongruously set in the near-fashionable neighborhood. The occupants of the apartment house looked down upon them literally and figuratively. There was nothing between them, not even common humanity, one would have supposed. Mrs. Grayson had tried a nod and a smile at first. But they had not been returned. So the kind eyes under the shabby bonnet had learned to look another way.

The rollicking, rosy children, too, were an anomaly in the neighborhood. Children did not grow freely in the atmosphere. The big apartment house across the way boasted but two children, and they not in the same family. But they might have been, so closely they held together, so sedately they played their games, so entirely they ignored the little flock across the street and followed in the footsteps of their elders. They never had been heard to laugh, seldom known to smile.

"I think they're sissies," avowed Ben, belligerently. "Know what they did when their ball came this side an' I pitched it back? Didn't say thank you; didn't even smile."

"They never smile," said Sue, wistfully. "Oncet when you was all off at school, an' Toddlekins asleep, I smiled at the girl. But she never smiled back."

"Aw, what you want to go smilin' at them for?" queried Ben. "They're stuck-up sissies. They never smile back. They—"

Toddlekins beat the tray of her high chair to demand attention.

"Oncet my lady smiled at me!" she declared for the hundredth time. "She did! She did! Her mouf got wide as wide! It was pretty near a laugh. That was the time I turned the sumerset."

They laughed with and at Toddlekins. But nobody informed her that the near-a-laugh smile was not in the nature of friendly overtures. Toddlekins had held it so from the first. And ever afterward the lady had been her lady.

She never had smiled again. Her face was not much given to smiling, if Toddlekins had but known. But Toddlekins did not know, and she waited patiently for the time when her lady should beam upon her again.

A WEEK before Christmas, Mr. and Mrs. Grayson held a round-up meeting on the Christmas question. Mrs. Grayson brought out her worn and often-altered list. The heads of father and mother bent together over it. The last was first. Toddlekins' name headed the list.

"She wants such a lot," said the mother, with a smile and a sigh. "Every day she thinks of something else. Of course she's just a baby."

"Just a baby, God bless her! I wish we could get her every single thing she wants," said Frank Grayson.

"Well, we can't. But she'll be satisfied, I think, Christmas Day. I've made change after change for the doll. Little girls like dressing and undressing them. And I've made Toddlekins herself a coat trimmed with fur, out of that old one of mine. I'll show it to you, after. It's pretty dark, but I can't help it. It's brown, and she wanted old rose, like the child across the street. Still—"

"She'll like it when she gets it—probably better than the other. Ben still holding out for skates?"

"Yes. All the boys have them. And, of course, he wants them, too. I'm afraid, though, he'll be sorry later that he didn't keep to the baseball outfit. He's the greatest one for baseball."

"I used to be when I was his age. I like a good game yet."

Mrs. Grayson's smile was as wistful as it was caressing. "Poor Frank! I wish you ever had a chance to go."

His answer was reassuring. "Pshaw! I never think of it. I'd rather the youngsters had a good Christmas than to see every game for the next twenty years. If we could add the outfit to old Ben's skates, it would be baseball enough for me."

"Maybe we can. The others aren't nearly as voracious as Toddlekins. Esther wants books and work-box—they're cheap. Sue, a dolly, of course, and a set of dishes. Robbie wants skates. But he's too little. I'm not willing for him to have them. I haven't really sifted down his second choice. I'll do it tomorrow. All the presents for home have been sent and the outside things are ready. I made them all and they really cost very little. And I've both dollies in and nearly dressed. It's just these presents for the children—and—candy—things for the stockings—tree—dinner—it's kind of alarming, even yet."

"We'll get through," he cheered her. "Lay in all you can this week. Then I'll get all I can advanced Christmas Eve. You meet me and we'll spend it quick as winking!"

"It'll be awfully hard for me to get off Christmas Eve. It's such a busy day. I hate, too, to leave the children alone."

"Esther and Ben'll look out for them. We couldn't lug five youngsters through that crowd, even if we didn't have to consider—the car fare."

Both laughed a little over that, then sobered up again.

"We do have to watch every cent, if we want a nice Christmas," said Mrs. Grayson in apology to her husband and herself.

"Sure thing. But then it's worth it."

"Yes, it's worth it. But I wish——"

SHE did not finish the sentence, but turned into the little dark sitting-room. She gazed out of the unshaded window to that other one across the street. The window was wide. Toddlekings' lady still sat beside it, her arms thrown out like an imprisoned bird seeking a way of escape. But Mrs. Grayson did not see that. The luxurious room impressed itself upon her, the jewels that flashed at the woman's wrist and throat. One of those—just one—and Toddlekings and the rest could have their will for once. The mother swallowed a sip from Envy's bitter cup.

"You were saying you wished something, dear," Mr. Grayson reminded her when she went back to him.

"I was wishing that we could have some of the over-abundance that lies across the way; just once to breathe freely; to be able to get all we wanted, without having to pay so dearly for it, before and after. Oh, just once! I suppose it's awful of me. I know it's awful of me. But I can't help wishing, Frank, that—just for once——"

She broke off with a shamed, apologetic attempt at a laugh.

Mr. Grayson patted his broad knee invitingly. "Come, let's thrash it all out," he said, "and be done with it."

She shook her head. "No," she told him, as Toddlekings sometimes did, "I'm bad now. Wait till I'm good again. I'm pretty sure I'll be desperately good again in a minute."

And it was not much more before she was able to smile into his patient eyes.

"I'm a wretch!" she said. "I don't know what came over me, envying Toddlekings' lady, with all the blessings that we have."

"Every one has their off days," he allowed. "You don't have many, you little mother, you!"

"You don't have any."

"Don't I, though? I remember one time, years ago, feeling dreadfully aggrieved because I couldn't have a checked suit like Cham Thayer had."

"A checked suit?"

"Yes, I wouldn't be found dead in it today—nor alive, either. But, just at the time, I certainly felt hardly used."

"Poor Frank!"

"Poor Frank!" he scoffed. "Rich Frank! Do you realize, woman-child, that we have about five million dollars worth of boys and girls—six, I guess, for we can't put Toddlekings in at less than two."

"We couldn't put any of them in under two. And Toddlekings surely ought to be six. I don't love her a bit better than the others, but she's the dearest thing. I wish we had written all her cute sayings down. They'd nearly fill a book. She's always talking about her lady. I guess that's what put her in my mind. She does look inviting, too, in all her pretty dresses. Toddlekings builds on the time that she'll vouchsafe her the second smile."

"Now, there's an argument in favor of our opulence, or her lack of it. Fancy any one being poor enough to have only one smile for Toddlekings!"

"Yes, that's poverty, the genuine article. Ours is only make-believe," smiled the mother, her own bright self again.

THE days passed on, each with some little happening of its own. There was the day Robbie fell down and hurt his knee in a way to threaten the devastation of a doctor's visit, till the mother worked wonders with witch hazel; the morning Ben came home, bloody and triumphant, from one of his frequent pitched battles; the afternoon that Toddlekings wailed, and would not be comforted, because her lady had failed to smile at some particularly enticing somersaults; the time Esther watched a cake for her mother, and allowed it to burn up—a cake all full of butter! But each little tragedy worked its own way out, or gave place to another one and was forgotten.

Christmas Eve came at last, with California sunshine to hallow the gracious time. It was well that they had the sunshine to give a cheerful look to things, for the day did not begin propitiously.

Mrs. Grayson had decided, almost at the last moment, to add a knitted scarf and cap to each doll's outfit, saving thereby the bagatelle of two "boughten" hats. It rushed her and threw her calculations out. Esther had to be pressed into service. Ben and Robbie were squabbling. Sue was out of sorts and Toddlekings no better.

"Dear me," the mother sighed, "I'll never get through in the world!"

She worked all morning, shut in her own room. Disturbing sounds came to her, but she did not pause.

Presently one little scarf and cap were finished, and at last the other.

"Now for the tree!" thought the mother.

The tree, gaunt and bare, stood in the locked living-room. It gave no promise so far of the glittering wonder it was soon to become. Mrs. Grayson attacked it feverishly, while Esther kept the children out of the way. But Fate was against her. Callers came; packages came; this, that and the other thing interrupted. The time to meet the father drew near and the skeleton branches of the tree mocked her. She gave it up at last and called the womanly Esther.

"I can't get it finished, Esther," she said. "And I must be off soon to meet father. I don't know what to do. Do you think you could do anything with it?"

Esther nodded solemnly and re-assuringly.

"Me an' Ben will get it all trimmed while you're gone," she promised.

"But are you sure you can do it? You've never even helped before."

"I'm sure. The very top is done. That's the worst part. Me an' Ben can do the rest—easy."

"But what about the children?"

EVEN Esther stood nonplussed at that. The three little ones must not see the tree until it broke upon them in dazzling glory.

"Well, I don't know," she finally admitted. "We could get it most finished while Toddlekings is asleep. But what about Sue an' Robbie?"

The mother thought a moment.

"We could let them go over and play with the Grant children. They'd love that. I can take them as I go and explain to Mrs. Grant. With them out of the way, and Toddlekings down, you'll have a clear field. Poor child, I hate to leave it on you, but I don't see what else I can do."

"We'll love it, me an' Ben," Esther assured her. "We know just where things go. We'll get it done in no time."

She was nervous, though, about her responsibilities, as she watched the shabby bonnet bobbing along on the way to the cars.

"We have to be careful as careful," she warned Ben. "And we have to make time in case we get interrupted."

"Aw, who's goin' to disturb us? We got all afternoon. First off, you've got to get that kid down an' out of the way."

Toddlekings, standing on the step beside them, watching her mother and the others vanish, was not in the most tractable frame of mind.

(Continued on page 928)

When Winter Comes

WHEN winter comes the earth seems still—forgotten is life's springtime thrill, forgotten is the summer's glow, and autumn's leaves, beneath the snow, have turned a sullen, tired brown. All nature wears a pallid gown; the trees are dark and in the sky a thousand toneless clouds float by.

When winter comes, the birds fly far to where eternal summers are, and little beasts creep into rest, in places that remain unguessed, 'til warmer sunlight calls them out. The world seems still—no song or shout is on its lips; it almost seems as if the way the moonlight gleams upon the ice and frost and snow is like a whisper . . . shadows go, like little ghosts, across the dark of country lane or city park.

When winter comes folk seem to fear the cold and quiet—they draw near to fires burning warmly bright, to pleasant rooms, and soft lamp-light. When winter comes they close their doors and count their goodly harvest stores—they make their curtained windows fast against the fury of the blast.

Then is the time of apples red, of popcorn white and warm, instead of pink ice-cream and lemonade! Then is the time to make a raid on pantries stacked with walnuts black. . . . When music rests upon the rack of the piano—when old books are taken from forgotten nooks. Then is the time of indoor play, the good old games of yesterday in which the young and old can mix. Then is the time to mend, to fix the broken chair or closet shelf! When winter comes you find yourself with half a hundred things to do that have been waiting long for you.

The days are short—the hours speed by. It seems as if the very sky is pledged to fill the world with night—as if the clock is never right!

SOMETIMES I think the snow that flies, the rain that sweeps, the wind that cries, is like a hint to us that there are forces in the earth and air that we will never understand. Sometimes I glimpse a Master hand in some gigantic storm, I see His message in each ice-bound tree. Sometimes I think that winter comes with sounds as loud as hostile drums—and sometimes like an army creeps upon a silent land that sleeps.

When winter comes I like to look upon some frozen pond or brook. I like to feel that life still goes forever free—that water flows beneath the surfaces so still. I like to wonder what can kill the movement and the utter peace that never asks for a release, that blandly waits until the sun shall whisper—"Winter time is done!"

His Love Is Near, to Keep Our Souls From Doubt and Fear

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Perhaps each little forest place where violets bloom in spring, must face a moment of complete despair—perhaps when frost has filled the air a million leaves feel keen distress—when winter comes to them I guess that they must know, in some strange way, that they have reached a final day. I wonder if the roses go to sleep, in peace, beneath the snow? Or if they sometimes doubt and fear—and if they sometimes fail to hear the reassurance in the breeze that blows among the garden trees?

We know our sorrows. Who can span the depths of fear that comes, who can in all sincerity point out a soul that never knew a doubt? When winter comes the flowers go. . . . When winter comes to us, we know that we must be upon our way. And then it is that every day seems all too good and sweet and full—and then it is we feel the pull of earth and earthly ties and then we feel the joy of living, when that joy is almost at its close! I wonder if each flower knows what lies beyond—or if they die and never know the springtime sky will smile upon their glad rebirth? For flowers bloom again, on earth. And lives will bloom again—He knows, who gave a triumph to the rose!

When winter comes the sad ones sigh, and say: "Another year gone by!" The sad ones groan—"We're growing old—" and shiver in the bitter cold. The sad ones cry, "I wish the sun would always shine—when summer's done, we feel that life is finished, too!" The sad ones are all wrong—they do much harm with their vague discontent, they make us feel that winter's sent to bother us, they make us feel that every snowflake comes to steal earth's loveliness. It is not so—the roses bloom beneath the snow, and warm sap flows in every tree, a part of life's great mystery.

There is no death! Each springtime tells the tale again—each flower swells the glad some chorus, every brook is like a chapter from the Book of Life. The winter comes with rest because God wills—and He knows best!

I wish that all the things that grew would teach their lesson—ever new—to eyes grown sure and ears grown wise. But we have only human eyes and human ears and human hearts. We sometimes crush the hope that starts unreasoning and half afraid. Doubt is the debt that we have paid and shall forever pay, I fear—until our souls can learn to hear the silent word that comes to all when winter casts a snowy pall.

When winter comes with freezing sleet we try to guide our halting feet across the road—some of us slip, some of us lose our faulty grip upon the solid things, some fall—and cast their sorrow on us all.

But some there are, when winter's here, who seem quite competent to steer a steady course, who walk with care, who lift life's gauntlet—take Fate's dare. And they go briskly down the way and never falter day by day. The sleet and ice hold hidden snares, smooth spots are waiting unawares beneath each small deceptive drift—they take the pathway with the gift of joyous song upon their lips. They never make the slightest slips—and walking steadily and fast they scarcely know when winter's past.

When winter comes the earth seems still—but, just beyond each purple hill, are cozy homes from which the smoke of fires curl—the winter's cloak of white just seems to make each home the cozier to folk who roam. They know that good cheer waits inside, that love and happiness abide together where the hearth is gay with warmth and cheer from day to day.

Forgotten is the summer's gleam, the springtime is a far-off dream—the vivid dress of autumn lies, a vision 'neath enchanted skies. The trees are dressed in drab, the scene, save only for the evergreen, is etched in brown and black—but, oh, the colors live beneath the snow!

When winter comes, the birds fly far, but every song is living, far more perfect in our memories. We dream of opal summer seas and topaz sand and daisy fields and all the golden harvest yields.

When winter comes we may be sad—but God would rather see us glad. And He would rather have us meet the seasons kneeling at His feet in utter thankfulness and praise. He gives us all our yesterdays and our tomorrows—let us know He loves us when he sends the snow!

Let us have winter pictures, too. Our souls may see the skies of blue, the roses and the fields of grain—the silver sheen of summer rain. And let us hear the breeze, the roar of waves upon the rock-bound shore—the bird that sings, the bee that hums—when winter comes, when winter comes!

The Editorial Forum

DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON
Editor-in-Chief

RAE D. HENKLE
Managing Editor

DR. GEORGE H. SANDISON
Editor Emeritus

A Message to the Churches

THAT the great leaders of the Church are beginning to accept the view that we are living in a time of fulfillment is evidenced by the steady increase in the output of prophetic literature. One of the latest publications is a notable volume by Bishop Charles D. Williams, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, a thinker and writer of wide experience, who, in discussing "The Prophetic Message for Today," boldly challenges the attention of the Church to facts and interpretations that have an immediate bearing upon the world changes in years of crises. "If ever the prophet was called upon to give the largest interpretations of the will of God, and make the widest application of the message," writes the Bishop, "it is today. If ever the Christian Church were challenged to recall and fulfil in its broadest terms the original divine Commission—which is her only reason for existence—namely 'to disciple the nations' and 'save the world,' instead of merely to disciple individuals . . . it is today!"

He goes even further than this. He holds that the Lord is even now seated in judgment upon our whole world order, and that that order is "condemned and doomed." "We must restore the moral and spiritual sub-foundations of society if it is to stand solid and secure," but we forgot our foundations. We were so absorbed in material values that we lost our sense of moral and spiritual values. Art and literature waned. Their stock was low in the spiritual market. Education sank into the mere handmaid of industry. We put our chief emphasis on the technical. Efficiency, not culture or character, was the paramount end. Religion was for the most part handed over to women and children, and was regarded as of no serious concern to the practical man. The "business man" was king; the commercial conscience supreme. The Church was to be a strictly "limited liability" corporation. Religion must have nothing to do with politics, industry or business. It could deal with sentiments and emotions, and look after the minor moralities; perhaps also the home and family life, and it might concern itself with charity, rescue and relief work. It could run ambulances and take care of the victims of our social and industrial system; but never a word was it to utter about justice and righteousness in the larger relations of life, least of all about a possible Kingdom of God—a heavenly civilization on earth. The practical men of the world virtually said to the preacher: "Keep the attention of the masses on the world to come, and they won't bother about the wrongs and injustices of their present world. Tell them everything will be made up to them in heaven. That will keep them quiet and submissive."

This the outspoken Bishop presents as a fair picture of what he conceives as the average business man's conception of the place and function of religion in life—a conception which he admits the Church, for the most part, accepted willingly. The result has been the loss of its power and dignity. This he assigns as the reason why multitudes deserted the Church, both among the masses and classes. This, he submits, illustrates the practical materialism of the age. Above all, it was the accumulated horrors and human misery, wrongs and injustices growing out of the social and industrial system, which made the multitude give up their faith in a good God—who cared!

Bishop Williams, while applying this characterization to the Church, does not claim that it applies to every pulpit. It was, however, the dominant note; and statecraft took the same view and created its large armaments, its armies and navies. It is some satisfaction to know that there were churches true to their mission; but in the majority, the spiritual and the ideal were overborne by the material and commercial. To these conditions he attributes almost all that is wrong in our social and industrial life.

And what is the lesson which the Bishop draws from the situation he has described? He cites Herbert Hoover's declaration that "nothing less than a spiritual revival can save the industrial situation," and he thanks God that there are signs of the Church's awakening to the suggestion and answering the challenge. He points to the great and growing chorus of church councils and conferences here and abroad, in favor of giving Christendom a common voice—that of a united Church, delivering a whole Gospel to the whole world. He regards new world alliances for international friendship, and conferences on unity, and similar movements as indicating that the Church is preparing to focus her scattered moral forces upon a wrecked industrial system and a shattered world order, that she may proclaim everywhere the whole Gospel and the whole prophetic message of Jesus.

Help Prevent Overtime Work

The renewal season is here for the great majority of Christian Herald readers. Tens of thousands of subscriptions will be received in our counting room in the next few weeks, most of them in the last week of the year.

May we suggest that you can aid us greatly and relieve the employees in the subscription department of the necessity of after-hour work, if you will forward your renewal and such new subscriptions as you are including with your renewal, at as early a date as possible.

As you will have seen in our announcement in the December 3 issue, some wonderful things are coming in the magazine of 1922 and we want to be sure your name is entered promptly so you will not miss a single number.

And he urges all ministers to unite in this aim and object that the Church may be unified and may fulfil her divine Commission as the restorer of the foundations of civilization. Surely such a message deserves the fullest consideration.

Forgotten Civilizations

IN THAT old library of Nature, the earth, man is constantly making new discoveries. True, they may not always be new in the strictest sense, yet they are new to the age in which we are living. What the archeologist brings to light from the secret repositories of the soil, but for his enterprise might have passed undiscovered to the end of time.

Our American universities have distinguished themselves in archeological fields in recent years. Yale, Chicago University and the University of Pennsylvania have each done notable work. And now Harvard, which has pushed to the fore in little over a decade, has added to its laurels through a surprising find in Ethiopia—no less than the discovery of the lost civilization of that ancient land. This, which was accomplished by the expedition under Professor George A. Reisner, now returned to the United States after accomplishing its work, includes several features probably unparalleled in the recent history of professional research. The expedition, through a surprising series of fortunate surveys, succeeded in discovering and allotting to their respective place in Ethiopian history, no less than twenty-six generations of monarchs, besides unearthing much material relating to a civilization which seems to have been long ago utterly lost to the world.

The story of Professor Reisner's work reads like an Oriental romance. He found that Gobel-Barkai, in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, was identical with Napata, the ancient capital of Ethiopia. A group of pyramids was found, which proved on investigation to be the tombs of twenty kings and fifty-three queens who lived and reigned in Ethiopia between 640 to 250 B.C., as the inscriptions revealed. Some few miles distant from Napata still other pyramids were found, and here it was discovered that the tombs were those of men who had been mighty conquerors in their day; four at least of whom had ruled over Egypt as well as their own land. Their ancestry was traced from Libyan nomads, who had come from Egypt and invaded and settled in Ethiopia about 900 B.C. One of the most distinguished of this line, Plankhy, an early adventurer, had invaded and conquered Egypt, and that country, together with 2000 miles of Nile Valley, remained under Ethiopian rule during five reigns in succession.

It would be difficult to estimate the importance of this impressive addition to both Egyptian and Ethiopian history. Significant also as a new instance of Bible confirmation is the discovery of the burial chamber of Tirhaqua (or Tirhakah), King of Ethiopia, mentioned in Isa. 37: 36 and also II Kings 19: 37. According to the archeologists' interpretation of the inscriptions and the estimate of the artistic work found in these royal tombs, we must revise our preconceived notions about Ethiopia and its civilization. Here are indications of a high culture of the arts and crafts, of excellent portrait work, carving, and other skilled workmanship including wonderful statuary. Of the education, literature, laws and social customs of this long-vanished age, we know nothing, although the recent discoveries may yet tell us much. Evidence was found that these royal tombs had been looted centuries ago. So weak is human nature that it spares nothing, not even that most enduring of all material things of man's creation—a pyramid!

The Huge Costs of Strikes

OUR whole nation from the President, Cabinet and Congress down to the humblest citizen, is striving to lead the world away from war with its frightful waste of human life and the universal impoverishment it imposes. Next to war, as a source of waste and suffering, comes the strike. Up-to-date statistics gathered from all parts of the country by several of the Departments in Washington, reveal the startling fact that the strikes, lockouts, shut-downs and voluntary idleness of a single year have caused a loss of $4,000,000,000 to American labor. This huge sacrifice means privation and suffering in countless homes to young and old. It means the hard burden of poverty self-inflicted, and the greater part of which could have been avoided. In one strike alone—that of the New York Garment workers—the loss to the operatives and their dependent families is estimated at $750,000 to $1,000,000 a day!

We have boards of Mediation and Conciliation, and we have other organized bodies, yet these seem to have been ineffective at the crisis. We have not yet hit upon a safe and reliable method of averting strikes and the losses they entail, but we have faith to believe that this will yet be accomplished and that the industrialism of the future will not be harassed and torn by wasteful warfare between workers and employers, where the interests of both sides are equally vital. They should be capable of adjustment, and it is a reflection on our civilization that we have not had some means of settling these quarrels long ere now.

Arbitration should be adopted in all trade disputes and it should be made compulsory. The workers should have an equal voice in all questions submitted to the Arbitration Board, and they, above all others, would be the greatest gainers by the adoption of a system that would make strikes unnecessary. Then there would be an end to the loss of millions through strikes, and to the kind of industrial warfare which, no matter which side wins, always inflicts the heaviest loss on the worker, who is least able to bear it.

Six Men

WORLD-WIDE fame and renown that will live through the ages await the half-dozen heroic souls who have been chosen to make the attempt to scale the topmost peak of Mount Everest, the highest in the world. It will be a feat the accomplishment of which will bring some gratifications that no other could possibly present—not even the conquest of the poles. From the highest peak in the world they will see wondrous sights stretching out on every side, vast, limitless, impressive. Their equipment, should they be able to use it, will bring to the eyes of the world photographs of rare value, with apparently endless mountain ranges such as no human eye has ever yet gazed upon. They will be able to bring us from that tremendous elevation of over 29,000 feet, facts which the scientific world will be glad to welcome. But who can describe the perils and hardships of such a climb! Although they are now in camp high up toward the summit, the last peak will not be adventured until the coming summer. It is a task so full of danger that one shudders to read this description which the Manchester Guardian gives:

"The last 6,000 feet will be of vertical height and the last two miles of horizontal distance. Six thousand feet is about the height that you walk of an afternoon from Zermatt up the track to the little Mettelhorn. Of course the going on Everest will be different; how different is expressed by the fact that when the reconnoitering party reached its highest point this year, the longed-for point two miles away and 6,000 feet higher was quite beyond its power to reach. It will be a tough job for the six and success will not come without much toil and pain; it may not come next year at all. But in a world full of tough jobs, pains, fatigues, uncertainties of victory, what a golden job for any mountaineer to get to try the strength of his youth."

How would you like to be one of the six who are to throw all there is in life into the scale in this perilous climb? To all of us, at some time or other, life has its hills. Pilgrim had his Hill Difficulty, and we too have our steep grades to conquer, our dangers to undergo, and we have to acquire skill and knowledge in order to reach the summit. All who win the prizes of life have to climb, to face strenuous effort and accept self-denial as a part of the regimen. These chosen six men, brave, strong, accustomed to exposure, are typical of all who face the great struggle which comes in every life of endeavor. Let us hope that the climbers may conquer Everest's loftiest peak, and return to tell the world how it feels to stand on the one spot of rock that is nearest to the sky. That will be a story.

The World News of the Week

Japan's Plea for Increase in Naval Ratio Delays Agreement

JAPAN'S insistence that she must have a navy stronger than that allotted to her in the proposals of Secretary Hughes has delayed an agreement on the limitation of naval armament by the Washington Conference, after it had appeared that phase of the gathering might be settled in a comparatively short time and the way cleared for the delegates to devote all of their energies to a solution of the Far Eastern and Pacific questions. Japan has presented formally a proposal that her fleet should be 70 per cent. of the strength of the fleets of the United States and Great Britain, instead of the 60 per cent. originally proposed; and has been seeking, though in vain, to find a basis of calculation which would convince America and Britain of the justness of her demands. The facts upon which Secretary Hughes based his terms have stood the test of thorough study by the naval experts, and it was predicted the acceptance "in principle" of the American proposals would be followed by an acceptance of the proposals in detail.

It was suggested that Japan wished to delay a final agreement on naval ratios in order to use concessions on that subject for trading purposes in the settlement of Far Eastern questions, an attitude which is in thorough accord with diplomatic traditions, but scarcely in accord with the spirit which should be dominant in the Washington Conference. Another factor to be considered was the political effect in Japan of the scrapping of the 35,000-ton Mutsu, her newest fighting ship, the cost of which has been so great that each Japanese peasant feels he had made sacrifices for her construction. The Japanese delegates have fought hard to retain the Mutsu, but have encountered the firm declaration that Britain and America must have corresponding increases in naval strength if that is permitted.

Progress has been made toward working out a basis for China's future which would end many of the encroachments on her sovereignty. As a step in that direction a resolution was adopted providing for an investigation of China's courts by an international committee of jurists which is to report within a year on the advisability of withdrawing the foreign courts of assenting powers—which would mean the abolition of extra-territorial rights. All the countries represented at the Conference, except Japan, have agreed to the withdrawal of foreign post-offices in China on January 1, 1923, under certain conditions, and the Japanese delegates are expected to agree to this date as soon as Tokio has been consulted.

The Chinese delegates sought to bring the question of the return of Shantung to China, on which Japan and China had been unable to agree, directly before the Conference, but failed to accomplish this. Negotiations between the Chinese and Japanese delegates were arranged, however, and they began a new attempt to solve this troublesome question, with the delegates of the other Powers keeping an eye on their progress.

The fact that the Washington Conference, in the first four weeks of its sittings, has not achieved a definite solution of the great problems it was convened to consider, should not cause discouragement. The issues being discussed are so momentous and so complicated that delays are inevitable. The delegates in Washington continue to be optimistic that great accomplishments will be recorded.

But in the widening of the scope of the Conference to take up details of minor importance there is danger. Major decisions need to be speeded up somewhat. Along this line Stephen Lauzanne of the Paris Matin, writing in the New York Times, gave a pertinent warning:

"Now, one thing is certain. It is that this Conference will be a success only if it can achieve its aim quickly. The Conference will be a success only if it deals with great lines, not if it wants to settle minor details. The Conference will be a success only if it is over before Christmas, not if it drags along for six months. So that we may say that all the people who are delaying the Conference have the secret purpose of wrecking it, and all the people who want to speed it up have the avowed purpose of making it a real success. And we may say also that the people who will have wrecked the conference will have to bear the responsibility of it before their own nations and before the nations of the world."

"It is no use, in public sittings or in conversations from five to seven before the assembled members of the press, to put your hand on your heart, to lift up your eyes toward heaven and to declare: 'America has given us a great example. We share the lofty ideals of America.' If, in private sittings, you have only silence for answering America's suggestions, and if you deluge America's proposals under a flood of fantastic demands."

The American people will be slow to believe that any delegates wish to wreck the Conference.

METHODIST BISHOPS GATHER FROM FOREIGN LANDS
They have come to the United States for a notable series of church gatherings. Standing, left to right, are Bishops Blake of Paris, Smith of India, Bast of Denmark; seated are Bishops Nielsen of Austria, Oldham of South America, and Welch of Korea

Against Philippine Independence Now

THAT independence should not be granted to the Philippine Islands "until the people have had time to absorb and thoroughly master the powers already in their hands" was the key recommendation of Major-General Leonard Wood, now governor-general of the islands, and W. Cameron Forbes, former governor-general, in reporting on their six months' investigation of conditions. "We feel," the report states, "that with all their many excellent qualities, the experience of the last eight years, during which they have had practical autonomy, has not been such as to justify the people of the United States in relinquishing supervision of the Philippine Islands, withdrawing their army and navy and leaving the islands a prey to any powerful nation

A CHURCH WHICH LETS ITS LIGHT SHINE
Oxford Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia recently has installed this electric sign, twenty-four feet in height and two and one-half feet square, to emphasize its welcome. Below the sign itself is an electric bulletin board, ten feet wide, for the display of special invitations coveting their rich soil and potential commercial advantages."

The investigators found that the Christian Filipinos generally desired independence, but under the protection of the United States, while the non-Christians and the Americans desired a continuation of American rule; but they did not consider the government reasonably free from those underlying causes, such as lack of confidence in the administration of justice, which result in the destruction of government. The people, they thought, were not organized economically nor from the standpoint of national defense to maintain an independent government. Another criticism was that the efficiency of the public services had fallen off, due to the too rapid transfer of authority to untrained officials, and to the injection of politics. The commission, however, attributed these failures to lack of experience, found the young generation full of promise, commended the decorum of the legislative chambers, and in general was optimistic regarding the capabilities of the Filipinos.

An increase in the powers of the governor-general and the nullification of insular legislation diminishing his authority also were urged, in order to avert a situation which would leave the United States in a position of responsibility without authority.

Lambeth Proposals Rejected

IN THE first official answer to the much-discussed Lambeth proposals, the Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, closing a four-day session at Syracuse, has decided against acceptance of the plan put forth by the Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal Church of America for the reunion of the churches of Christendom.

The Lambeth proposals, which were promulgated by a conference of Anglican bishops from all over the world in August, 1920, provided in essence for a reunion of the churches on the basis that priests of the Roman and Greek Catholic Churches would be accepted as priests of the Anglican Church if their own communions would reciprocate, while it was asked of the Protestant Churches that they should allow their ministers to submit to reordination by Anglican or Episcopal bishops.

The Methodist bishops declared their Church cannot accept a program which would appear to invalidate their own ministry, which has been so visibly blessed of God. They took cognizance of the wording of the Lambeth proposals that reordination was to be considered merely as a form and not as impugning Protestant orders, but felt they could not agree to a theory which did not require reordination of Roman and Greek priests.

The bishops conveyed their appreciation of the offer of the Lambeth conference, expressed belief in the spirit of fellowship and the spiritual reunion of Christendom, and agreed as to the necessity for co-operation. Their reply was extremely cordial in tone, calling attention to the similarity in faith and practice between the Methodist and Anglican churches, yet was a firm rejection of union on any such conditions. That other Protestant Churches will return similar replies is scarcely to be doubted.

New Railroad Rules Issued

THE United States Railroad Labor Board has handed down a decision promulgating 148 new working rules to govern the employment of the six federated railroad shop crafts which is expected to mean an annual payroll saving of $50,000,000 to the carriers. The new rules affect 400,000 workers and in general are more elastic than the provisions of the national agreement which they replace, widening the classification of the work to be performed by the various crafts so as to make possible increased efficiency and economy. One of the great complaints of the railway executives has been that because of unreasonable classifications it often was necessary to detail several men to a job which could easily have been completed by one man.

An important phase of the decision is that it recognizes the "open shop" as applied to the railways by providing for representation for non-union workers, but it was explained that the effect would be more theoretical than practical, since the large majority of the employees is unionized and the principle of col-

Continued on page 930

The Peace Christ Gives

A Sermon by REV. EDGAR DE WITT JONES. D.D.*

TEXT—John 16:33. "These things have I spoken unto you, that in Me ye might have peace. In the world ye have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

WAS there ever a stranger peace conference than that one of the upper room in Jerusalem nineteen centuries ago? How far removed and how different that assembly from those famous peace conferences where the victors in battle have dictated terms to the conquered foe! Such councils have usually met in palatial rooms, flanked by the imposing spectacle of earthly power and glory. Pomp and pageantry have always been in evidence when nations have assumed the rôle of peace-making. How difficult it is for peace to emerge from an atmosphere of war! Fuss and feathers smother; sword and saber intimidate; the Kingdom of Peace can not be taken by violence.

Gathered in the room in Jerusalem was a group of plain, simple men, and with them their Teacher, Companion and Friend, met together for the last time ere the great storm broke. The shadows were long and deep in that room, and they fell darkly across the little company who, for nearly three years, had been partakers of a great privilege. These men were anxious now, and nervous. They were filled with apprehension of impending peril. The signs and tokens were ominous; a tragedy seemed confronting them; but just when and how and where, they knew not. Yet, there was One in that room upon whom no shadow fell. He was calm, clear-eyed, composed and serene. He sat there talking with His friends simply, tenderly, intimately. Surely no man ever spoke as Jesus spoke that night in the upper room. Such a conversation there never was before or since, and toward its close Jesus said: "These things have I spoken unto you that in Me you might have Peace."

What things? Why, the great utterances that had preceded this statement. There are many of them and they distinguish His conversation that last night as stars of the first magnitude distinguish the heavens on a January night. Listen to the music of these words:

"Let not your heart be troubled; believe in God, believe also in Me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you."

"Ye are my friends, if you do the things I command you."

"If ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you, ask whatever you will, and it shall be done unto you."

"This is my commandment, that you love one another, even as I have loved you."

"Peace I leave with you; My peace I give you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you."

JESUS' phrase, "My peace," is distinctly interesting and thought-inciting. What is the peace which He intimates is unlike the peace the world gives? I daresay most of us are mistaken as to the nature of Jesus' peace. When we think of His peaceful life, it is to dream that His days and years were such as the poet Wordsworth spent in the lovely Lake region of England, quietly, serenely? If we have so thought, we are in error. Nothing could be farther from the truth. For at least three years, the years of His public ministry, Jesus lived amidst untoward conditions and in almost constant controversy and opposition. He was subject to numerous disturbing and disagreeable experiences. His own family were unsympathetic with His mission. His kinsmen made His work more difficult and were critical of much that He said and did. He was never free from the inconveniences of poverty. After His public ministry began, He seems never to have known the comforts of a home He might call His own and to which He might retire for rest and reflection. His oft-quoted words—"the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man has not where to lay His head"—are not poetry nor rhetorical figure but soberest truth. The leading churchmen of His day, who should have been His friends and supporters, were His bitterest enemies. They regarded Him as a heretic, an impostor, a dangerous fellow-countryman. His was the heart-breaking experience to have the good He did attributed to the power of evil. His chosen disciples gave Him a great deal of trouble, often disappointed Him, sometimes embarrassed Him, and made His rugged way more rugged still.

Yet, despite the annoyances, the turmoil, and the strife in which Jesus lived, "the peace that passeth all understanding" reigned in His heart. However turbulent His surroundings, inwardly He was at repose. It was this inner peace that made Him conqueror over outward unrest. He lived in harmony with the Father's will. Thus He moved amidst the distractions, the disappointments, the conflicts and controversies of His day, calm, serene, self-possessed, at peace with God. The peace of Jesus, therefore, was an inward experience, not an outward environment, certainly not freedom from the burdens of life. The way He took was often painful, but His walk was one whose steps were in perfect alignment with the will of the Heavenly Father; hence perfect peace flooded His soul and set his life to Heavenly music.

THE world in general regards peace as an end, rather than a means. It conceives peace to be the cessation of war, stoppage of conflict, restoration of law and order. It stakes everything on outward calm. This is desirable, to be sure, but the bitter truth is that real peace is not attainable by mere outward adjustment. Moreover, peace, enduring peace, is not simply the ending of one order that has been weighed in the balance and found wanting; it is the beginning of a new and better order in which justice, righteousness and brotherhood must prevail. Alas! it is only too true that we are all to a greater or lesser degree afflicted with the worldly idea of peace. We stress outward things, and look for the coming of the King-men everywhere, and await us despite wealth, genius and even godly living. These are inescapable; but they are conquerable. Jesus overcame them, and the same power that enabled Him to overcome, He assures us, will enable us also to overcome. It is the inner peace that counts. Given the inner peace and the ideals and teachings of Jesus, and the result is a peace such as the world can not give, because it does not possess it.

WHY is it that society is slow to accept Christ's peace? Why is it that individuals are prone to turn elsewhere for power, only to meet disappointment? Is it because we do not understand the nature of His peace? Possibly; but a better explanation is that we are not willing to receive His peace on the simple terms He offers it. The peace of God is not given without conditions, even though it be freely given and given to all men. "These things have I spoken that in Me you might have peace." Ah, yes, the things that were spoken during that conversation at the table—we must not forget them. They are all-important; they are fundamental. Summarized, these things are as follows: "Abide in Me," "Let My words abide in you," "Love one another even as I have loved you," "Keep My Commandments," "Bear much fruit," "Bear witness," "Ask and ye shall receive," "I have given you an example that you should do as I have done to you," "Be of good cheer." The peace of Jesus Christ is an inward rest; but it is more, it is a way of life in which love, justice, mercy, forgiveness, find radiant demonstration!

"When He called upon men to follow Him, to share His baptism and drink his cup," says W. E. Orchard, "He was not mocking them with impossible ideals. He was asking them to be as He was, to live for the same ends, to undertake the same task. Jesus invited men to His own ethical and spiritual level. The blunting of this call by the declaration that Jesus can never be followed by mortal men is responsible for the low state of Christian discipleship."

Candor compels the admission that the world's idea of peace is still influential in the churches. Here, too, the emphasis is largely on outward conformity, the dependence on ecclesiastical and doctrinal regularity. These have been only too often the weapons of Christendom, to enforce uniformity and promote appearance of solidarity. The various denominations, after the fashion of nations, have their "war parties," their "jingoisms" and their "dollar diplomacy." These powerful elements have been intent on preserving traditional ideas and time-worn methods, by recourse to sectarian armament and threat of ex-communication or brand of heresy and stigma of unorthodoxy. Thus has the cause of Jesus' peace been betrayed oftentimes in the house of the Master. Sectarian disarmament must take place among the Christian denominations before the Church can ever have an influential voice and great prestige in the Peace Councils of the world.

The world is partial, prejudiced and class-conscious in its gift of peace. It exalts some by pulling down others. It enriches a few by impoverishing many. Jesus gives His peace to all who will accept Him. He draws no circles, builds no walls. His gracious invitation to peace, power and plenty is inclusive and all-encompassing.

JESUS' gift of peace is Himself. He had nothing to give the world save Himself, and greater gift than self no one can give. The world balks at giving self; it bestows favors, offices, emoluments. Jesus gave Himself in His death on the Cross. Dying there amid darkness and degradation, He made peace, individual peace, possible for the least and lowliest of earth. There are many theories of the Atonement and followers of Christ may never be fully agreed; but the glorious fact of the Atonement itself is not disputable nor under debate or question. Says St. Paul—"He is our peace!" By His death on that central Cross, Jesus led the way for enduring peace, not only between God and man, but between man and man. The peace councils of the world have not yet learned the way of the Cross. Their way is still the way of the sword.

Jesus' gift of Himself is also a gift of life, the life of His free and victorious Spirit through which He abides in every heart that accords Him room. Whoso possesses the peace of Christ will never know the necessity for anything better or more satisfying. His is the peace that passeth all understanding.

O hosts who know only the world's peace! Go get ye to the upper room and there learn the peace that is pure, just and holy—the peace that Christ gives to all, the peace for which a war-scourged world waits; for without His peace, all plans and programs of disarmament will be but as some fair dream which vanishes with the morning and can not be recalled.

Our Sunday Service at Home

The Christian Herald Sermon is now read in many Homes as a Sunday Evening Service, a simple form of conducting which is outlined below. Neighbors should be cordially invited

Order of Service

Opening Hymn—"Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun," or "My Faith Looks up to Thee."

Invocation—"The Lord's Prayer"—all join.

Scripture Reading—Psalm 39, Verses 1 to 7 inclusive. "The Brevity of Life."

Dr. Jowett's Sunday Meditation: (See page 925, first column.)

Sermon—"THE PEACE CHRIST GIVES"—To be read aloud by the head of the household or his substitute.

Requests for Prayer—these may be offered by any of those present who feel led to do so. The requests may be forwarded to Pastor Sheldon, in New York, for submission to the Prayer League.

Closing Hymn—"Come, Thou Almighty King," or "Now the Day Is Over."

Benediction—by Pastor Charles M. Sheldon to be read aloud.

Refresh our souls by the service we have held here. O our Father, may Thy Benediction crown the meeting with grace, mercy and peace, for ourselves and all we love, both now and evermore. We ask it in Jesus' name. AMEN.

dom through exterior processes. The world as yet has failed to make a lasting peace. Time and time again, great peace councils have, by the very terms of peace the victor sought to impose, sown the seeds of future wars.

"Great Captains with their guns and drums,
Disturb our judgment for the hour.
But at last silence comes—"

Yes, silence comes, and just about the time when sober reflection and careful judgment are replacing the fever and excitement of war, great captains disturb our judgment again—disturb it with the roar of cannon and the loosing of the dogs of war upon a helpless society. The world professes to love peace, brotherhood and justice; but conquerors and victors are quick to make sure that the balance of power is on their side, and that armies and navies big enough to keep the peace are in training and ready for action.

Few of us are free from the opinion that outside favorable conditions are able to produce of themselves inward repose. We imagine, for instance, that the possession of sufficient wealth to protect us from the annoyances and anxieties attendant on meager incomes and heavy outlays would produce a peace, where now there is only distraction and anxiety. That it might help accomplish this is freely granted; that society as a whole ought to be protected from the fear of poverty, as well as the handicap of it. Yet, even so, the most generous provisions, the most ample safeguarding of this kind, can not of itself produce inward calm. There are many living amid physical conditions that are favorable to rest and recreation who are inwardly in a constant state of turmoil and strife. Tribulations of one kind or another await the sons of *Minister, Central Christian Church, Detroit, Mich.

The Daily Meditation

By Revs. J. H. Jowett, D.D., J. A. McAfee, D.D., E. W. Caswell, D. J. Burrell, D.D., and R. Braunstein

The Shortest Road Known to Man

SUNDAY. John 4 : 21. "Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem. . . . God is Spirit." This conversation took place at Jacob's well. And Jacob was not forgotten. "Our father Jacob gave us the well." But I wonder if they recalled something more intimate in the life of Jacob than this gift of a public well. I wonder if they remembered his mystic experience at Bethel. The wandering fugitive awakes from a troubled sleep in which strange things had been happening. "Lo! God is in this place, and I knew it not." He discovered that God's world was bigger than he had suspected, and that the overshadowing wings were brooding over the stone-heaps at Bethel as surely as over his father's house.

And yet, in spite of Jacob's discovery, and all it meant, and in spite of the honor which his descendants paid to their father Jacob, this woman at Jacob's well was still imprisoned in the limiting sense of halloved locality, instead of living and moving in the bracing freedom of a consecrated universe. "Our fathers worshipped in this mountain; and ye say that in Jerusalem men ought to worship." And our Lord became her teacher. He gently removed the imprisoning veils. God is not merely a Samaritan God, limiting the rains of His grace to Samaria; nor is He merely a Jerusalem God, hiding His favors further south. God is Spirit, and His home is not here, or there, but everywhere. If the woman had gone to Bethel she would have found that the mystic ladder was still there. And the ladder is still at Bethel, and it is also in Wall Street and the Strand. God is Spirit, and the world is His home.

How far, then, is it to God? How long is the road? Is there some far away Mecca to which pilgrims must turn their feet? Or is there a priestly altar at the other end of the town? Or is there a long, bleak, heavy road called Legality? Nay, all these are long roads, and weary souls would faint before they got to the end of the way. The real road to God is shorter than an arm-stretch; nay, shorter than a hand's-breadth. This "way" has this strange characteristic; it is entirely without distance. You no sooner begin to walk it than you are there. You turn to the way and you find yourself at the goal. You have come to God; you have arrived. This is surely what St. Augustine means in his wonderful words—"Do not conceive of long journeyings. When thou believest then thou comest; for to Him Who is everywhere, men come by loving, not by traveling."

And therefore if God is the great Father-Spirit there is no need of any struggling to find Him. We need not set out on burdensome pilgrimages. There is no necessity that we should call as to some one afar off. There are no "heavenly steepes" to climb to bring the Lord Christ down. We need not turn to height or depth. "A present help is He."

What serenity, then, ought to characterize the true believer's life! Indeed, this should be the Christian's royal distinction in the world. There ought to be a most outstanding register in our lives that we have got somewhere, and that Somewhere is God. As far as this fundamental thing in life is concerned we have arrived. Our Life is at rest, and therefore ready for progress. J. H. J.

The Church as a Sanctuary

MONDAY. Ex. 25 : 8. "Let them make me a sanctuary, that I may dwell therein." The first church building was a tent or tabernacle, where the Divine Spirit was worshipped and communed with by the congregation. David said, "Shall I live in a house of cedar and God dwell in tents?" He therefore gathered wealth, that his son Solomon might build the temple at Jerusalem.

Is not the church the edifice where the spirit of God especially meets with His people in worship, prayer, praise and song? It is true that in our Lord's conversation with the woman at the well, he declared that it was not necessary to go to Jerusalem to worship; that God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. Jesus, having failed to secure a hearing in the temple or the synagogue, gathered His audiences by the seaside or in the mountains. "Where two or three are gathered together, there am I in the midst," said Jesus. Every place is sacred where the soul meets the Saviour.

But we must not forget the assembling of ourselves together in the church, which is the recognized place of worship for the whole community. The building itself is ever pointing upward towards the home of the Infinite. It is like a city set upon a hill, that can not be hid. Christ is called the Head of the Church, "who holdeth the seven stars in His right hand and walketh in the midst of the seven candlesticks, which are the churches of the living God." Solomon's words were true when he said, "Behold the heaven of heavens can not contain Thee; how much less this house I have builded."

The church building is where the Christian meditates and communes, prays and sings, as he listens to the words of life from the preacher. Here the sinner finds the Saviour; here the great realities of life, death and eternity are presented. Here the still, small voice of God is heard, giving comfort in sorrow, hope in despair, peace in turmoil and restoration to the fallen. No wonder the Psalmist cried out: "I would dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life!" "I would walk about Zion and go round about her; tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generations following."

We should cherish the church where we first learned to lip "Our Father, Who art in heaven"; where we first began to taste and see that our Lord is gracious; where we have partaken of the ordinances of baptism and the Holy Supper; at whose altars we have stood in wedded union, founding the home which is the source of the church and the nation. The church building is a sermon in stone, a silent preacher of the Gospel of Christ to every passer-by. E. W. C.

Loyalty to the Church

TUESDAY. Acts 4 : 14. "And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing." The reader is familiar with the dramatic details of the Bible story of the man who was healed at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple. As the preachers stood before their accusers, they practically stood alone as far as human assistance was concerned; with the exception of the man who had been restored to health and strength we read, "And the man who was healed stood with them." There were many things he might have done had the age been different and he in other circumstances outside of his poverty and obscurity. But he lived in his own day and stood in his own environment. There was only one thing he could do and that he did nobly. He stood before the judges of Peter and John, not saying a word; nevertheless the fact that he had been lame for forty years and now was thoroughly whole had its own eloquence and potency. So, "beholding the man . . . they could say nothing."

In the last analysis, the Church is judged, not by what it says or promises, but by what it does and accomplishes. The great argument for the Church is emancipated womanhood, conserved childhood, nobler manhood. It is the elimination of slavery and the liquor traffic, the introduction of a new and better social order and an educated conscience in the realm of righteous living and moral conduct. Stand by the side of your pastor and the leaders of your Church. Give them the morale of your presence, whether you are able to say or do little or much. Lend yourself out to their support. Give them the boon of your moral backing. Every man or woman counts. Here is a fine resolve: "I can't do much, but I can do something. What I can do, I ought to do. What I ought to do, with God's help, I will do!" R. B.

Invisible Wealth

WEDNESDAY. Luke 22 : 15. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Among the pictures prompted by Herbert Kaufman, there is one called "Content." A Chinese beggar is shown coming to the king. With the beggar are his two small sons. He asks for money. This the king promises to give and with it all that heart could desire. There was only one condition. The beggar must give in return one-half of his visible wealth. This he readily agrees to do, for he feels sure that he has no wealth. The king then mentions the payment in detail, and the first item is one of the lads. In the end, of course, the beggar goes away from the court with an arm around each boy, content with that which he has.

Though we may not possess many things, yet if we but figure up the visible wealth vouchsafed to us, we shall be surprised and thankful. Even more surprised and thankful we may be if we stop to consider our invisible wealth. The finest of all invisible riches is the capacity to know and love God. Though we may not be able to lay up stores in this world, we can all be "rich toward God." How much better, how much finer, how much more satisfactory, that is! For this wealth safety deposit boxes are not necessary. This thieves can not break through and steal. This wealth no man can take away from us. J. A. M.

Our Divine Companion and Friend

THURSDAY. Rev. 3 : 20. "I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with me." I have in my study a remarkable book called "The Ten Theophanies," by an author whose name is not unfamiliar in the annals of lighter literature. As his life, wearing to its close he felt a consuming desire to present his view of the unveiling of God. The book, which was written with a hand growing feebler and feebler, was finished at length in full view of heaven. Here are its concluding words:

"Try to bring home to yourself this Friend of mine, who is God yet man, and man yet God. He is ever lovingly near, in the unlimited prime and plenitude and power of his everlasting grace. The man who is writing these lines can not see them for happy tears. He trembles because unable to contain, while yet unable to express, the thought Immanuel, God with us! And now, awaiting the appearing of our Lord, let me sound His praise; the blessed and only potentate, King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, to Him be honor and glory everlasting!"

His labor of love was finished; the pen dropped from his trembling fingers; a new theophany had burst upon the writer's soul. He was in the midst of the beatific vision, at home with God! D. J. B.

On Holy Ground

FRIDAY. Ex. 3 : 5. "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." Moses was standing, not in the temple or the sanctuary. It was not on ground made sacred by ceremony or blood of bulls and goats. His feet were not on the ground made precious by tombs or dust of broken altars. He was standing in the field where he watched over the flock. It was the ground over which his daily toil carried him that was holy ground.

God who "ever lives and loves" is continually present with us, glorifying all of life; yet we see and feel Him not. By the rush of the day and the crush of the hour, He is crowded out from our minds and the consciousness of His presence, which should be our strength, becomes weak and is lost.

In his book, "Marks of a World Christian," Professor Fleming asks this question: "What does the world need more than a contagious conviction of the character of God?" Nothing can so put courage into sad hearts, hope into desolate lives, brightness into down-cast eyes, zeal into weary minds, faith into faltering spirits, heat into love grown cold, and meaning into all of life, as can the conviction of the character of God—that character revealed in Christ. It is that faith, which is the conviction in things not seen, that inspires and vivifies life.

Like God's servant of old, if we but turn aside we shall hear God speaking unto us, and we shall know that the ground upon which we walk as we go about our work of the day is holy ground. As Mrs. Browning tells us, it is only our blindness that hides Him.

"Earth's crammed with heaven,
And every common bush afire with God;
But only he who sees takes off his shoes."

J. A. M.

The Day of Inspiration

SATURDAY. Job 32 : 8. "But there is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." Job speaks of inspiration and so do many others of the glorious past and we are agreed. The question arises whether we can speak of inspiration in the twentieth century and whether, without controversy, humanity is inspired in this age as formerly. Certainly the man or woman of faith can be eloquent in his or her declaration that the wires of inspiration are not grounded, and that connection with the throne of God has not been discontinued. The pulse of the world is beating in tune with the melody of God's grace.

Of course there are exceptions, but the proposition, in the main, stands true. We are working toward the goal of world-wide prohibition. Inspired men and women are striving to bring that blessed state into being. We are nearing the goal of reduction of armament everywhere. Inspired men and women are dedicating their lives for that purpose. The word "brotherhood" is looming larger and larger upon the horizon. Charles Edward Bushnell, writing on the theme, "Inspiration to Date," says among other things that it takes as much inspiration to live up to the Ten Commandments as it did for Moses to interpret the mind of God in their production. And it takes as much inspiration to live up to the innumerable boons of the past, by way of burning ideas and flaming ideals, as it did for those who gave them birth and impetus.

Therefore, the evidence points to the fact that we are inspired to live up to our heritage of the Divine revelation, in view of the splendid results already realized. Inspiration shall never cease so long as God lives. God still breathes upon the face of the earth. "The voice of the Almighty God when He speaketh," finds the response everywhere. "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." R. B.

Mellin's Food Babies

Robert H. Stacy—New York, N.Y.

Bob Thomas—Shelbyville, Mich.

Send today for our instructive book,

"The Care and Feeding of Infants" also a Free Trial Bottle of Mellin's Food

Mellin's Food Company, Boston, Mass.

Christmas First-Times

THEY are always so interesting, those first-times of things way back in "Once-upon-a-time," and humanity always has and always will be interested in their origin.

At this season of the year our thoughts turn to the long-ago Christmas and its customs.

We are told the first traces of the festival are found around the time of Emperor Commodus, 180-192 A.D., and that in the reign of Diocletian a churchful of Christians gathered to celebrate Christmas was burned by order of the Emperor.

The beautiful Christmas carols were manger-songs at first, telling the story of the Christ Child's birth. Many of the later ones have the characteristics of folk-songs and preserve curious legends. It was in the eighteenth century that Charles Wesley wrote the well-known "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing," then known as: "Hark, How the Welkin Rings." Christmas carols still exist in France, Germany and Italy, and the famous "Boar's Head" carol, found in a collection of carols printed in 1621, is still sung annually at Oxford College.

The first Christmas card originated in London some seventy years ago, but was a long time in winning popular favor. The card bore the simple greeting, "Merry Christmas," written in ink. Later, embossed greeting cards with interesting pictures appeared, many of these bearing a likeness of Robin Red Breast, as in England he is called "The Saviour's Bird" because of the legend of his red breast.

Candles, too, have their Christmas significance. The adherents of the Greek Church call Christmas the "Feast of Lights." The custom of burning candles at Christmas-time is derived from the Roman Saturnalia, when they were not only used for illumination but were also exchanged as gifts in token of good-will.

The burning of candles was also one of the incidents of the Feast of Dedication, which was observed about the same time of the year as the Saturnalia and the Yule, from the sixteenth to the eighteenth of December. Somehow it seems easy to imagine that many a bright glowing candle twinkled into the darkness of that first Christmas night in Palestine, all unintentionally proclaiming that He, the Great Light, had at last come into the world.

A Glimpse into the Origin of Some of Our Holiday Customs is this: The tree itself represents the Christ, who was the beginning of a new life in a world dark with heathenism; the lighted tree symbolizing the Light of the World—the Tree of Life—while the silver and gold star reminds us of the One which led the wise men to Him; the cross His sacrifice; the heart His love; and the anchor our hope.

By A. PRINTZLAU BOWEN

The first Christmas box was bestowed so long ago we fail to find the origin of that custom, but long, long ago the Catholic priests held masses for almost everything, and if a ship went to the West Indies they had a box on board under the protection of some patron saint. This box held money and other valuables put in by the sailors in order to secure the prayers of the Church. At Christmas these boxes were opened. In England the day after Christmas is known as "Boxing Day" and from a custom of the well-disposed to assist the deserving, it degenerated into a nuisance, as many began to consider it a right that those who were more favorably situated than they should contribute cash or some other present to their Christmas box, regardless of inclination.

We may think that our grandmothers, or at the most, our great-grandmothers, made the first mince pie, but such is not the case. The early Christians made and ate mince pie and plum pudding at Christmas. The contents, which of course every one knows are very rich and fragrant, symbolize the rich gifts brought by the wise men to the Christ Child, and the aroma the fragrant frankincense.

THE first Santa Claus undoubtedly was St. Nicholas, who was the Bishop of Myra about the year 300. It is he who is credited with first climbing to the chimney top and dropping a gift. He had expected the gift, a coin, would fall to the hearth and eventually be found by the friend he wished to have it, but it happened that this friend's daughter had hung up a pair of stockings there to dry and the coin fell into one of these. The legend goes on to say that the coin was found and used as a dowry for this friend's eldest daughter and that St. Nicholas never failed to drop a coin into the stockings that were hung up thereafter, whenever a daughter of the house was about to marry. The date of the Bishop's death, December 6, is observed in many countries, and doubtless the closeness of the two celebrations has confounded St. Nicholas's Day with Christmas.

The first kiss given beneath the mistletoe was not a matter of jest, but was a sincere pledge of friendship. This custom, too, has come from the Scandinavians. In paying honor to their god Thor, they built great fires called Yule fires. The higher the flames towered the more pleased was Thor supposed to be. It was soon discovered that trees upon which mistletoe had hung burned the brightest, and they took this for a symbol that Thor considered those trees the best for his people to burn in his honor. The quantities of mistletoe clinging to these trees sapped their vitality and they consequently were drier and burned better than those filled with sap.

And so, as time progresses, Christmas customs will doubtless change somewhat, although it is safe to say they will always retain sufficient of their first-time significance to keep inquiring minds wondering as to their origin.

Christians of the East and of the West may still observe Christmas on different dates, and follow more or less pagan customs in its celebration, but the true spirit of the day will continue to permeate it all; and of whatsoever race or creed he may be, the joy-giver will still find the fullest measure of happiness—for Joy to the world became a living reality that first Christmas night, through God's own joy in giving His Best Gift to us.

PREMIUM OFFERS

With the
CHRISTIAN HERALD
For 1921-1922

THE FAMOUS CHRISTIAN HERALD RED LETTER BIBLE

The Text is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and very durable, weighs only 20 ounces. It is Bound in American Bible Leather, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, with silk ribbon marker.

PRINTED ON AMERICAN BIBLE PAPER

WHAT IS A RED LETTER BIBLE?

1. In the Old Testament the passages quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are PRINTED IN RED. 2. In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of the Saviour are PRINTED IN RED. 3. A Red Star (*) immediately following a verse in the Old Testament indicates that the verse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah.

The Christian Herald Red Letter Bible contains 919 pages for the Old Testament, 284 pages for the New Testament, 32 pages Bible Readers' aids and helps, 16 maps in colors, 1251 total pages.

We send this Superb Bible, together with The Christian Herald $5.00 for one whole year both for.....
This Bible is sold separately, postpaid,
for..... $3.50

PROPHECY EXPLAINED

By DR. GEO. H. PATCH

This is a wonderful book on Prophecy. It will be welcomed by Christian men and women everywhere. It brings solace and consolation and reassurance.

Dr. Patch has shed a flood of light on prophecy, and especially on Revelation. His work cannot fail to be commended by Bible students. All who are interested in the interpretation of Bible prophecy should read and study this remarkable work.

1 VOL. 12 MO. 480 PAGES. FINE CLOTH BINDING.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for... $3.00

We send the book separately, postpaid,
for..... $1.50

PRECIOUS BIBLE PROMISES

By DR. CLARKE, D.D.

Those who have little leisure for reading will find it invaluable in keeping this book always near them; and with the glance of an eye they may take in the riches of grace and glory, and derive many a sweet refreshment, amidst their labors and travels. It is of excellent use to lie on the table and now and then to take a sip of the river of life which runs through it in a thousand little rills of peace and joy.—Dr. Watts.

1 VOL. 16 MO. CLOTH BINDING. 320 PAGES.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for... $2.25

We send the book separately in cloth binding, postpaid, for..... 60c

THE WONDER BOOK OF WHY & WHAT?

The most wonderful Wonder Book of all. It deals with many of the questions children are constantly asking on all sorts of subjects. There are hundreds of illustrations of entrancing interest, and the book is without a single dull page. The harassed parent will hail this book with as much delight as the youngsters.

Crown 4to. Picture Boards. 12 Plates in Color.
250 Pages. Over 300 Beautiful Illustrations.
Highly Educational.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for... $3.50

We send the book separately, postpaid,
for..... $2.00

CHILDREN'S STORIES FROM THE BIBLE

A book that has long been wanted. It is often forgotten that the Bible is the greatest story-book in the world, and that it is especially rich in stories about little folk or that have a special interest for children. The old, old stories are here charmingly retold in simple language by Blanche Winder. The illustrations are delightfully fresh and unconventional.

With 48 Plates in Color by HARRY G. THEAKER.
Large Crown 8vo. Cloth. 344 pages. Handsome Binding Design, with Pictorial Wrapper and Endpapers.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for... $3.50

We send the book separately, postpaid,
for..... $2.00

The above list offers a fine selection for gift purposes for both old and young. Please send your orders early to avoid delay in delivery.

Many thousands of present CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have approved of these books and we feel confident that any of the offers will prove satisfactory to all who make a selection from them.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House New York

Always Plenty of Stretch

—no rubber to rot

Guaranteed One Year—Price 75¢

Ask your dealer for

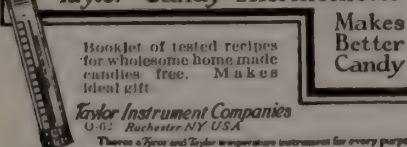

Nu-Way or Excello

Guaranteed Suspensers, Garters and Hose Supporters

Accept no substitutes—Look for name on buckles.

Nu-Way Stretch Suspender Co., Mfrs., Adrian, Mich.

Taylor Candy Thermometer

Makes Better
Candy

Booklet of tested recipes for wholesome home made candies free. Makes ideal gift

Taylor Instrument Companies

U.S. Rochester, N.Y. USA

There is a Taylor and Taylor temperature instrument for every purpose

Shave, Bathe and Shampoo with one Soap.—Cuticura

Cuticura Soap is the favorite for safety razor shaving.

Dialogs, Monologs, Musical Comedies and Reviews, Minstrel Opening Choruses, Ducky Plays, Catalog Frogs,
T. S. DERRISON & CO., 408 So. Wabash, Dept. 71 CHICAGO

PLAYS

Vaudeville Acts
How to Stage a Play
Make-up Gowns

The Visit of the Wise Men

International Sunday School Lesson for December 25

Matt. 2: 1-12

By REV. SAMUEL D. PRICE, D.D.

MERRY CHRISTMAS" is the greeting which will be spoken in every part of the world today. It will have the richer meaning when given and received by those who personally know Him whose birthday is being observed. In no part of the world will there be greater cheer than in the countries recently non-Christian, where the joy and power of Christ's life have so changed conditions that earthly homes have become a veritable heaven on earth.

Many have toiled hard for weeks preparing for Christmas, either in commercial circles or by performing love-deeds in the home. These days of labor have had their own measure of joy when the worker has wrought for Christ's sake. Now comes the day which is peculiarly His, and this year it is doubly so since the accepted anniversary of the manifestation of the Incarnation, December 25, falls on a Sunday, the constant anniversary of the resurrection of the body of our Lord from the grave. Surely this will be a most joyous Christmas, as untold millions celebrate the birthday of Jesus and join in gladsome worship.

The review of the life of Paul, following our studies for the past six months, is also in order since this apostle is a rich fruitage of obedience in accordance with the example of Jesus Christ and His command, "Go ye into all the world." Jesus came to save men and to show them how to serve mankind. The Review Sunday can be used to great advantage by fastening facts, which have been recently studied, in the memory, and also by making, as thoroughly as possible, a character study of Paul. Written examinations are always to be regarded as opportunities rather than tasks. Further, it clarifies matters greatly when one's thoughts are reduced to writing. It is urged that every reader write an article on some such subject as "The Life and Works of Paul the Apostle to the Gentiles." Prepare at least 1,200 words, which is about the number given each week in these two columns of our lesson study. These articles can be submitted to the teacher, superintendent, or pastor and they would be read with pleasurable interest.

THE birth of Jesus is always a fascinating study: there are new angles of vision, new impressions and a greater tenderness of feeling toward child-life. The specific subject this year, "The Visit of the Wise Men," presents just one of the related incidents. In these lesson-studies the reader is constantly urged to become familiar with the whole setting. You will be helped now in reading in Matthew, Luke and John. The chronology of the events is set forth in any Harmony of the Gospels. Such a book will be valuable in studying the lessons for six months beginning with next October, and should be found in every Bible student's library.

While the story of the Wise Men is usually told as a part of the Christmas story, it is generally held by Bible students that these men did not reach Bethlehem until more than 40 days after the Babe had been placed in the manger-cradle. According to Jewish law, Mary took the child Jesus when she went to the Temple in Jerusalem to offer the sacrifice required at the time of purification subsequent to childbirth, and also to present the offering demanded when the first-born son was redeemed (Luke 2:22-24, Lev. 12). The law demanded five shekels for the redemptive money and a lamb for the purification, and this every Jewish mother was eager to provide, if at all possible. If the legal requirement could not be met, owing to financial difficulties, there was a gracious provision whereby "a pair of turtle doves or two young pigeons" would be accepted. In Luke we read that Mary offered the substitute. Had the Wise Men already presented their gifts, sufficient of these would have been sold in order that the primary law might be met and recourse to the substitute avoided.

Fascinating stories have been interwoven with the Bible facts concerning these Wise Men. Van Dyke has given us the "The First Christmas Tree," "The Spirit of Christmas" and "The Other Wise Man." Many re-read Dickens's "Christmas Carol" each year, and you will also enjoy these stories of Van Dyke. Then there are those brilliant fourteen chapters, Book First, in Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur, a Tale of the Christ." Caspar, Melchior and Balthasar are depicted as coming from countries far separated, and journeying together till they come to the place under the Star "where the young child was."

"Following the Star" has been a supreme service, and the blessed reward is always similar to that experienced by the Wise Men—victory in the quest. Where there is failure or difficulty en route, the cause can be often traced to an experience like that which befell the three pilgrims at Jerusalem. They had come, God-guided, to Jerusalem. There they decided to inquire of men rather than to continue the journey as the star would continue to indicate. They experienced delay while they asked their questions in the Holy City. The scribes, in reply to Herod's command, searched the prophetic records and said Bethlehem of Judah. The slaughter of the innocent children is closely related to this very visit of inquiry.

AFTER obtaining word about Bethlehem, the Wise Men renewed their pilgrimage. As they went forth from Jerusalem, wending their way past Olivet, they again beheld their guiding beacon in the heavens, and we read "they rejoiced greatly when they saw the star." That star led them directly to the Christ-child, and when they saw Him, they presented their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh.

Do we yet understand the real meaning of Christmas? It is not in what we receive but rather in what we give, and especially what we give looking for no return to those who might otherwise have no cheer on this blessed day. We are rich in joy and we say "Merry Christmas" because "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish, but have eternal life." "Thou shalt call His name Jesus, for it is He that shall save His people from their sins." (Matthew 1:2).

It is right that He whose birthday is being celebrated should receive your gift. You have provided thoughtfully and bountifully for others. What are you giving today at a real cost and in love to Him, your Saviour and very Best Friend? First He wants YOU. If it is not already a fact, let another incarnation be produced in your heart, as you take Him and can know the meaning of Paul's words, "Christ in you, the hope of glory."

Then the Servant of mankind seeks your help in establishing the Kingdom of Heaven. At no time in the history of the Church has there been so great need for young men and women to enlist in life service for and with Jesus Christ.

The white harvest fields in every country make their constant appeal to you. Respond as Paul did and say, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel." To be a Christian minister is indeed to be an ambassador of the King. It is an unspeakable privilege to carry the angels' message to those who have never heard, saying

"Glory to God in the highest,
And on earth peace among men
In whom He is well pleased."

THE STROHBER DIMINUTIVE

THE SMALLEST
COMPLETE UPRIGHT
PIANO MADE

The piano for you because  of its beautiful tone

The small in size it has a full round tone; responds to the most delicate touch.

Recommended by teachers; students enjoy it.

 an excellent decoration

You do not buy a piano for decoration, but the minute it is placed in your home it must decorate.

This one is a beauty.

 of its small size

The space saver in small rooms.

Here it is compared to a grand. Keys same height from the floor, standard size and shape. Can be furnished as a player.

 produced by an established firm

This is our latest piano. Into it we have put the best materials. Nothing has been eliminated because it is small; care in construction makes it compact.

MUSIC MERCHANTS: If we are not represented in your city write for particulars

SMITH BARNES & STROHBER CO.

1872 CLYBOURN AVENUE, CHICAGO

Please send me complete information and pictures of the new piano, the Strohber Diminutive.

Name _____

P. O. Address _____

say

Aspirin

Then It's Genuine

Unless you see the name "Bayer" on tablets, you are not getting genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians for 21 years and proved safe by millions. Always say "Bayer."

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid.

The Business for You!

Quick success possible anywhere—cities, small towns, villages. Amazing market—crowded streets; surging throngs at fairs, carnivals, parks, etc.; wholesale to grocers, bakeries, druggists, and so on. Possibilities unlimited! Need no experience. Little capital starts you on road to phenomenal earnings.

Write—Get My Help—Begin Now!
Others are making money—lots of it. Letters just received during this year tell of wonderful successes. You can succeed, too. Start to all you need. I'll gladly help you. Furnish everything—complete outfit, materials, secret formula, full directions, wrappers, etc. Send post card for illustrated book of facts. Tells how to start. Explains most successful methods. Gives all information needed. It's free. Write now!

LONG EAKINS COMPANY
1257 High Street Springfield, Ohio

MOTION PICTURE USERS

CHURCHES, Schools, Institutions, and other non-theatrical users, contemplating the purchase of motion picture machines and films, should obtain a booklet of valuable information which is supplied without cost by THE ASSOCIATED MANUFACTURERS OF SAFETY STANDARD FILMS & PROJECTORS
Incorporated
440 Fourth Avenue Suite 1413 New York City

RESINOL

Soothing and Healing
Household Ointment
for Cuts, Burns, Scalds, etc.
Every home needs it

Write for Details on Dairy Farm fully equipped, from which you can realize upwards of $1,000.00 cash monthly from milk alone.
McKINNEY & CO., Binghamton, N. Y.

Christmas in the "Department House"

Continued from page 921
"Don't want to go beddy-by-by," she protested, shaking her curls.
"You gotta, whether you want to or not—pretty pronto, too," said Ben.
Esther dropped down on her knees and brought her face to a level with Toddlekins' own.
"You lie down like a good girl, Toddlekins. In a little time, then, it'll be night. An' guess who comes! Santa Claus!"
Toddlekins smiled at that. "Goin' bwing every one somefin?"
"Sure. All kind of nice things."
"Goin' bwing my lady somefin?"
"I—guess so."
"Less'n you lie down right away, an' sleep a long time, he won't bring your lady one single thing!" threatened Ben.
The lip of Toddlekins drooped at that. But it was potent to work their will. She allowed Esther to lead her away with no more words. Esther threw the window wide, pulled the shade down and tucked Toddlekins away in her little white bed.
"Take a good long sleep," she said, as she kissed her.

BEN'S threat, however, so successful in getting Toddlekins to bed, had anything but a soporific tendency. The awful penalty for wakefulness did but induce it. Toddlekins couldn't go to sleep. She shut her eyes tightly; she covered her head with the bed-clothes.

"Santa Claus fordet my lady if I don't sleep," she cried and became wider awake than ever.

No little four-year-old ever battled more faithfully; no little any-year-old ever failed more ignominiously. Toddlekins surrendered to the inevitable at last.

She knew now that Santa Claus would slight her lady. But at least she should not go entirely presentless. In Toddlekins' brain a daring project was born. She would take her lady over a present her very own self!

She slipped from the bed and felt around in the half darkness till her little tin bank rested in her hand. She searched for ribbon and tissue paper to make one of the wonder packages like her mother had sent away. She could find neither.

Yet a Christmas present must look Christmasy. Toddlekins knew that. Not for nothing had she lived in a Christmasy household. She was obliged to content herself with red berries, at last. The house was overflowing with red berries and wild cherry. Toddlekins bound them artistically on the bank with white string.

The perilous part of her undertaking was yet to come. Even with her mother and two of the others away, detection was almost certain. And yet she would try.

She stepped out cautiously. The house was very still, the doors all closed. Toddlekins breathed more freely. She would have been more at ease still, if she had but known what a powerful ally she had in the all-engrossing tree.

Unobserved she gained the street—the street she never had crossed alone in all her baby life. But she was going to cross it now. Her lady's face looked out at her from the holly-decorated window. Toddlekins waved an encouraging hand to her as she started across the street.

HALF-WAY across, a car flashed around the corner—swerved—stopped. But Toddlekins lay, a little white heap in the dust of the street. She did not hear her lady's cry, did not know that her feet flew to the rescue.
"Give her to me!" she cried. "Her mother isn't home. I saw her go away."
The young man answered gently—much more gently than he usually spoke to Toddlekins' lady.
"I'll carry her up, Maida. You ring up the doctor."

The doctor had come and gone. The glancing blow would do no hurt beyond a probable bruise.
Toddlekins, enconced in her lady's lap, felt that she had conquered the world. Still her lady did not smile. The tears were wet on her cheeks as she rocked back and forth. Her lips quivered now and then. Old, sad memories were knocking at the heart of Toddlekins' lady.

The young man watched them both with moody, unhappy eyes. Looking up, she met them.

"Isn't she dear, Roy?" she cried. "Isn't she inexpressibly dear? When you struck her—"

She paused, shuddering.
"I know. There wasn't a second to spare. I think I—prayed. I know I thought of little Roy. He'd have been about her size."

"About her size," echoed Toddlekins' lady.

IT DID not seem strange to them to mention the name forever put away, never spoken between them. The boy seemed very near to them. Even little dead children may come forth at Christmas time.

"Oh, what a Christmas it might have been for them!" she cried after a moment. "And they seem so happy. Christmas Eve, too."

"Santa Claus is comin' to our house," broke in Toddlekins. "He's comin' to our house, sure pop! He's comin' to-night when we is all asleep. An' he might hitch a auto to his reindeer, Benny says. He's goin' to bwing me a doll—a weally, twuly one as can talk an' say its prayers. An' loads an' loads o' fings. I can hardly wait. He comes way at night. He goes everywhere. Fink," an old memory made Toddlekins pause, wincing, "you fink he'll come to you?"

"I—don't—know."
"O-h-h!" cried Toddlekins, remembering, "I had my icy bank for a present for you. An' it got losted when I fell down."

The lady held her closer. "Darling!" she said.
"But maybe you won't det nothin'," worried Toddlekins. "Benny said you wouldn't, if I didn't go to sleep. An' I couldn't go—"

The baby mouth quivered.
"Why," cheered the lady, "I shouldn't wonder if Santa Claus came here, Benny, or no Benny. We've—kind of forgotten Christmas lately, Toddlekins. But—Christmas never forgets us! We may go back and begin all over again. That is the blessed part of it."

She spoke musingly. The shadow of grief and the growing apart that had followed it lay on her beautiful face like a cloud. But breaking through it was something at which the man took heart and spoke eagerly.

"Maida, would it be possible, dear, the beginning again—trying once more—bearing and forbearing? Loving and trusting—doing our best?"

For a long moment she gazed at him, then held out her hand. And the smile on the face of Toddlekins' lady shone like a glory to the man and to the child.

A LETTER of cheer comes from H. W. H., Dewar, Iowa, in which he says: "My good mother passed on about a year ago, among the evergreen hills of Vermont, almost 97, a direct descendant of the Baynton who came over in the Mayflower, and strong in the Pilgrims' faith in God. She took the Christian Herald for many years and would send us her paper after she read it. At last when her dim eyes could no longer see the printed pages, she arranged for the balance of her subscription to come to us—with the request that we continue taking the paper when she was gone. Revering her memory and considering the Christian Herald indispensable I shall continue to take it."

Mr. Oliver Harden, Newark, N. J., writes: "I like the Herald because it gives several editorial utterances on current events by men who know. I can not tell you what I dislike about it because it meets my needs—as does no other paper."

Mrs. B. L. P., Walworth, N. Y., writes: "I am helped immeasurably by its sermons and daily Scriptures. It takes a high standing on all vital questions of the present time."

Mrs. L. J. C., Adrian, Mich., strongly praises the "Sunday Service" with its "simple Gospel and good old hymns."

Deformities of the Back

30 Days' Trial Free

We will prove its value in your own case. There is no reason why you should not accept our offer. The photographs show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjusted the Philo Burt Appliance is—how different from the old torturous plaster, leather or steel jackets.
Every sufferer with a weakened or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate thoroughly. Price within reach of all.

Send For Our Free Book.
If you will describe the case it will aid us in giving you definite information at once.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
207-12 Odd Fellows Temple
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

PISO'S Safe & Sane For Coughs and Colds Insist on it by name

This syrup is different from all others
Pleasant—gives quick relief Contains no opiates—good for young and old

35¢ per bottle everywhere

THE SCRIPTURE TEXT CALENDAR FOR 1922

COVER DESIGN IN COLORS

A reproduction of the famous painting, "Master, I Perish," is the principal feature of the cover design of the Scripture Text Calendar. By referring to the Scripture Text Calendar you can tell what the Sunday School Lesson will be for any Sunday in 1922.

TWELVE WORKS OF ART IN COLORS

JANUARY—Christ Healing the Sick Child.
FEBRUARY—Returning from Jerusalem.
MARCH—The Story of the Good Samaritan.
APRIL—He Is Risen.
MAY—Christ Teaching Little Children.
JUNE—The Son of a Carpenter.
JULY—Christ Going Through the Wheat Field.
AUGUST—Christ and the Fallen Woman.
SEPTEMBER—Jesus Sitting by the Sea of Galilee.
OCTOBER—The Rainbow Promise.
NOVEMBER—The Story of Jacob's Ladder.
DECEMBER—The Holy Night.

We send this fine Calendar $2.20 and the Christian Herald for one year, both for....

The Calendar sent separately, post-paid, for..... 35¢

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House New York

LAY UP FOR YOURSELVES TREASURES IN HEAVEN

Would you love to have your own Native Trained Missionary? and support him for $1.00 a week? Pray for him by Name? Have his report? Would you love to support one for some loved one? for a memorial? for the Lord Jesus? Write SAMUEL R. BOGGS, President, 473 Greene Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., for free literature.

Girlhood

When your complexion of after years is determined.

That critical period of youth between childhood and young womanhood mars the beauty of many a complexion. The skin eruptions of adolescence may leave permanent blemishes. Cosmetics can but hide these annoying marks—pimples, liver-spots, sallowness. Perfect physical health will prevent their forming. Wise mothers will instruct their daughters in the use of a good aperient to keep the skin fair and the blood clear.

Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets), a vegetable aperient, is a real aid to a beautiful complexion. It acts naturally to improve the general health and prevent headaches and biliousness. It does more than a laxative.

All Druggists sell the dainty 25c. Box of NR Tablets.

Chips off the Old Block

NR JUNIORS—Little NRs
One-third of regular dose. Made of the same ingredients, then candy-coated.

For children and adults. Have you tried them? Send a 2c. stamp for postage on liberal sample in the attractive BLUE and YELLOW box. A. H. LEWIS MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

Country Children Unhealthy

THE average city-bred child is stronger and enjoys better health than his country cousin. Although food is more plentiful as a rule in the country, its children are less well nourished than those in the city, even in the crowded tenement districts. Despite the fact that the country child has an unlimited supply of fresh air he has weaker lungs and suffers far more than the city child from all kinds of throat and lung troubles.

Investigation Reveals Facts Which Demand a Speedy Reform

By F. A. COLLINS

An immense volume of information has been collected regarding children's health conditions, both in the country and in the city, by the Teachers' College of New York, which completely upsets the opinions commonly held on the matter. To make the comparison fair, country children were examined in many localities, while the investigations of city children were made in New York City, including the congested tenement districts where children live more closely packed together than anywhere else in the world.

The actual figures come as a great surprise. It has been found, for instance, that 48 per cent. of country children have defective teeth, while among the children of the city the proportion is 33 per cent. It is generally supposed that the child which breathes the fresh air of the country is freer from throat troubles than a child who lives in a city flat. The percentage of country children suffering from bad tonsils is 28 as compared with but 16 per cent. among city children. In the country 23 per cent. of the children suffer from adenoids while only 12 per cent. of city children have this defect. Five times as many country children have ear troubles as city children. Eye defects again are twice as common in the country as in the city.

The most surprising discovery in these investigations, however, was in the case of feeding. Although the country child lives near the food supply, and is commonly supposed to have an abundance of all kinds of food, it is found that 16 per cent. of country children actually suffer from malnutrition as against only 7 per cent. in the city. The death rate among country children is five times that of city children. The health of the country child is seriously menaced, to begin with, by impure water. The water supply away from cities and towns is often contaminated. The barnyard and the cesspool often are badly placed in regard to the well, spring, or brook which supplies the drinking water. The water drunk by New York children for example is protected against impurities by every device known to modern science.

Another serious menace in the country is bad ventilation. The homes in the country often are closed tightly against the cold, and the inmates must breathe bad air day and night. More attention is paid as a rule to ventilation in cities, even in the tenement districts. There is generally less knowledge of lung and throat diseases in the country than in the city and infection is more likely to be spread.

IT IS obvious that country children, and grown-ups as well, are much more exposed to unfavorable weather conditions than the city dwellers. The school boy or girl walks long distances in extremes of heat and cold. Once in the school-room the children must sit for hours, often with wet feet and clothing. To protect themselves against the exposure the country children wear too much clothing indoors and on going out are more liable to chill. The school-room as a rule is badly ventilated. The health of the children is further menaced by such careless habits as drinking from a common cup or dipper. All these conditions tend to lower the country child's vitality, to make him liable to catch cold and to develop disorders of the throat and lungs.

The quality of country food and its effect on general health as revealed by these investigations is very surprising. It is a mistake to suppose that food is less pure and nourishing in cities. As a matter of fact the country food is found to be less wholesome even when compared with the supply in the tenement districts of New York City. There is less variety of food in the country than in the city, and the diet is much more monotonous. Country food is cooked with less care, and the knowledge of its exact nutritive values and of the importance of balanced food rations is far less on the farm than in the city.

The city child again receives much more medical attention. The care of babies, to begin with, is better understood in cities. The country mother often brings up her child exactly as her great-grandmother did, with no knowledge of the advance of modern medicine.

The problem of the country school is attacked with intelligence and energy today by the Teachers' College of New York. It is not generally realized that this institution furnishes one of every six trained teachers east of the Mississippi River and one in seven of the trained teachers of the entire country. The reform is directed by interesting teachers and school supervisors in the work, and by organizing schools, community leaders and other social workers in the country. These workers are especially trained to go throughout the country and develop methods of education and community feeling. The improved health of country children is one of the first results to be sought through this movement.

Stressing the Church's Invitation

By ELIZABETH WILLIAMS SUDLOW

SUNDAY, November 13, was designated Go-To-Sunday-School-and-Stay-for-Church Sunday by the various schools of Dallas, Texas, and on the preceding Saturday the message went over the wires into the homes of more than 175,000 persons.

A religious census had been taken a little earlier which brought to the Sunday Schools information on practically every person in Dallas. When the census cards were turned in to the various churches each pastor and Sunday School superintendent sent out a multi-graphed letter to each family for whom they had cards, and urged them to attend the Sunday School and to stay for the preaching services in that church Sunday, November 13, with whatever personal touch the pastor and superintendent desired to put into it. Then each name on the card was assigned to departments and classes so that each member of the household was visited before the special day, and given a specific invitation to attend a department and class.

On Saturday the members of a general committee took the telephone book and called every telephone in the city, saying this: "Don't forget to come to Sunday School and stay for preaching tomorrow morning. Tell everybody. Bring everybody."

The superintendent of each Sunday School gave a number of the family cards to members of a special committee to call the telephone and say this: "Don't fail to be present at Sunday School and stay for preaching tomorrow."

By this method five distinct invitations were extended to every family in the city to come to Sunday School and stay for preaching—the general printed invitation, the special letter from pastor and superintendent, the personal call from the teacher or a member of a certain class, the general telephone call, and specific telephone call on Saturday.

Let Me Send You FREE on trial a Pair of Handsome Tortoise Shell Glasses

For many years people have been coming to me from every part of Chicago on account of my wide reputation for supplying glasses that fit. I am now offering the benefit of this wide experience to people everywhere. No matter where you live, I positively guarantee to give you a perfect fit or there will be no charge whatever. I promise to send you a pair of glasses that will enable you to see perfectly and satisfy you in every way, or you will owe me nothing. They should protect your eyes, preventing eye strain and headache. They should enable you to read the smallest print, thread the finest needle, see far or near.

SEND NO MONEY

I will not accept a single penny of your money until you are satisfied and tell me so. Simply fill in and mail the coupon below giving me all the information I ask for and I will send you a pair of my Extra Large Tortoise Shell Spectacles, for you to wear, examine and inspect, for ten days, in your own home. The glasses I send are equal to spectacles being sold at retail at from $10.00 to $12.00 a pair. You will find them so scientifically ground as to enable you to see far or near, do the finest kind of work or read the very smallest print. These Extra Large Size Lenses, with Tortoise Shell Rims, are very becoming and your friends are sure to compliment you on your improved appearance. There are no "ifs" or "ands" about my liberal offer. I trust you implicitly. You are the sole judge. If they do not give you more real satisfaction than any glasses you have ever worn, you are not out a single penny. I ask you, could any offer be fairer?

Read These Letters

Warwood, W. Va., Jan. 5, 1921.
Dr. Ritholz,
1466 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.
Dear Doctor:—I have been using the Shell Rim Spectacles you sent me and will certainly keep them and will remember you when we are speaking of spectacles. I received the spectacles and you received the pay and everything is O.K.

Ever your friend,
Andrew J. Long, Box 17, 22nd Street,
Warwood, Wheeling, W. Va.
Fond du Lac, Wis., Jan. 2, 1921

Dr. Ritholz,
1466 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.
Dear Sir:—Received glasses O.K. and I am more than pleased with same. Had my eyes fitted by 3 opticians, but none gave me satisfaction. The ones I got from you I can read the smallest print for hours without feeling the least little effect.

Yours truly, Geo. Starczl.

SPECIAL THIS MONTH

If you send your order at once I will make you a present of a handsome Velveteen Lined, Spring Back, Pocket Book Spectacle Case which you will be proud to own. Sign and mail the coupon NOW.
Dr. Ritholz, Madison and LaSalle Sts., Station C, Chicago, Ill., Doctor of Optics, Member American Optical Association, Illinois State Society of Optometrists, Graduate Illinois College of Ophthalmology and Otolaryngology, Famous Eye Strain Specialist.

Accept This Free Offer Today

Dr. Ritholz, Madison and LaSalle Sts., Station C, Chicago, Ill.
You may send me by prepaid parcel post a pair of your Extra Large Tortoise Shell Gold Filled Spectacles. I will wear them 10 days and if convinced that they are equal to any glasses selling at $15.00 I will send you $4.49. Otherwise, I will return them and there will be no charge.
How old are you?
How many years have you used glasses (if any)
Name
Post Office
R. R. Box No.
State
City (Adv.)

ARTEMIS PLAYER-PIANO

The greatest help to the young music student—an instrument that plays all music correctly. And not only the composer's technique, but all the delicate shading of expression is brought out in the exquisite, beautiful tones of the wonderful ARTEMIS. It can be used as a Player-Piano or played by hand.

Artemis Universal Prices

Popular Idol Model $495 Musician Model $590
Music Lover Model $535 Artist Model $645

Some reliable piano merchant near you represents the guaranteed Artemis Line. Ask his name and address and get our beautiful Artemis Catalog No. 127 Free.

Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co., Makers

Steger Building, Chicago, Ill.

You can be quickly relieved, if you STAMMER

Send 10 cents in stamps for 288-page cloth-bound book on Stammering and Stuttering, "Its Cause and Cure." It tells how I relieved myself after stammering for 20 years. Benjamin N. Bogue, 6293, Bogue Bldg., 1147 N. W. St., Indianapolis

Sacred Duets and solos

FREE—Leaflet showing pages from Herbert Johnson's famous new duets. Face to Face, Rock of Ages, and others. Your music store sells these duets, or we supply you by mail. PEATE'S MUSIC HOUSE, Uxma, N.Y. Dept. B.

Free Investment Circulars

Interesting and valuable investment literature published from time to time by the leading Banks and Investment Houses is now available for Christian Herald Readers.

As a convenience to you we have arranged with these Financial concerns to send direct to you these Investment circulars. Write us asking for them by number or simply checking list and write name and address plainly on the margin. Financial Department, The Christian Herald, 99 Bible House, New York City.

Conservative Bonds—Current bond circulars, describing recent issues of high-grade bonds, with full details of security, yield, etc. Ask for Circular No. 1.

Public Utility Securities—Circular No. 2, describes a variety of public utility bonds and preferred stock issues, well secured and offering a high yield at present prices.

Real Estate Bonds—Several booklets issued by investment houses in different sections of the country present the advantages of real estate bonds and notes—the oldest and basic form of investment. These issues yield 6 per cent. to 7 per cent. Ask for Circulars 4-6 for city real estate bonds, and Circulars 7-9 for farm mortgages and bonds.

Partial Payment Investing—This method enables investors to buy sound securities by making payments monthly until the bond or preferred stock is fully paid for. Meanwhile all interest or dividends accrue from the time the investment is begun. Ask for Circular 11.

To Invest $25 or More—Two-year time deposit certificates paying 6 per cent., and 5 per cent. certificates payable on demand, secured by first mortgages, can be bought in multiples of $25. Ask for Circular 13.

Liberty Bonds—Circular No. 14 describes the various issues of Liberty Bonds and the remarkable investment opportunities they offer at the present time.

Standard Gas & Electric Co., 6 per cent. gold notes, at a price to yield nearly 10 per cent. are described in Circular 28.

Deere & Co., 10 year gold notes to yield 8.40%. Business, farm implements. Founded by John Deere in 1837. Ask for Circular No. 51.

Circular No. 50 gives complete information on Federal Farm Loans. They pay 5% and are tax exempt.

Farm Mortgages—details also circulars regarding 6 per cent. First Mortgage Farm Loan Certificates issued in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000. Send for Circular 38.

Foreign Bonds—opportunities for obtaining Foreign Municipal Bonds with yearly drawings at par giving high average yield of 12 1/4 per cent.—Danish Internal Loans, Norwegian and Scandinavian Bonds. Booklet 48.

Bonds—questions answered, terms defined. A very valuable non-technical booklet that every prospective bond buyer should have. No. 42.

How Henry Wilkinson Became Rich—Booklet 52 is the story of the man who was satisfied with Safety and a Fair yield on his investments. Persistence, Patience and sound judgment made him financially independent.

AUTO & TRACTOR Rahe TRAINING

Reduced from $150 to $100

My training was $150. Now only $100 (if you accept immediately). This is my greatest offer—your best chance. If you ACT NOW you will receive the famous Rahe Auto and Tractor Course (better now than ever before) for a price which SAVES YOU $50. This $50 will more than pay your railroad fare to my nearest school—leaves you money to apply on room and board.

7 days free

The Rahe-Way is Guaranteed. We must be satisfied we can train you. So must you. Come now under this famous Rahe 7-day guarantee. You take no chance when you buy guaranteed clothing or food. And you take no chance here—this Course is GUARANTEED.

3 Schools—No Crowding

Plenty of room for all. Schools at Chicago, Kansas City, Cincinnati. All schools and training identical.

SAVE $50.00 No need to delay a minute—you know the price—my course is Guaranteed—so Come Now. Or write today for my fine 68-page Book, describing the training and opportunities. It's FREE TO YOU. Come or write TODAY.

HENRY J. RAHE, Dept. 2162

Rahe Auto & Tractor Schools

Chicago, Ill. Kansas City, Mo. Cincinnati, O.
Ontario & Michigan 22nd & Oak Sts. 9th & Walnut Sts.

Don't Wear a Truss

Brooks' Appliance, the modern scientific invention, the wonderful new discovery that relieves rupture, will be sent on trial. No obnoxious springs or pads.

MR. C. E. BROOKS

Brooks' Rupture Appliance

Has automatic Air Cushions. Binds and draws the broken parts together as you would a broken limb. No salves. No lies. Durable, cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Protected by U. S. patents. Catalog and measure blanks mailed free. Send name and address today. Brooks Appliance Co., 498D State St., Marshall, Mich.

High School Course in 2 Years

You can complete this simplified High School Course at home in less than two years. Meets all requirements for entrance to college and the leading professions. This and thirty-six other practical courses are described in our Free Bulletin. Send for it TODAY.

AMERICAN SCHOOL
Dept. H-916 Draxel Ave. & 58th St. CHICAGO

Our Scientific Method will stop that

STAMMER

Send for free 200 page book. It tells how to permanently stop stammering or stuttering in a few weeks' time. A natural guaranteed method. The Lewis School for Stammerers 34 Lewis Bldg., 71-77 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

The World News of the Week

Continued from page 923

lective bargaining and union recognition is retained. Leaders of some of the principal unions indicated that the decision was satisfactory in the main.

Irish Reject British Terms

THE negotiations for peace in Ireland have been in a stage so precarious that an open rupture, with a renewal of warfare as its inevitable result, would have occasioned no surprise at any time. Ulster has returned an emphatic "No" to the terms proposed for its inclusion in an All-Ireland Parliament, but allowed a week for the submission of entirely new proposals. The receipt of Ulster's reply was followed at once by a conference of the British and Sinn Fein representatives in London to seek a new avenue of settlement, but the atmosphere was gloomy, since Sinn Fein spokesmen declared they were unwilling to alter their attitude regarding the unity of Ireland and allegiance to the British Crown.

The British government nevertheless submitted the draft of alternative proposals to the Sinn Fein envoys, who at once sent it to Dublin for consideration by the Sinn Fein Cabinet. This scheme would create in Ireland a dominion, with Ulster having the option of joining or standing aloof. The Sinn Fein would be required to give their allegiance under a form to be decided. A concession to Southern Ireland would be the creation of a boundary commission to rectify the division which now includes many Sinn Feiners in Ulster.

The Sinn Fein declined to accept the British government's new proposals, thus virtually destroying the last hopes that a basis of settlement might be found, but at least one more meeting between the British and the Sinn Fein representatives was in prospect. Each side appeared to be anxious to avert a final break but to see slight basis for a continuation of the negotiations.

Mission Budget Large

THE magnitude of the foreign missionary enterprises of American churches was illustrated forcibly by the budget for the coming year adopted by the Methodist Episcopal Board of Foreign Missions, at its annual meeting in New York. The total of the appropriations was $5,409,912, a figure large enough to command the highest respect even in the realm of huge industrial concerns, and of this sum $4,466,805 is authorized for work in foreign fields, $600,000 goes for board obligations and $343,107 is for administration.

More than $14,000,000 was paid into the general funds of the church during the year ended October 31, according to the report of Rev. R. J. Wade, exclusive of $1,216,202 pledged in estate notes and which cannot be realized at once. He said that subscriptions recently had been far in excess of those for the corresponding period of last year, a fact which he interpreted as showing a revival of religious sentiment and a decided improvement in business conditions.

Rev. Dr. Titus Lowe, of Omaha, Nebr., was elected corresponding secretary of the Board to succeed Dr. S. Earl Taylor, who resigned August 1 on account of poor health and who now is in Arizona. Dr. Lowe was a missionary to India from 1903 to 1908, and although one of the young men among the church's leaders, there was a strong movement to make him a bishop at the last general conference.

The Reparations Problem

HOW Germany is to make the reparations payments totaling 640,000,000 gold marks, exclusive of sums paid in kind, due January 15 and February 15, has been causing much worry in European official and financial circles. Germans have declared that they see no way of raising the large sums required, and even in the Allied countries many financiers believed that insistence on payment would bring about a collapse of the German financial structure already in a precarious condition.

The Reparations Commission, after a visit to Berlin, issued a statement that Germany could and must pay, but that did not prevent wide-spread discussion, especially in the British press, of the advisability of granting a two-year moratorium to her. This evoked violent protests from the French editors, and in place of a moratorium they suggested a receivership for Germany, with the Allies administering the Rhineland, in order to obtain their reparations dues.

A note sent by the Reparations Commission to Berlin warned the German Government of the serious consequences which a default would entail, and expressed a belief that Germany's difficulties were financial rather than economic, due to the failure of the German Government to take timely steps to balance the budget and the consequent expansion of the issue of paper money. It declared Berlin must try to "obtain the necessary amount of foreign exchange, either from their own nationals, who notoriously have such foreign exchange at their disposal, or from foreign lenders." Dr. Walter Rathenau, former minister of Reconstruction, was in London trying to arrange a loan of £50,000,000, but without great prospects of success.

THOUSANDS HEAR SERMON BY RADIO. There has been held in New York City the first service of what was termed "The Radio Church of America," with a "congregation" estimated at anywhere between 25,000 and 125,000, parts of which were as far distant from the preacher as Baltimore, Hampton, Va., and Fort Sheridan, Ill., listening in with the aid of wireless telephony. The service, which is non-sectarian and includes a sermon and music, is designed particularly for patients in hospitals, men aboard ships, and the thousands of amateur wireless operators.

HEAVY LOSSES IN VIENNA RIOTING. Demonstrations against the high cost of living in Austria held in front of the Parliament building in Vienna developed into riots in which fashionable hotels were looted and stores and banks wrecked. Order was restored after several hundred arrests had been made and property losses amounting to upwards of a million dollars had been caused. The outbreak was attributed to Communist agitation.

CONGRESS BEGINS REGULAR SESSION. The first regular session of Congress in the Harding administration opened on December 5, and the program before it is so heavy that it is expected to be at work continuously until next summer. One of the first measures to be taken up was the foreign debt refunding bill.

RANKING THE BIBLE FIRST. An impromptu canvass of the seniors of Goucher College, Baltimore, gave the Bible an unchallenged first place in a list of the girls' favorite ten books. It had been expected that only secular literature would be listed, but sixty-eight of the 103 girls placed the Bible first, none listed it last and only seven failed to mention it.

STUDENTS FORM PURITY LEAGUE. Seniors of New York University have formed a Purity League, the objects of which are to inculcate proper respect for womanhood and to discourage gambling, drinking, smoking and the use of violent language. Its president is the captain of the University football team, and many prominent students are members.

DR. A. H. STRONG DIES. Rev. Dr. Augustus Hopkins Strong, noted Baptist clergyman, theologian and author, and from 1872 to 1912 president of Rochester Theological Seminary, died at Pasadena, Calif., at the age of eighty-five.

For Uric Acid and Gout

"I have frequently used it (Buffalo Mineral Springs Water) with good results in certain types of Rheumatism and Gout."—DR. THOS. H. BUCKLER, of Paris, formerly of Baltimore.

Buffalo Mineral Springs Water is helpful in the treatment of Albuminuria, Bladder and Kidney Stones, Bladder Inflammation, Enlarged Prostate, Rheumatism, Gravel, Gout, Neuritis, Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Acidosis, Dyspepsia and Nausea from any cause. It is an active antacid Diuretic.

Physicians and other interested persons are invited to write to the Springs for "Fifty Years of Medical Opinions," a little book about Buffalo Mineral Springs Water written by many prominent physicians in all parts of the country. At all Druggists.

BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS VIRGINIA

Don't Worry About Your Complexion Cuticura Will Take Care of It

If you make the Cuticura Trio your every-day toilet preparations you will have a clear, healthy skin, good hair, and soft white hands. Soap to cleanse, Ointment to heal, Talcum to powder and perfume.

Sample Each Free by Mail. Address: "Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. 240, Malden 48, Mass." Sold everywhere. Soap 25c. Ointment 25c and 50c. Talcum 25c. Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

The Vapor Treatment for Coughs and Colds

The time for Vapo-Cresolene is at the first indication of a cold or sore throat, which are so often the warnings of dangerous complications.

Simple to use; you just light the little lamp that vaporizes the Cresolene and place it near the bed at night.

The soothing antiseptic vapor is breathed all night, making breathing easy, relieving the cough and easing the sore throat and congested chest.

Cresolene is recommended for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Influenza, Bronchitis, Coughs and Nasal Catarrh. Its germicidal qualities make it a reliable protection when these diseases are epidemic. It gives great relief in Asthma.

Cresolene has been recommended and used for the past 42 years. The benefit derived from it is unquestionable.

Sold by druggists. Send for descriptive booklet 62. THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York, or Leeming-Miles Bldg., Montreal, Canada

Young People's Topic for Dec. 25

By REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

Following the Star: What Do Men Find?

(C. E., E. L., and B. Y. P. U. Matt. 2: 1-12 (Christmas Meeting))

THE Star of Bethlehem still is shining. And all men are Wise Men if they desire to follow its gleams. One of the finest things any person can say is, "We have seen His star in the east and are come to worship Him." But a finer thing than merely saying that beautiful sentence is to really worship the Christ in every detail included in the meaning of the word worship. The sky of the east has never been without its stars. They have risen, shone and disappeared. The sky of human renown has had its succession of rising and setting luminaries, the stars of giant intellects and genius; yet quickly have they passed away and their glory been dimmed by other appearing orbs. The Star of Bethlehem, however, is still shining, a beacon light and guiding glow for pilgrims of earth's devious and distracting route from the cradle to the grave.

It is no marvel that the Star of Bethlehem has never set when we pause to consider the boons and blessings that men have found because they followed its beckoning. It is not possible to detail all that the birth of the Christ has meant to the world through the centuries since first angels sang their advent Anthem to expectant but nevertheless startled shepherds. As John Edward Bushnell said: "We cannot review them now, but we clasp them together into one noble bundle and call it 'The Christian Conception of God and human life.' We have a way of arriving swiftly at a conclusion when we say, as even the outside world does, of a matter: 'It is unchristian,' or we say of a man's conduct: 'It is unChristlike.' We say of a nation's misdeeds: 'It is a disgrace to Christian civilization.' One of the most recent tributes to Jesus Christ has been the saying of the scoffers themselves, 'Why did not Christianity prevent the world war?' It is always so. If any crime is committed, the scoffers say: 'Why did not the Christian religion prevent it?' The same question is never asked of any other institution or society. It is a tribute and not a criticism. The very question shows that these things are opposed to the teachings of Christ, and that if His religion prevailed they would never be."

When men follow the Star, what do they find? They find a standard of life, an idea of behavior, an ideal for conduct, a plan for normal procedure, a program for shaping the thought and action of the world. They learn how to lift the nations from the limited sphere of neighborhood to the far-reaching realm of brotherhood. They find the answer to life's puzzling questions, the solution to the soul-riddles of bewildered humanity, the guiding principles that shall eliminate selfish greed and reduce if not do away altogether with the implements of war, and they discover the method of changing spears into plowshares and swords into pruning-hooks. They find the impetus to a nobler science, a more efficient educational system, and the inspiration that changes medicine from a mere profession into a ministry of helpful service and gracious healing.

There is stowed away and carefully guarded, somewhere in Europe, a measuring rod by which the other measuring rods of the world are tested to the smallest fraction of the smallest unit. In cases of doubt they must be placed beside it. Christianity is our measuring rod when we are in doubt concerning the items of character and conduct which we must face day by day, in the give and take of the market place, drawing-room, social centers and the remotest corners.

The Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

THE Christian Herald Prayer League extends a cordial invitation to Christian people throughout this land to unite with the League in praying.

(1) For a World-wide Revival;
(2) For the International Conference, now in session in Washington, that it may be led in all things according to God's will, and that its earnest efforts in behalf of the peace and well-being of all the peoples may be crowned with success.

Mrs. J. D. L., Texas, writes: "In these perilous times of such big things, things that affect nations, with starving people and a world rushing headlong into unkindness and selfishness, I am almost ashamed to ask you to enter with me into a season of prayer for the return to our arms of my stepson. I have looked after him since he was six years old, suffered and prayed for him while in France. He has always loved me until this past year when he has grown cold, until one month ago he began taking his meals away from home. We were always so congenial and companionable. I know God is interested and will hear, for He has answered many wonderful prayers for me. Therefore, again I ask for this boy's return to me."

Mrs. R. W. writes: "Will you please pray that our churches here in Hurley, S. D., may have a real Holy Ghost baptism? The pastors are discouraged, preaching almost to empty churches while the places of amusement are packed."

Revivals are asked for in St. Paul, Minn.; Wortendyke, N. J.

Mrs. W. B., of Ohio, asks that through our columns we urge our readers to hold watch night meetings for world-wide revival.

A Reader, North Carolina, writes: "We need revival in our town, oh, so badly. Not a revival to bring members into the church, but a revival of the church members. So many of our supposed-to-be-leading church members indulge constantly in drinking and gambling. It is next to impossible to get a young man to lead in anything pertaining to God's work. I think the trouble is that the mothers are not willing to pray enough. Some think ten or fifteen minutes a day sufficient. Therefore, please pray that we may have such a revival as will sweep the whole town and community and will bring us humbly to our knees before the Throne of God, and that our young men will be unafraid to stand up and confess Christ before men."

C. C. C., of Minnesota, writes: "My wife and I ask an interest in your prayers that we may receive strength from God at this time as our hearts are sad over the loss of a son. We are so lonely without his company although we know he has gone Home to rest."

B. M., of Illinois, writes: "I am accused of a crime of which I am innocent. Please pray that the truth will be found out. All my friends are against me. Also pray for spiritual blessing for my family and church."

Jennie L., Buffalo, N. Y., writes: "Pray that I may be able to remember Scriptural texts and to quote them correctly and that I may have courage to pray in public and testify for my Saviour without the fear of people. Also that I may be instrumental in winning souls for Christ."

We have received the following individual requests: for healing, 162; guidance, 15; reunion, 5; forgiveness, 3; conversion of relations and friends, 125; blessing, 21; peace, 12; courage, 1; heart's desire, 52; financial aid, 33; positions, 13; mental advancement, 5; happiness, 5; spiritual advancement, 2; and for relatives and friends, that they may be cured of evil habits, 13.

KIDDER PEABODY & COMPANY

115 DEVONSHIRE STREET
BOSTON

216 BERKELEY STREET
BOSTON

FOUNDED 1865

BRANCH OFFICES

18 BROAD STREET
NEW YORK

15 EAST 42nd STREET
NEW YORK

GOVERNMENT BONDS
INVESTMENT SECURITIES
FOREIGN EXCHANGE
LETTERS OF CREDIT

CORRESPONDENTS OF
BARING BROTHERS & COMPANY, Ltd.
LONDON, ENGLAND

FORTY-NINE YEARS WITHOUT LOSS OF
PRINCIPAL OR INTEREST TO ANY INVESTOR.

Our Last Offering at 8%

Lower interest rates, talked about for months, are now a reality. We are making our last 8% offering of National Capital First Mortgage Investments, doubly secured by income-producing property in Washington, D. C. As our next offering you receive 8% while you save.

Denominations: $100, $500, $1000. Maturities: 2 to 10 years

THE F. H. SMITH COMPANY

Founded 1873

815 FIFTEENTH STREET N.W.
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Address Dept. 19

6%

6% Paid For
27 Years

This old, conservative Company has paid 6% on Two-Year Time Certificates for 27 years. All its investments are made in first mortgages on improved real estate—the safest security in the world—and its Certificates are always at par. Interest checks mailed semi-annually, or quarterly if desired.

If you have $25 or more to invest, write for our booklet, "6% and Safety."

THE CALVERT MORTGAGE CO.
863 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Write for this Booklet

It tells how to receive a generous income for life: regular, unchangeable, non-taxable. Investment absolutely safe. Your money helps a Christian enterprise.

Write for Booklet 7

American Bible Society
25 Bible House
Astor Place, New York

Lucy Farrar Invested at 8%— a Little Each Month

Follow her plan in 1922

Lucy Farrar's family suffered a staggering loss when the schooner "Annie Laurie" went down in a storm, but Lucy had been quietly laying aside a definite part of the old vessel's earnings, month by month. Her husband and uncle were astonished when, facing the prospect of having to begin life's struggle over again, Lucy brought out a strong-box stuffed with safe bonds paying 8% interest.

Miller First Mortgage Bonds, under our Partial Payment Plan, are available to all people who, like Lucy Farrar, have a certain amount of money coming in regularly, of which they wisely wish to save a part. You may send as little as $10 a month and we will pay 7% on each deposit until the bond is paid for. The bonds yield 8%.

Mail the coupon below and receive, free, the complete story, "When Lucy Farrar's Ship Came In," which will open your eyes to the possibilities of investing on this plan.

$100 Bonds, $500 Bonds, $1000 Bonds MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY

Interest payable twice yearly

To Yield 8%

G. L. MILLER & CO.

626 HURT BUILDING ATLANTA, GA.

"First—The Investor's Welfare"

G. L. MILLER & COMPANY
626 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.

I would like to know more about safe investment at 8% on the Partial Payment Plan. Please send me the story, "When Lucy Farrar's Ship Came In" and booklet, "Selecting Your Investments."

Name.....

Street.....

City and State.....

Study Bible Now! Better Than College Course

William Lyon Phelps, A. M., Ph. D., professor of English language and literature, Yale University, says:

"I thoroughly believe in a university education for both men and women; but I believe a knowledge of the Bible without a college course is more valuable than a college course without the Bible."

"Every one who has a thorough knowledge of the Bible may truly be called educated; and no other learning or culture, no matter how extensive or elegant, can form a proper substitute."

And President Harding says:

"I have always believed in the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, whereby they have become the expression to man of the Word and will of God."

The Correspondence method of Bible study is the best method for securing a thorough knowledge of the Bible—better than any oral teaching can possibly be.

More than 7,000 persons of 40 different occupations are now enrolled in one or more of the

Moody Bible Institute's Correspondence Courses

studying the inspired Revelation under the direction of eminent, Spirit-filled, Bible scholars. To really know the Bible is an education out of which springs the fullest and best development of one's powers in any vocation. This marvelous Book has moulded earth's loftiest characters. It meets man's deepest needs. It charts the only path to real and lasting success. Dig in it as for gold and you will secure treasure of value and extent beyond any calculation. Letters of warmest appreciation are constantly received from students and graduates. For example:

"It has never been my privilege to be fascinated with Bible study as I am with this course."

"I have come to know the Bible in an entirely new light. The Old Testament is now intensely interesting."

"The benefits I have received from the Synthetic Course are beyond estimate and above price."

No matter what your occupation you can study the Bible by correspondence. These courses open a new world to you—broaden your vision, develop your understanding, answer your questions, help solve your perplexities, give comfort and encouragement.

We Offer Eight Courses by Mail

Synthetic Bible Study; Scofield Bible Course; Practical Christian Work; Bible Doctrine; Bible Chapter Summary; Introductory Bible Course; Evangelism; Christian Evidences.

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE
Dept. 1569 153 Institute Place
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

"I finished the Scofield Bible Course about three years ago. It has been of greater value to me than any other training I have ever had, though I spent four years in college."

A Clergyman says: "I often mention in my sermons that a Correspondence Course from the Moody Bible Institute has been of far greater value to me than all of my Bible and theological work in college."

Enroll Now! You will be a personal pupil—time, place and amount of study under your own control. The prices are very low—these courses are not sold for profit. There is no better time to start than NOW. Send the coupon at once for Free Prospectus describing our eight Courses in detail.

Mail the Coupon Today

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE

Dept. 1569 153 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

Send me your prospectus giving complete information regarding your eight courses in Correspondence Bible Study.

Name _____

Address _____

PRECIOUS BIBLE PROMISES

By SAMUEL CLARK, D. D.

320 pages, gilt back, fine cloth, large type and fine paper

IT CONTAINS:

1. Bible Promises to Believers.
2. Bible Promises Relating to Troubles in Life.
3. Bible Promises of Spiritual Blessings in This Life.
4. Bible Promises of Blessings in the Future World, and many other chapters containing hundreds of inspirational verses from the Bible.

"The materials which are collected here are all divine. It is an easy matter to find something suited to the frame of our souls or our present wants to every occasion, and that soul who knows what a suitable promise is worth in an hour of darkness or temptation will never think such a work as this, and such a various treasure, can have sufficient value set upon it."

A year's subscription to the Christian Herald, 52 weeks, and a cloth bound copy of "Precious Bible Promises," both post-paid for $2.25

The cloth bound book sold separately, post-paid for 60 cents.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS ARE INVITED
to send for full particulars of the money-saving

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK BUYER'S CLUB

Thousands are now members. WHY NOT YOU?
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BOOK DEPARTMENT, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

On the Desk Flowers make a Brighter Business Day

Say it with Flowers

Sentiment and business go hand in hand linked by the subtle message of flowers. Patronize your local florist. You can "Say it with Flowers" anytime, anywhere—through the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association

OUR MAIL-BAG

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters, nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

THE following five questions and the answers are of special interest at this time and we commend them to the attention of every reader of the Christian Herald:

1. When is "Watch Night"? It is the last night of the old year, and is so called from the custom of "watching" the old year out and the new year in. A watch night gathering is a meeting ostensibly for the same purpose.

2. Are "Watch Night meetings" common? Yes, there are many such meetings, but comparatively few like those of the old revival days of a half century or more ago, when God's people met, not for a "social" hour, but to humble themselves before God, confessing their sins and the sins of the church, and imploring His forgiveness and continued favor; also earnestly beseeching His presence in revival power. When these and similar meetings died out the spirit for revival also died out in the church at large.

3. Is it possible to revive the old type of Watch Night meetings? It is, and the need is great. There should be such a meeting in every evangelical church; or if not in every church, at least in one or more Christian homes in every community. Two years ago there were hundreds of these meetings, and a year ago thousands. This year the number should be tens of thousands.

4. How should a Watch Night meeting be conducted? The place is immaterial—whether church or home. The hours are immaterial—whether two or three hours or all night; the number of persons is immaterial, "for where two of three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them." The matter of vital importance is that the Holy Spirit be the recognized Leader of the meeting, and that those who gather for "prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving," be "agreed" in the Lord. All bickerings and jealousies and divisive issues must be confessed and put away; then God will pour out His Spirit.

5. "What can I do?" First of all, pray and ask others to do so. If you are a pastor, get the matter on the consciences of your people. If need be, open your own home to a meeting. You can do something. God will show you the rest.

Mr. Guy Mahorney, a reader of the Christian Herald in Hartford City, Ind., sends the interesting story of Rev. Charles Little, who for fifty years has been pastor of the Wabash Presbyterian Church, and who recently delivered his forty-ninth anniversary sermon. Only a few members are now living who heard his first sermon preached. Dr. Little comes of a long line of ministerial ancestors. He has officiated at the marriages of more than 1700 couples. He is greatly beloved by his congregation, who, when he wished to retire from the active ministry a few years ago, urged that he remain at his post during the rest of his life.

Mrs. E. H. H., Kansas City, Mo., writes, apropos of the discussion over proposed changes in the Creed: "May I suggest another, to be included in the declaration of the fundamental doctrines and teaching of Jesus: 'He ascended into heaven and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, where He ever liveth to make intercession for us, and from thence He shall come to judge the quick and the dead.'"

A. B. C., Boulder, Colo. The passage in Deut. 22:5 is believed to have been directed against certain abuses which were common in the heathen temples of the nations with whom the Israelites came into contact. Disguises were assumed at certain times in these temples, women equipped in armor, and men in colored feminine attire, worshipping at the heathen shrines. The whole system was corrupt and offensive, and hence it is described in the Jewish ordinances as "an abomination unto the Lord."

Mrs. L. B. H., Fabius, N. Y. The opening prayer at the Conference in Washington was made by a Baptist minister of that city, Rev. Mr. Abernathy, who was chosen by the President for that particular occasion. The prayer, which was exceedingly appropriate, was one to which all the Christian Churches and congregations could readily subscribe, being undenominational and recognizing in the fullest measure the need of Divine guidance in all the work sought to be accomplished.

Lena K. S., Firth, Idaho, sends these suggestions about the Altar Service in the Home: "Undoubtedly there are many mothers who would like to have family worship in the home, but do not have the co-operation of the fathers, so they let day after day go by without giving to the children the spiritual advantage of this home service. In one home, father is a business man and claims he can't wait for the hour of service which means so much to his wife. She, however, rolls into the drawing-room the baby-carriage containing the ten months' old Betty, seats herself in a big easy chair upon the arm of which climbs the boy, aged four. All three (for Betty joins in) sing from the Sunday School song book a song which is familiar to the boy. The mother reads a little story with a lesson in it, from John Martin's Book, the Junior Instructor, or the weekly Sunday School paper. Boy and mother on alternate mornings pray, thanking God for family, home, clothes, food, friends and fun, and asking Him to help them to be good folks all day long, for Jesus' sake. Then mother reads aloud a portion from the Bible, and the boy invariably listens, in fact, asks for it if mother starts to read it to herself. If mothers start this custom when children are tiny, they will avoid the embarrassment and awkwardness occasioned by beginning when the children are at a more sensitive age." These practical hints to mothers could be made available in many homes.

D. S. D., Battle Creek, Mich., writes: "In your issue of November 5, you present the proposal of Rev. J. W. Wells of San Jose, California (1) for a People's Parliament at Washington, D. C., to watch our regular Congress and to lobby for the people, and (2) that we take informal referendum votes of all American citizens to inform Congress as to what we wish done, until (3) our national Constitution had an Amendment added providing for the national initiative and referendum as we now have local and state initiative and referendum in city charters and state constitutions. You request that your readers discuss the proposal. In reply to proposal two, the question arises, who will furnish the immense sums of money to take the referendums, which would be as expensive as regular election referendums? The men of wealth do not want any referendums held except by the United States Chamber of Commerce which already takes referendums from the local Chambers of Commerce everywhere. Unless the government takes the referendums and pays the bills, the only referendum now possible is the postal card referendums which various reform societies tell us to send to our home Congressman or Senators when issues arise in which we are interested. In reply to proposal one, it would cost as much to elect and maintain a second parliament to watch our regular Congress as it costs to maintain the present Congress. Who will pay the bills? There are now representatives of all sorts of societies with offices in Washington so that there is now an informal parliament in existence. Why not support them and their work, such as the Anti-Saloon League, the American Union Against Militarism, the Popular Government League, the Farmers' National Council, etc.? Also why not get non-partisan preferential primary laws in each state and then, at the primaries, elect men who will not be merely the tools of reactionary interests? Let your readers get copies of the American Issue, Labor, the Searchlight, the Farmers' Forum, and similar organs and see what is now being done in Washington. As regards the third proposal, every American citizen should unite in working for an Amendment to our National Constitution providing the national initiative and referendum, especially as requiring that all military and naval appropriations, all declarations of war, all conscription and sedition laws, be submitted to the people for a vote before becoming laws."

J. E. Gramps, Fort Plain. Chain letters, when they contain a threat or prediction of evil for non-compliance, should receive no attention. Compliance should be voluntary to be of any real value.

W. A., North Berwick, Me. You doubtless refer to Ezra 7:21, which contains all the letters in the alphabet excepting J.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by the Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President; Rae D. Henkle, Secretary.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittance should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed to Canada, add fifty cents; outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price. Canadian remittances accepted at par.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least three weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. For example Dec. 21 signifies that subscription expires with the last issue of December 1921.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, the CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Copyright, 1921, the Christian Herald.

Entered as Second-Class Matter, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y.

Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post-Office Department, Ottawa, Canada.

Condensed List of Premium Offers for 1921-22

IN COMBINATION WITH THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

You may renew your subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD and receive special low prices on these excellent books, or you may order the books separately at the prices named when ordering the books singly.

THE FAMOUS CHRISTIAN HERALD RED LETTER BIBLE

The text is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and very durable, weighs only 20 ounces. It is bound in American Bible Leather, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, with silk ribbon marker.

PRINTED ON AMERICAN BIBLE PAPER

WHAT IS A RED LETTER BIBLE?

1. In the Old Testament the passages quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are PRINTED IN RED. 2. In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of the Saviour are PRINTED IN RED. 3. A Red Star (*) immediately following a verse in the Old Testament indicates that the verse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah. The Christian Herald Red Letter Bible contains 919 pages for the Old Testament, 284 pages for the New Testament, 32 pages Bible Readers' aids and helps, 16 maps in colors, 1251 total pages.

We send this Superb Bible, together with The Christian Herald for one whole year, both for..... $5⁰⁰
This Bible is sold separately, postpaid, for..... $3.50

PROPHECY EXPLAINED—By DR. GEO. H. PATCH

This is a wonderful book on Prophecy. It will be welcomed by Christian men and women everywhere. It brings solace and consolation and reassurance.

Dr. Patch has shed a flood of light on prophecy and especially on Revelation. His work cannot fail to be commended by Bible students and Christian people wherever the Bible is read and studied. It is the most important work we have ever published on Prophecy. All who are interested in the interpretation of Bible prophecy should read and study this remarkable work. Its publication was recommended to us by eminent students of Prophecy.

1 VOL. 12 MO. 480 PAGES. FINE CLOTH BINDING.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $3⁰⁰
We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $1.50

PRECIOUS BIBLE PROMISES—By DR. CLARKE, D.D.

Those who have little leisure for reading will find it invaluable in keeping this book always near them; and with the glance of an eye they may take in the riches of grace and glory, and derive many a sweet refreshment, amidst their labors and travels. It is of excellent use to lie on the table and now and then to take a sip of the river of life, which runs through it in a thousand little rills of peace and joy.—Dr. Watts.

1 VOL. 16 MO. CLOTH BINDING. 320 PAGES.

The demand for this excellent book is so great that we are continually printing and binding new editions in five thousand lots.

We send this book and the Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $2²⁵
We send the book separately in cloth binding, postpaid, for 60c

THE SCRIPTURE TEXT CALENDAR FOR 1922

COVER DESIGN IN COLORS

A reproduction of the famous painting, "Master, I Perish," is the principal feature of the cover design of the Scripture Text Calendar. By referring to the Scripture Text Calendar you can tell what the Sunday School Lesson will be for any Sunday in 1922.

TWELVE WORKS OF ART IN COLORS

JANUARY—Christ Healing the Sick Child.
FEBRUARY—Returning From Jerusalem.
MARCH—The Story of the Good Samaritan.
APRIL—He Is Risen.
MAY—Christ Teaching Little Children.
JUNE—The Son of a Carpenter.

JULY—Christ Going Through the Wheat Field.
AUGUST—Christ and the Fallen Woman.
SEPTEMBER—Jesus Sitting by the Sea of Galilee.
OCTOBER—The Rainbow Promise.
NOVEMBER—The Story of Jacob's Ladder.
DECEMBER—The Holy Night.

We send this fine Calendar and the Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $2²⁰
The Calendar sent separately, postpaid, for..... 35c

IN HIS STEPS—By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

IN FINE CLOTH BINDING

Every member of your family should read this wonderful book that has been translated into nineteen languages and been sold in editions numbering over 22,000,000 copies.

"The most widely read book of the last 200 years is "In His Steps,"

by Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, editor of The Christian Herald. It has sold more than twenty million copies, the largest sale of any book except the Bible and "Pilgrim's Progress."—The Publishers Weekly.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $3⁰⁰
We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $1.25

HEART STORIES—By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

Dr. Sandison says:

"Dr. Sheldon's new book, entitled, "Heart Stories," shows his wonderful versatility in depicting the spiritual life in its most interesting phases.

In these seven stories, six of which have never been published until now, the reader will find some of the most interesting themes—but the stories the reader must read for himself. The whole, delightfully and romantically told, is well adapted to reading in the family group. All admirers of Dr. Sheldon's world-famous book, "In His Steps," should read this new book." In the same binding as "IN HIS STEPS."

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $2⁵⁰
We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $1.25

THE RICHEST MAN IN KANSAS—By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

How would you feel and act if you were suddenly to be told that you had come into a big fortune over night? This is what happened to Anson Howard, whose remarkable experience Dr. Sheldon relates in his new story, "The Richest Man in Kansas." From an income of $125 a month, to cutting coupons on $10,000,000 worth of gilt-edged securities is a change so radical that it would turn most men's heads—to say nothing of their wives and daughters. Just what happened is vividly told in Dr. Sheldon's dramatic presentation. At no time in a man's life is there a stronger test of character than when Fortune knocks at the door. Some lose their bearings altogether. Read the book and see how Anson Howard and his folks stood the test.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $2³⁵
We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... 60c

CHILDREN'S STORIES FROM THE BIBLE

A book that has long been wanted. It is often forgotten that the Bible is the greatest story-book in the world, and that it is especially rich in stories about little folk or that have a special interest for children. The old, old stories are here charmingly retold in simple language by Blanche Winder. The illustrations are delightfully fresh and unconventional.

With 48 Plates in Color by HARRY G. THEAKER
Large Crown 8vo. Cloth. 344 pages.
Handsome Binding Design, with Pictorial Wrapper and Endpapers.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $3⁵⁰
We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $2.00

THE WONDER BOOK OF WHY & WHAT?

The most wonderful Wonder Book of all. It deals with many of the questions children are constantly asking on all sorts of subjects. There are hundreds of illustrations of entrancing interest, and the book is without a single dull page. The harassed parent will hail this book with as much delight as the youngsters.

Crown 4to. Picture Boards.
12 Plates in Color. 256 Pages. Over 300 Beautiful Illustrations.
Highly Educational.

We send this book and The Christian Herald for one year, both for..... $3⁵⁰
We send the book separately, postpaid, for..... $2.00

The above list offers a fine selection for gift purposes for both old and young. Please send your orders early to avoid delay in delivery.

Many thousands of present CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have approved of these books and we feel confident that any of the offers will prove satisfactory to all who make a selection from them.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Victrola

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

The Victrola is the gift of all music to your home

Wherever the dawn of Christmas morning finds a Victrola, there are gathered the greatest artists of this generation. All have contributed their art to the Victrola, positive that it is the one instrument which brings to you their authoritative interpretations in the tones of actual reality.

Will there be a Victrola in your home this Christmas?
$25 to $1500.

Victor Talking Machine Company, Camden, N.J.

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

This trademark and the trademarked word "Victrola" identify all our products. Look under the lid! Look on the label!

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE CO., Camden, N. J.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

● The Holy Night ●

By Margaret E. Sangster

Painted by Feurstein

The shepherds knelt before the Babe,
And, silver-sweet on high,
A great star cut a gleaming path,
Across the midnight sky!

And Mary's face was wan and pale,
But, oh, the way she smiled!
As angels, straight from Heaven, sang
Their praises to her child!

Perhaps the shadow of a cross,
Lay on her heart that night;
For ~ as she touched the Baby's hand~
Her eyes, with tears, were bright!

The Light of Christmas

Margaret E. Sangster

I saw a mother on the street, to day,
Who held a shawl-wrapped baby to her breast,
I watched her, and I saw a faint smile play
Across her face—(so wan it was, and white!)
And then I saw her eyes, great, sad eyes, rest
Upon the baby's face. And, oh, the light
That lay in them was wonderful, and sweet.

On Bethlehem there shone a star, one night,
A silver star that swept across the land
With radiance like song. A Baby hand Reached from a manger, like a groping flower,
And, kneeling at another Mother's feet
(So pale she was—but, oh, her eyes were bright,
As like a queen she met her proudest hour!)
The wise men laid incense, and gold, and myrrh.

I saw a mother on the street, to day,
Who held a shawl-wrapped baby to her breast,
And as I watched I saw a faint smile play
Across her face—and, in the eyes of her,
I saw a light like flame. It burned away
All dread and bitterness. Ah, she was dressed
In rags—but, oh, the rags were glorified!

I watched her, and the light swept, like a tide
From her proud gaze into the soul of me.
And I could see across that busy street
A glowing star of silver mystery,
And as I watched my heart knelt at her feet!

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

(IN WHICH IS INCORPORATED WORLD OUTLOOK)
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

GRAHAM PATTERSON, PUBLISHER

Uncle Sam's Christmas-Tree

Surely America Has Many Reasons for Being Grateful and Happy

By RAE D. HENKLE

WHEN Uncle Sam has a minute or two of leisure to sit down and look over the parcels on his Christmas-tree he is going to be a very satisfied and happy chap. If he is at all retrospective—and who is not at the holiday time?—he is going to pat himself on the back and say with a bit of self-congratulation:

"What a poor fool I was last Christmas to think that the world was all wrong, that nobody loved me, and that I might just as well crawl into my hole and cut the lines that tied me to the rest of the world."

Because a year ago he was just about in the depths of despondency. His morale was at zero. He was practically friendless and he was alone. His Christmas packages from his family and neighbors were ironic flings at his hopeless, helpless future.

But what a difference a short year makes! Without a too-great optimism he can say to himself in the language of the doughboy: "Oh, man! I'm sittin' on the top o' the world."

From Europe, Asia, Africa, South America and the islands of the seas is coming a chorus that sounds like "For he's a jolly good fellow," and even the folks at home are casting doubt on the reliability of the old adage about the prophet being without honor in his own country. The big American family has decided that, after all, Uncle Sam is not a bad fellow and that while he may have his faults in common with the rest of the world, he is a big, warm-hearted, clean-minded, unselfish, strong-minded, clear-visioned, hard-working, earnest, idealistic sort of person. It intends, by these eulogistic adjectives, to have the rest of the world understand that it is glad to claim him again and that America once more looks to the future with a confidence and assurance that events have caused to be sadly lacking in the last three years.

NEVER in more than nineteen hundred years has Christmas been more completely an era of "Peace on Earth" than in this year of 1921. This may be attributed to three main phenomena: The world has regained its sense of proportion; it has acquired a new, if still rudimentary, sense of brotherhood and responsibility; it has been convinced that quarreling doesn't pay.

Supplementing these conclusions are others less fundamental and more transitory but none the less effectual in bringing toward a successful ending the efforts of the American Government to negotiate a basis of permanent peace. If Uncle Sam found on his Christmas-tree nothing more than the agreement among the principal powers for a limitation of armament and a formula for the settlement of disputes that arise in the Pacific basin it would be an occasion for rejoicing, for with them would go a saving of hundreds of millions of dollars every year to be translated into a reduction of the tax burden and an assurance that at the point of greatest potential danger the possibility of sacrificing the best of the country's young manhood on the altar of war had been eliminated.

Surely there is reason for a happy Christmas!

Beyond that, however, the calling of the Washington Conference and the skill and humanity with which it has been conducted have placed the United States on a new and firmer plane in the regard of the peoples of the world. A year ago, with the repudiation of the League of Nations, the stock of American goodwill was far below par in the international market. It is not an exaggeration to say that we were left virtually friendless. We had been in the position of Big Brother to humanity, and suddenly we became anathema as a miser-hermit. We may still be looked on in some quarters as a miser gloating over his gold while the mortgage on the poor widow's home is being foreclosed, but that attitude is being abandoned where common sense has a chance to assert itself. In its place has come an appreciation of the fact that we have a world vision and the energy and ability to realize it. And while we realize it for ourselves we are lightening the burdens and clearing the war-laden atmosphere that surrounds the nations with which we are in contact.

Last Christmas we were legally and technically at war with Germany and Austria. On the 1921 Christmas-tree Uncle Sam finds two parchment rolls embodying treaties of peace with Germany and Austria, so that we can say with official sanction: "We haven't an enemy on earth."

THIS same element of peace also has affected the relations of Great Britain and Ireland, and an end to the centuries-long antagonism between the two islands is in sight, provided a small group of trouble-making Americans of Irish descent are able to restrain their hatred of England and encourage the efforts of the peacemakers on a basis of a free Irish state. We might even go so far as to suggest that the Washington government, as an act friendly to Great Britain, might officially suppress those few hybrid Americans, who with their money and their voices are endeavoring to overthrow all the work of the negotiators who labored for months to bring an accord between Ireland and the British crown. It would be a Christmas present worth while if the country could be freed from the fulminations of the irreconcilable Irish agitator.

In his home relationships Uncle Sam has had a very happy year, particularly happy because of the relief from the depression that could be felt all about him twelve months ago. Part of this depression was due largely to psychological causes, such as the uncertainty that followed the Presidential election and preceded the installation of the new government in power. Much of it, however, was actual and physical, due to the liquidation of war industries, readjustment of business on a decreasing price level, conflicts between capital and labor in every part of the country, buyers' strikes, closing down of factories, and similar economic disturbances.

In the year that is just closing there has been a marked improvement all along the industrial line. The war influence has been overcome to a great extent in the struggle of reconstruction. The perennial tug-of-war between the organized employers and the organized employees resulted in some unsettled weeks, but sober councils prevailed, and there is growing slowly a conviction in the minds of both capital and labor that the public has an interest in their problems that cannot be entirely disregarded. The public this year said in unmistakable terms that it would tolerate no strikes and no lockouts that compromised the rights of the people.

LABOR, for some years past, has gone about apparently with the feeling that industry is a gold-mined bank to which it alone should possess the key. Capital, recovering somewhat from the blows it received from the big stick in the days of the "male-factors of great wealth," felt the time was ripe for it to destroy bodily all labor organizations. Here was a stage all set for a stupendous economic war, and then the public said: "Stop it! Both of you are partly right and partly wrong. What you want is a little of the Golden Rule in business."

And that is what industry is thinking today. More businesses than ever before in the nation's history have begun seriously to study the question of human relationships in the factory. The result has been astonishing to some of the students if not so surprising to the "idealists" who urged them on to the study. The example of the factories where some of the Golden Rule principles have been applied has been felt in every direction and has been a large cake of leaven in a heavy loaf of misunderstanding, distrust and animosity. Responsible labor leaders are thinking now in terms of "let's get together." Responsible employers with a sense of duty to the country, are thinking more of their workers in terms of human beings than as cogs in a machine for grinding out money. There still are employers of the reactionary type who see in a factory hand only so much potential wealth for themselves. And there still are labor leaders who see in capital an excuse for anarchistic and communistic agitation. Both types, fortunately, are more and more in the minority, and they will be placed in control if the President's plea for an arbitration board is granted.

The inevitable development of this breaking down of distrust and mutual recognition of the indispensability of both money and labor in industry, has been an increase in employment and an increase in production. Labor has gained and so has the employer. In this complex modern industrial life where we are all wheels within wheels a slip of one cog affects the operation of the whole machine so that the perfect meshing of the two main gears means safety, contentment and better prospects for the public at large.

NEXT to a more tolerant attitude on the part of employers and employees, the new revenue measure passed by the Congress as a temporary makeshift has influenced for the better economic conditions. Admittedly the bill is a makeshift. It was passed to fulfill party pledges, but it has eased the burden of taxation on both corporations and individuals, and will permit the former especially to proceed with expansion plans without facing an annual tax bill that in many instances was almost confiscatory. The temporary expedient made no effort to adjust the tariff on a comprehensive scale. That remains for this session of Congress to undertake, but there is evidence that the problem of tariff revision will be approached with broader vision and less intensive partisanship than ever before in the history of revenue legislation. Heretofore the Congress has been governed by the insular view that limited their thought to the protection of home industries from competition with foreign importations. The party in power continues to be a protectionist party, but in common with the rest of the country it sees the necessity of foreign trade, both import and export, and recognizes that in the field of international commerce tariff walls can be erected by two countries as easily as one. Unless all the signs fail, this attitude will largely govern in the formulation of the next revenue bill.

In the class with physical and economic improvements Uncle Sam will find under his tree a vastly extended and improved system of public roads which are serving two main objects—quicker and cheaper transportation between urban and interurban communities, and the extension into rural sections of some of the cultural advantages of the towns. The good-roads movement has penetrated into every state and encouraged by federal appropriations and engineering support the state and county authorities are pushing construction with great rapidity.

Morally and socially the year has been one of marked advancement. The most important new package on the tree undoubtedly is the Smith-Towner maternity bill, which introduces the American people to a type of social welfare legislation long advocated by groups of men and women who have had wide experience in sociological problems. The United States has been extremely backward in undertaking work of a kind that European governments long ago included among their responsibilities, but with the passage of the maternity bill there is reason to feel that the pleas of the advocates of effective child labor laws, old age pensions and improved public health measures will not fall on completely deaf ears.

THE demand for more public-school facilities, especially in the rural districts, and for a higher grade and more numerous teaching staff, has been partially met. More school houses have been built than for several years past but, unfortunately with little federal assistance. The value of a schoolhouse adequately equipped, in comparison with a war ship, has been pretty thoroughly impressed on the American mind, and there is an excellent prospect that a few of the hundreds of millions to be saved from naval construction programs will go into better education.

Prohibition has had another year of trial and another year of justification. Despite difficulties of enforcement in many communities there has been noticeable, especially in the last few weeks, a strong reaction toward strict law observance. The enforcement officials are finding more sympathy from the public, the newspapers as a class are finding encouragement of bootlegging unpopular, and violators of the law are finding jurors and judges less lenient. Altogether it is a rather unhappy Christmas for the man who makes his living as a booze vendor, but a happy one for Uncle Sam in the assurance that his law will be obeyed.

There has been a decided forward movement during the year in Christian Unity. While no figures are available it is known that more interdenominational mergers have been completed in the form of union churches than in any other twelve-month. Not only have these churches taken an important place in the rural and village communities, but they have appeared in increasing numbers in the cities where neighborhood conditions have made it advisable for several organizations of different denominations to combine their activities in one large organization for more efficient handling of the spiritual and social problems that were demanding solution. It all indicates a growth of sectarian tolerance that is not only pleasing Uncle Sam but is delighting the big broad-minded religious leaders of the country.

Superintendent Edmunds Discovers Why

By ANNA PRINTZLAU BOWEN

IT SEEMED to energetic, black-eyed Richard Edmunds, Sunday School Superintendent of Grace Church, that the Junior department was lacking something vital. Just what it was he could not determine. He had listened to the teachers expound the lessons, and was satisfied with their efforts; he knew they were attending to the social side of their duty. He and Mrs. Edmunds were discussing the matter Saturday evening.

"I can not understand it," he declared. "Take Miss Brown's boys, for instance, every last one of them is determined to be the robber in that Good Samaritan story we are to dramatize."

"It is strange," sympathized his wife, "but doubtless it is because they are at the super-strength-admiration age."

"That's just it—they don't distinguish between real and superficial aspirations—and they should by this time."

Mrs. Edmunds refrained from replying, for her admirable husband quickly delved into a pocket, brought forth a clean white handkerchief and lustily blew his nose—a sure sign that he was deeply moved, and preferred to reason the matter out alone.

Sunday morning he felt more optimistic, having had a good night's rest. The Junior boys occupy room number one, and the girls, room number two during study period, the two departments facing each other through assembly. Running the length of these two rooms is the Primary department, the three rooms separated by sliding doors.

"Have you seen a lost note-book anywhere?" the Librarian asked Superintendent Edmunds, after he had given her a new list of readable books to inspect. "I'm sure I left it here on my desk, but it certainly is not here now."

"Yes, I have seen it—in fact I am the guilty party. I had to refer to it at the last Board meeting, and I distinctly recall leaving it there. I will get it for you immediately—sorry to have inconvenienced you."

"Not at all, Mr. Edmunds, I am in no hurry for it, but I need it to take home."

EVERY member of Grace Church knows that official business is usually transacted in the Primary room, and in a few moments the Superintendent was there looking for the note-book. On the opposite side of the wall, directly in front of the official desk, is the Junior Superintendent's desk. It happened that Miss Brown was standing beside it, reviewing the Good Samaritan story, as Superintendent Edmunds searched for the note-book. He had forgotten she was replacing the Junior Superintendent for the day, and something she said caught his attention, and he listened as she proceeded with the story.

"Now you tell me what the story is about," she requested the boys.

"Why—why it's about a man who—who was goin' somewheres and—and—"

"Aw, get out, you," came a voice behind the speaker. "It's about an old Jew who got soaked by some robbers who didn't even have a r'volver."

"They was awful brave, wasn't they Miss Brown?" added a third.

"Well—yes, in a way. Perhaps we better say they were very bold. But what happened after the robbers left the poor Jew all bruised up?"

"Oh—nothin' much. A fellow came along and let him ride his mule to the hotel. Prob'ly he was tired ridin' anyway—wouldn't you rather walk th'n ride a mule, Miss Brown?"

"Yes, and who paid for the Jew's supper?"

"Did he eat any, Miss Brown?"

"Why—why, of course, we are not sure about it, but doubtless he did. Who did you say paid for it?"

Superintendent Edmunds, listening at the desk, suddenly blew his nose.

"Oh, the fellow with the donkey paid it," came a listless reply.

"Yes, the man we call the Samaritan paid for the Jew's supper and room. Don't you think that was real kind of him?"

"Prob'ly he was a'nother rich Jew."

"No—he wasn't a Jew—he was just a good-hearted man. Now turn to your lesson study and remember to come early tomorrow evening for rehearsal."

Again Superintendent wanted to blow his nose—but refrained, and hastened to deliver the Librarian's note-book. Before rehearsal, Monday evening, the Junior Superintendent and Miss Brown were discussing the adaptation of the boys and the characters in the story. "It's the funniest thing," she confided, "most every one of my boys wants to be a robber—wouldn't you suppose they would prefer to be the Samaritan?" Just then Superintendent Edmunds arrived.

"Good evening, folks—where are the boys?"

"Outside—disputing over their ability to fill the rôle of robber."

"Well, let's get them in—and get busy."

SOON every one was ready. "Now let's see," reflected Superintendent Edmunds aloud to the assembled group, "we have to have a rich Jew, a Priest, a Levite, a brave-looking Samaritan, and about three sneaky and mean robbers. Of course there must have been two anyway—one wouldn't dare to go alone, for robbers are always cowards at heart. But we wouldn't have had any story if those sneaky fellows hadn't been too lazy to earn a decent living in a decent way. Probably it was about dusk when this all happened, for a robber hardly ever dares show his face by daylight. But we've got to have some one to be robber just the same. Who will volunteer?"

The room was suddenly very quiet, save for a few shuffling feet as a few front-seat Juniors settled themselves into "not me" attitudes. Again Superintendent Edmunds wanted to blow his nose, and refrained.

"Well, then we will begin with the Samaritan. Somehow I think that Samaritan fellow must have been a regular doughboy sort—not afraid of anything he considered to be right, don't you? Of course it would not have taken much courage for a big strong fellow like him to assist a sick friend, but you know the Jews considered themselves above the Samaritans, and did not care to associate with them. You know how that makes a decent fellow feel, even if he is big enough to not get mad over it. But just the same, when he saw the Jew needed a friendly lift, he hastened to give it. Sort of a boy scout too, wasn't he? Now who is going to be Samaritan in our play?"

Six of the nine Juniors raised a right hand. Again Superintendent Edmunds wanted to blow his nose.

"Well, now—that's fine, but you can't all be the Samaritan. We have to stick to the story, you know, and that means we simply have to have the robbers, too."

An hour later, the boys having been dismissed, the Superintendent passed the nine on his way home.

"Gee—you fellows don't think anything about us two guys what have to take the sneaky old robbers' part," blurted one.

"Aw, buckle up and don't be a ninny," advised the to-be-Samaritan.

And this time Superintendent did blow his nose good and hard.

A Prayer

By WILFRED J. GOREHAM

COME to Thee, dear Lord, and pray
That Thou wilt guide me day by day.
Guide my thought, and guide my tongue;
Guide my footsteps as I run
This race of life, which soon must end.

This earthly life is brief, indeed;
And when I see my brother's need
I pray, that I may have the power
To sow the seed, which in this hour
Shall lead him to have faith in Thee.

Japan and the Conference

An Interview with Ambassador Shidehara

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

MY EARLIEST imagination, whenever China was the subject of talk or question, filled in the outlines of any picture of that country or its mysterious people with hoary antiquity. I had a vivid notion that all its buildings were gray with moss and all the men wore long white beards. I pictured the people as buried in a contemplation of the past and living in that past more than in any present.

The same notion also held true of Japan, although perhaps not quite so pronounced. But in any case I never could picture the Japanese people as being quite modern. And until lately I have had difficulty in thinking of Japan or of the Japanese people as I think of other countries or people.

With more or less of this old feeling still clinging to me I approached the Japanese Embassy building one morning. And I must confess that in spite of my United States bringing-up, which bade me stand in no awe of ambassadors or kings, I could not quite shake off the feeling that I was about to mingle with the high and mighty. I ought to have come up those broad steps at the corner of Twentieth and Dupont Circle with a bolder stride if I had only remembered that I had been asked over the telephone to meet Mr. Shidehara, Ambassador Extraordinary from Japan, at noon, promptly. For this making appointments by telephone did not seem to me quite real. We order meat and groceries and ice and coal and a number of things at our house by telephone, but it was a new custom for me to consider meeting Japan's Ambassador that way, just as if it were no more than calling up the daily paper and asking what the score was.

I was ten minutes early, and said so to the young American clerk or attendant or whatever he is called, who asked me very pleasantly if I had an appointment with any one. I said I had with the Ambassador, Mr. Shidehara, but it was not until noon, and I would, of course, wait.

But the young American took the card to a young Japanese sitting at a small desk, and he at once rose and greeted me very pleasantly, and said that Mr. Shidehara was holding a very important conference with Baron Kato, the head of the Japanese delegation, and with others of the party from Japan.

I of course remarked that I was ahead of my time, and also that if my coming was inopportune I would wait for some other appointment. At that the young Japanese with a very polite bow left me and went into the room where the conference was being held, and immediately came out and ushered me into a small room which seemed to have been just newly furnished. There was a very modest desk with only an ink-well and a pad on it, one picture on the walls, a short sofa, three chairs with carved dragon backs, a modest rug, and, as near as I can remember, that was all.

I HAD just made this inventory when Mr. Shidehara came in. I was somewhat expecting, from my rather vague imaginings, to see an old man covered all over with the garments of diplomacy. Instead of that I faced a young man, with a head of the finest black hair I have ever seen. (Inasmuch as most of mine is gone, the only envious moments I ever have are when I meet a man like Mr. Shidehara.) His eyes also were of that brilliant black, not the coal-black sort that have once had fire in them and have gone out, but the kind that still glow with a fire back of them, friendly and warm.

He did not seem to be in the least sort of a hurry or to have anything to worry him on his mind. Indeed, I may say here that he seemed so interested in the question that is now before all the world that he stayed in the little room for half an hour answering the most pointed questions with the greatest frankness and good humor.

I asked him if he had hope that the Conference for Limitation of Armament would really arrive at conclusions that would satisfy the people. His answer was immediate and tremendously serious and open:

"I am greatly optimistic about it all. The time has come to do something for the welfare of mankind."

"Suppose," I said, "that the United States should propose to Japan and the other nations that not a single additional battleship ever be built and not another dollar be spent on military equipment, would Japan agree to that proposal?"

He leaned forward and his black eyes took on a tremendous aspect of consent as he said, "Yes, and we would even go farther."

"Then," I said going one step ahead, "do you have hopes that this great world conference is going to be the first historical step for mankind leading up to world-wide peace?"

"I most certainly do," he said at once. "What possibility is there that your country could ever be attacked by any foreign power? For over one hundred years you have been without a single hostile soldier on your soil" (repeating a sentence he had used in a recent public utterance). "And war must soon be too expensive for the world, to be carried on."

"Is your attitude that of Japan's people in general?"

He smiled again, that smile not of the diplomat but of the statesman, as he said: "We have our Jingoism as"—I think he was near to saying "you have yours," but he was too polite to say it, and went on—"a part of the people who try to create ill-will and keep alive the fear and suspicion. But the great number of Japan's population want peace and an end of war."

I MENTIONED the interesting fact of Madam Yajima, that wonderful woman, ninety years old, President of Japan's W. C. T. U., who had presented to President Harding the petition of 10,000 Japanese women asking for world peace.

And again the black eyes glowed as he said, "Yes, they want war to cease." And after a moment as he looked earnestly at me:

"Japan does not want war. And we are not looking for it. Japan is willing to pay the price for peace. All we want is a chance to live. We have a population of 60,000,000 crowded into a space no larger than one of your small states. We want a chance to live, but we do not want war."

Now I am not skilled in the arts and wiles of diplomacy or double dealing and do not know the animal when I meet him. But if Mr. Shidehara was saying all these astonishing things to me so diplomatically that he did not mean what he said, but just the opposite, then I take off my hat and keep it off before the most colossal exhibition of falsehood disguised as truth that the annals of mankind can boast.

But I do not entertain and never did, the suspicion and fear of Japan that have been fostered and kept alive by sensational writers and professional war-makers in this and other countries. The thing to emphasize now is the growing conviction that so far as Japan's representatives are concerned they are openly for a cessation of war and even for the abolition of it. I, for one, would hesitate to cast one atom of doubt upon their sincerity. And my interview with the Ambassador made me feel as I felt after seeing Mr. Sze, the Chinese Minister. The same spirit seemed to shine out of the faces of these two men. I could not detect a single sign of double dealing or diplomacy in either of them. I believe they keenly sense the feeling of mankind.

AND I believe no man ever voiced a personal conviction more truly than Mr. Shidehara did when he said solemnly as I rose to go:

"Dr. Sheldon, I know that the whole world, the people of all the world, want war to cease. And Japan is going to do her part to bring it about."

Whatever the great gathering does at the last, I shall never forget that parting word of the Japanese Ambassador. He spoke deliberately. He spoke as a representative of a great people. And I believe he also spoke as an individual, voicing the cry of a nation that with all the rest of us has built up a war machine only to find that it is a monster that will destroy its builder if the builder in the end does not destroy it.

From my room as I write I have a magnificent view of the national Capitol dome. It glows with the electric light thrown on it, a thing of beauty and of hope. It looks at times like a frozen thing built up by unearthly hands against a black sky. But oftener it seems to me as I stand at my window, never tiring of the wonderful sight, it glows with a promise of the light of world Peace against a background of stars, and shining all through the night when all the other lower and meaner lights of the city have been extinguished.

If more than two thousand years ago a man was bold enough and optimistic enough to say that "nation would make war against nation no more," surely we who live today ought to cover our heads with shame if we do not have the faith to believe that it can and will come to pass. And if at this time in world history the light should go out that has been kindled by the United States as the place of human freedom, then truly the darkness will prevail over mankind.

But the last thing I saw as I put out the little light in my own room was the Capitol dome glowing majestically, and there was one star directly over the dome that was shining with a radiance that was not borrowed from the earth.

BETWEEN the Capitol building and the White House, Washington presents the most astonishing contrasts between the magnificent and the squalid. Perhaps not more in quantity than any city, since all cities are made up of the slum and the boulevard. But in matter of sharp outline, what for example, could be more startling than the shaft of the Washington Monument and the Congressional Library as I see them from my window, and the old brick saloon that once was, in all its repulsive brazen front, standing at the corner of Tenth and E Streets, and is appropriately used now for selling junk. As the white marble shaft and the dome of the Library, owing to the position which they take from my room, seem to be built close by the side of the junk shop, the whole thing emphasizes the contrasts that Washington is constantly throwing up before the eyes of the visitor, and especially if he is keeping in view as he walks about, any of the history of this city which has seen and made great chapters of human joy and sorrow.

© Underwood & Underwood

Admiral Baron Kato, head of the Japanese delegation

On the way to the Chinese Legation some of these thoughts came trooping in to my mind, and as I passed the corner of Tenth and E Streets I happened to call up a little bit of history not always told in the school text-books, and I turned and went into the junk shop where from the Tenth Street door I could see the front of Ford's Theater where President Lincoln was shot. I wanted to see if the thing was still standing in this old saloon that was there on the night of April 14, 1865.

It was still there, and I felt a thrill of memory as I worked my way through piles of old iron to where it was. A gaudily painted post near what was once the bar of the saloon, and the words on it in large and different colored letters: "Where John Wilkes Booth took his last drink."

These are the words inscribed on that old saloon post, and for more than forty years in the capital city of the United States, on the outside of this same saloon, were the words painted in bold letters, "John Wilkes Booth took his last drink here fifteen minutes before he shot Abraham Lincoln." And the astounding thing about it all to me, as I recalled it all, was the fact that the words were an advertisement of a saloon, not intended to warn the young men of a danger or even to mark a historical spot.

Continued on page 945

A Great Adventure in International Friendship

By ABBY GUNN BAKER

"Come on to tennis" at Yenching College, Peking

JUST at this time when the entire world is pulsating with interest in the Washington Conference, and when Christian people everywhere are praying that it may devise a way whereby World Peace may be attained, a movement has been started which is an Adventure in International Friendship that may mean more toward permanent world peace than all Conferences or Peace Leagues could accomplish, no matter how weighty. The Adventure is one in which every reader of the Christian Herald will be interested, and I am glad that the editors are going to let me tell you the wonderful story.

The story began in the days at the close of the World War, or perhaps I should say that the World War was one medium God used to help the Great Adventure. At all events it was the war which sent people who had never traveled beyond the confines of their native lands out in the highways and byways of many other countries. It led everybody, even Americans, to realize that other lands than their own had ways and customs and institutions which were to be desired.

When the soldiery of the Orient went forth to take their part in the World War, the fiery ordeal brought to them a comprehension of world conditions of which they had never dreamed. East Indian soldiers went back to India to wipe out the curse of caste and to raise the standard of India's womanhood. The Japanese acquired a growing sense of what Christian civilization meant and of what Christian education could mean to the womanhood of Japan. Soldier, student and statesman went back to the old and hoary land of China with a growing conviction that China could never become one of the great nations of the world with an illiterate womanhood.

What was the result when soldier, student and statesman went back to Lucknow and Madras, to Peking and Nanking, to Yokohama and Tokyo with this new vision, this new realization of the possibilities of womanhood? What was the result in lands where for millenniums woman had been regarded as a chattel or a plaything, valuable and protected in a home of wealth, valuable but a mere beast of burden in a home of poverty, and where whether in homes of wealth or poverty custom and superstition held her in the inexorable grip of ignorance and illiteracy?

THAT God was in the Great Adventure, that God had used the war to waken the men of India, China and Japan to the need of education for the women of their lands, there can be no question, for from Madras to Peking, and from Peking to the Japan Inland Sea the women of the Orient, with swift-running feet and outstretched hands, met the new standard the war had created for them. They, the secluded women of India, the eager-eyed daughters of Japan, the illiterate, famished women of China pressed forward and pleaded that educational opportunities be provided for them. That God was in this Great Adventure could not be denied.

For more than half a century He has been moving toward this end in every mission field His Church has established in all the lands of the Orient. Who could doubt that He is in the Great Adventure when we recall that in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred the Oriental woman who has received any but the most rudimentary education has received it in the mission schools of our denominational mission stations? These splendid mission schools—and splendid they are no matter how small, for they have a record of faithfulness that can not be surpassed—have been laying a sure foundation for the great Adventure.

A group of earnest men and women in Great Britain and America heard the cry, the demanding cry, of Oriental women who for ages had struggled in the darkness of ignorance, but who had caught a glimmer of the light. It was the bitter cry of the Long Denied, and it could go no longer unheeded. In response to the call which came from these women of the Orient through the missionaries, this group of men and women determined in the very days when the Great War was beginning to rock the world, in 1914, to unite in a concerted interdenominational effort to give the women of the Orient schools of college grade; schools which would offer to the girls of those lands the same educational advantages that were enjoyed by the girls of Great Britain and America, and would train hosts of Christian leaders, without whom these vast peoples can not be evangelized.

The group of men and women interested, in England and the United States, selected Madras in South India, as one city in which the Great Adventure should be launched. At the college which was established there is a striking example of what real Christian unity can accomplish. The story will be given you in some detail. Twelve mission boards united in starting this college, which was called the Woman's Christian College at Madras. The boards of Great Britain were those of the Church Missionary Society; Church of England Zenana Missionary Society; Church of Scotland, Women's Association for Foreign Missions; London Missionary Society; United Free Church of Scotland, Women's Foreign Mission; Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, Women's Auxiliary. The American and Canadian boards were the Congregational Woman's Board of Missions; Women's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Women's Board of Foreign Missions, Reformed Church in America; Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church in Canada; Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, General Synod, Lutheran Church.

THE Woman's Christian College at Madras was opened, in July, 1915, in an old harem which belonged to a Mohammed gentleman who was willing to lease it. The first class numbered forty girls, Hindus, Christian, Syrian, Anglo-Indian—all so eager, so happy that they could be there. So marvelously has God led! His first good gift to the college was Miss Eleanor McDougall, the trained and skilled teacher from the faculty of London University. She came as President of the school at its very beginning. Other able educators joined her, Edith Coon, M.A., from Mount Holyoke faculty; Mabel Dibell, M.A., from Oxford College, Ohio; and Olive Sarber of the University of Chicago. There also were three teachers from Great Britain.

At the opening of the second year seventy-two girls came up for admission and by that time the school had outgrown its quarters, and by the third year there was no possibility of continuing it in the old harem. What they were to do for larger quarters, they did not know. There are but few opportunities to purchase large properties in India, but just at that time Miss McDougall was told of a wonderful opportunity to secure an estate which would provide the necessary building and a campus for the college. On the banks of the Cooum River, on a street called College Road, though there was no college on all its length, was a great rambling building called Doveton House, in an estate of ten acres, and it was offered for sale for $20,000. Miss Dougall and the other members of the faculty examined the property eagerly. It was exactly what they needed, but $20,000 seemed as unattainable as twenty million.

Where could $20,000 come from unless God opened the windows of Heaven and sent it down to them? The time in which they could have an option on the property was limited, and one afternoon Miss McDougall and another member of the faculty walked sadly through the grounds of the estate, and with almost breaking hearts decided that it was an impossibility. With heavy hearts they returned to the college. As Miss McDougall entered the hall she saw lying on the table a letter with an American postmark. She opened it and read: "I have some wonderful news to tell you; from the estate of Mrs. John D. Rockefeller we are to have help for our Union Christian Colleges, and when you have found a place for the Woman's Christian College at Madras we will send you $25,000 to purchase the property. It can be cabled if needed." Did not God open His Windows of Heaven and send that money?

Of course Doveton House was purchased, the extra $5,000 was spent in equipment, and every year since the college has continued to grow in numbers and influence. Every graduate has gone out a strong, true Christian young woman, and who can measure the power they will exert as the wives and mothers, as teachers, doctors, editors, reformers, and leaders in education and evangelism?

SOME time after the Woman's Union Christian College was established at Madras a committee was formally organized for the purpose of securing co-operation through the women's mission boards of the evangelical denominations of the United States and Canada in their efforts along educational lines for the women of China, India and Japan. From these boards a joint committee on the Union Christian Colleges for the women of the Orient was formed. Seven colleges were accepted by the co-operating boards, as follows:

Ginling College, Nanking, China.
Yenching College, Peking, China.
Woman's Union Medical College, Peking, China.
Woman's Christian College, Madras, India.
Union Missionary Medical School for Women, Vellore, India.
Isabella Thoburn College, Lucknow, India.
Woman's Christian College, Tokio, Japan.

The story of these colleges is as remarkable as is the story of the Union College at Madras. After the American Boards went into the co-operative plan, it was felt that a personal investigation must be made of the colleges. Miss Ellen F. Pendleton, President of Wellesley College, was asked to go to the Orient to make a study of the colleges in Japan and China, and did this work most

A demure student of Isabella Thoburn College, Lucknow

Ancient costumes but a modern occupation—a typewriting group in Woman's Christian College, Tokio thoroughly. She made a careful study, not only of the present standard of the colleges, but their future possibilities. It is significant that upon her return Miss Pendleton gave the colleges she visited her unqualified endorsement. Mrs. Henry W. Peabody of Boston, whose efficient service in missionary enterprises of all denominations has given her an international reputation, was chosen as chairman of the Building Fund Committee, and to her resourceful brain the success so far attained in the enterprise is very largely due.

Both Yenching and Ginling bear the old classic names of the Chinese capitals—Yenching stands for the ancient name of Peking; Ginling for that of the old capital, Nanking. Ginling was founded as one of the Union Christian Colleges in 1915, and is supported by five of the co-operating boards. Thirteen denominations in China placed girls who were attending their schools in Ginling College the year after it opened. It has far outgrown the old palace; the house of Li Hung Chang, with its lovely grounds, where the school was started, and thirty acres have been secured for the new buildings, which they expect to erect for the eager girls of China.

IF I only could tell you of the fine Christian service these girls and the girls at Ginling are doing, you would feel that the colleges are well worth supporting. Smith College is Ginling's American sister college, and the girls at Smith have given substantial proof of their friendship.

The other college in China—Yenching—is at Peking. It was started in 1905, but it was not until 1920 that it became affiliated with the University of Peking and came under our co-operating mission boards. It is called the College of Arts and Sciences for Women of the Peking University. It has a new campus of thirty acres adjoining the University grounds. Mrs. Crane, the wife of the former American Minister at Peking, was so pleased with the work of the college that she gave several scholarships. Wellesley is the sister college of Yenching.

The third of the colleges for Chinese girls under our mission boards is the North China Union Medical College. How sadly it is needed in a land where there is but one doctor to every one million two hundred thousand persons! The college was established in February, 1908, in two rooms of the Methodist Mary Porter Gamewell School, with two students. Last June its graduating class numbered twenty-one, and when the school opened this fall twenty-seven young women, several from Yenching College, were among those who entered to prepare for the medical profession.

The Union Missionary Medical School at Vellore, India, is the one with which the name of Dr. Ida Scudder is indissolubly connected. It was started in 1913, but was not formally opened until August 13, 1918. The government gave a "whole hill" for the site, two hundred acres, and promised one-half the support of the school if six girls could be found who would enter when the school was opened. Sixty-nine girls applied for entrance, and every year since there have been many more applicants than can be admitted. Baptists, Congregationalists, Dutch Reformed and Lutheran Churches co-operate here. One hundred and fifty girls were turned away last year.

THE sixth college in this group is one that for many years was the pride of the Methodist Episcopal Board—the Isabella Thoburn College at Lal Bagh, Lucknow, India. Its history reads like a romance. How the hand of God has guided that school! It started in a mud-walled room in a bazaar at Lucknow, with six children in 1870. It struggled into grammar-school grade with many pupils, and then in 1886 Miss Thoburn secured $10,000 and bought Lal Bagh, a nine-acre estate upon which she added building after building. In 1910 the Hazzard Memorial Building was erected, with many new pupils. In 1915 one of India's terrific cyclonic storms razed the main building, and for a time it seemed as though the college had received its death blow. In the college Jubilee Year, 1920, however, $100,000 was raised by friends in America and India.

Just then the government decided to establish a great university for men at Allahabad, which is to be the Oxford of India, and the Isabella Thoburn College was made the Woman's Department of the University. This opens up vast possibilities for the women of India, and our American Presbyterian and Methodist co-operating boards seized it gladly by making the Isabella Thoburn one of its Union Christian Colleges.

The last of this group is the Woman's Union Christian College of Tokio, Japan. It was opened in the spring of 1918. Japan has thirty-three government universities for her sons, but only one school of college grade for her daughters. It was not surprising, therefore, when the Union Christian College was opened, that one hundred girls came up for the entrance examination, nor that last year more than three hundred girls applied for admittance. Unfortunately, there was not room for half that number. The college began its career on rented ground and in rented quarters, but twenty-four acres in one of the best suburbs of Tokio have been secured, and the Imperial Household of Japan has given the first building. The opportunity for the girls of Japan in this Christian College at Tokio is limitless. Vassar College has become the sister college to Tokio, and Mount Holyoke has adopted three sisters—the colleges at Madras, Vellore and Ginling.

ICAN almost hear the Christian Herald readers saying, "But how, how is all the money to be secured to build and equip seven great colleges?" That is really the best part of the story, for it shows that the Great Adventure is a human need that is met through Divine help.

As many of our readers know, Mr. John D. Rockefeller has created a fund called the Laura Spelman Memorial Fund to be used for purposes in which Mrs. Rockefeller was interested. None of the colleges have had more than a start. When they were taken over by the co-operating mission boards, the problem of housing and equipping them was carefully, and prayerfully, considered. It was found that at the very lowest estimate it would require $3,000,000 to purchase land and erect the buildings for the seven institutions. Where the $3,000,000 was to be obtained was a matter of earnest consultation in the Joint Committee. At last the project was laid before the Trustees of this Memorial Fund, who gave the subject thorough study and, after hearing the reports of the colleges, including Miss Pendleton's statement, they made a generous proposition to the committee.

The proposal was that if the Joint College Board would raise $2,000,000 of the amount required, the remaining $1,000,000 should be given from the Memorial Fund. The offer was eagerly accepted by the Board, and about $500,000 has already been raised, and with the check of $250,000 from the Memorial Fund has gone to the field. The need for the full $3,000,000 is imperative and immediate with the colleges which must build, and for that reason Mrs. Peabody and her committee have put in motion a plan whereby the full amount may be pledged this winter.

There is to be a concerted effort throughout the United States to raise the $1,500,000 required, by what is to be called a "College Day." Through the churches, college clubs and other fraternal organizations, and men and women individually, the campaign will be carried on vigorously. The money can be given in any amount, from one dollar upward, to help in the Great Adventure. Committees are organized in many of the States, and a systematic plan is inaugurated.

In a hundred different cities College Day will be observed by a union morning prayer meeting, to which the women of all the churches of the town will be invited. This will be followed by a luncheon at the leading hotel or some other commodious place, and at which the money or pledges raised for the colleges will be turned in. In some cities the college clubs and alumnae groups will give a College Day Tea in the afternoon of College Day for the purpose of raising funds. A pageant has been written which can be given for a popular evening entertainment wherever that is desirable, and a beautiful illustrated lecture can be furnished.

This is the story and this is the plan to make the Great Adventure in International Friendship a living reality.

Christmas Eternal

THE season of good cheer—of light and laughter and holly wreaths. The season of happiness, of old faces that smile softly through the mist of emotion and young faces that fairly twinkle with mirth. The season of snow and sleighbells and Yule logs and Christmas-trees. But most of all the season of giving!

On the first Christmas Day it was God who gave. He gave the gift of His only begotten Son—a royal gift, a splendid gift, and a supreme gift! He gave His Son to the world and as that Son lay in a lowly manger, wise men came to His baby feet with other gifts. Gold, they brought, and frankincense, and myrrh—the most precious tribute of that time. Gold and frankincense and myrrh meant wealth, then. But the wise men offered them, not for their intrinsic value, but because they wanted to give their very best.

That was how it all started, years ago. And the custom has come down to us—and to all other Christian countries—in many pleasant ways. In many deeply religious and significant ways, too. Of course, Santa Claus has his place—a merry picture of imagination—in many childish hearts. And there are some folk who say that his chubby, rosy-cheeked image has done much to banish the sanctity of the season from the hearts of our little folk. Well perhaps they are right! But I can only quote what my grandmother, whose name I bear, once said to me.

IHAD gone to her, crying—a small girl with a broken ideal. With the tears streaming down my round cheeks, I had sobbed out the bitter truth—that one of my schoolmates had told me there was no Santa Claus. It seemed to me that all magic was dead, at that time—that there was no wonder or thrill, any more, to living.

With a smile on her gentle face my grandmother had lifted me to her black satin knee—she always wore rich black—and had smoothed the tangled hair from my forehead.

"Yes, it's quite true, dear," she told me, "that there isn't any living Santa Claus. There isn't any red-cloaked, white-bearded man who brings gifts to children. Santa Claus is only a charming make-believe. But you mustn't be unhappy! For Santa Claus lives in every soul—as a spirit of good-will and kindness. Santa Claus is a symbol of Christmas eternal that lives in all happy hearts!

That Lives and Flourishes, All Through the Year, in Kind Hearts

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

And I can't think that Santa Claus—remembering my grandmother's silver voice, as she spoke—can really harm the little folk who love him. Even if he is only a figure of imagination. For he stands for the same things that are sacred in our souls—the ideal of good cheer and kindness.

SOME people think that giving is only a Christmas institution—that can sometimes be stretched to cover birthdays and wedding anniversaries. But that is a rather terrible thought to have. God didn't give His only begotten Son for the purpose of setting apart a gift day—He sent Christ to the world to make people better and sweeter to each other, and gentler and tenderer.

The wise men didn't bring gifts to the Holy Babe's feet to establish a gift-day precedent, either. They brought the gifts because—in the fullness of their hearts—they wanted to give. And to give bountifully. And we, who are prone to give gifts on Christmas, and who sometimes ignore the joy of just everyday giving, must get their point of view—if we can!

I'm not telling you, friends of mine, that you must daily shower people with expensive presents—putting them under an uncomfortable obligation and yourself under a great expense. That isn't what I'm trying to say. There are so many ways of giving that don't mean presents, at all. There are ways of giving joy and good cheer—ways of keeping bright the spirit of Christmas Eternal—that have nothing to do with bought presents. There are letters that bring gladness with them, and chance smiles that brighten dull lives. There are words of hope and wisdom, and friendly handclaps and wee bits of heart-warming mirth. And they are gifts in the very real sense of the word!

The joy of giving—the profound pleasure of bestowing something—be it a present of great worth or only some little thing of no particular value—is a gift in itself. It's a gift from the God who gave us the Greatest Gift of All. Imagine how really terrible it must be to get no joy out of giving—just fancy how dull and cheerless your life would be if you had never given a present to anybody!

There's no one in the world who is too poor to give gifts. For the gifts that are most glorious—that most endear folk to their friends and acquaintances—are the gifts that don't cost anything. The gifts that are a part of you—the smiles and the handclaps and the good fellowship that I mentioned before!

THE most Christ-like man I know—a minister whose name is familiar to all of you—is one of the most inveterate givers that I have ever known. He always seems to be giving things to people—his pockets are an all-year-round Santa Claus pack. But though his friends delight in his thoughtfulness, it isn't the presents or the bulging pockets that make them glad to have him for a guest. It's his kind smile and the understanding look in his eyes and the love of everybody that radiates from his soul, that makes the atmosphere of a room seem better and sweeter and cleaner after he has entered it.

Giving gifts—it's a blessing and a privilege. It started—really—at the manger bed centuries ago. And it's come down to us through the ages with a redoubled pull at the heartstrings.

There's a little verse in my mind that has been a legacy to me from some school reader, I think. It goes like this, in part—

"The memory of a kindly word that's long gone by,
The fragrance of a fading flower sent lovingly,
The gleam of a sudden smile, or a sudden tear,
The warmer pressure of a hand, the tone of cheer,
That hush that means: I can not speak, but I have heard

The note that bears only a verse from God's own Word.
Such tiny things we hardly count as ministry.
The givers deeming they have shown scant sympathy.
But when the heart is overwrought, oh, who can tell
The power of such tiny things to make it well?"

This verse is faulty, in spots. The meter isn't always as good as it might be, and the rhymes aren't perfect. But the thought in back of it is so splendid that—if it's carried in a heart—it will mean that Christmas Eternal is dwelling there, also.

And the heart in which Christmas Eternal lives is a gift from God, Himself.

A Stolen Christmas

A Delightful Story of the Season

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

Illustrated by William C. McNulty

"CAREFUL now, John," said Mrs. Mary Gray as her big, tall husband stood on tiptoe and leaned over to fasten a small object on the very top of the Christmas tree.

The object was a gilt paper angel blowing a silver trumpet on which were the words, "Glory to God in the highest!"

John fastened it securely, after several trials. He then came down to a perpendicular, and stepping back, gave a deep sigh, and said:

"How do you like it, Mary?"

"Lovely! Beautiful! Splendid!" said Mary, using up three of her best adjectives at once.

"Well, I hope it will do," replied John soberly.

"Of course it will do. What makes you talk so!" said Mary with a tone of reproach.

"Well, you know it is so different from what it used to be. There are no happy surprises for the children any more. Rob has been teasing for that gun for two months, and he knows he is going to get it. And Dorothy picked out that speaking doll two weeks ago, and she knows what it is. And Paul opened the package containing his automobile when it came up the other day. There's not much fun getting Christmas presents any more. It's an old story by the time you have them."

"You old growler," said Mary. "You are tired. Let's go into the library and rest. The tree itself will be a surprise, won't it? The children don't know about that."

"I hope not," replied John as Mary and he went out and shut the door.

THEY passed through the sitting-room into the library and sat down on opposite sides of a reading table, and Mrs. Gray looked a little anxiously at her husband.

"You don't begrudge the work of giving the children a happy time at Christmas do you, John?"

"Of course not. You wouldn't think so if you saw me getting that tree. I wanted one thing that I got myself, instead of buying it, and you know what a job I had getting it from Fisher's Cove. I believe the children will be surprised when they see it. But it doesn't seem quite natural to light it up in the morning."

"We must, though. We promised them their presents in the morning. You're sure you didn't forget anything?"

"Pretty sure," replied John gravely. "Want me to go over the list? High-class repeating rifle for Rob. Automatic speaking, singing and walking doll for Dorothy. Real gasoline toy engine automobile for Paul. Two pounds of assorted candy for each. Then there is the warship, exact copy of the Kansas, with real guns and powder, for Rob and Paul together. Football and head-gear for Rob. Reflectoscope for Paul. Card-case for Dorothy, and two bottles perfume. 'The Bandit of the Sierras' for Paul. Complete china tea-set for Dorothy, with electric lamps for table. Besides what you hung up for me and what I hung up for you."

"John," said Mary coaxingly. "What was that queer-looking bundle you hung on the big limb near the window? Was that for me?"

"You're as bad as the children," said John laughing. "What do you want to know for?"

"I can't wait till morning, John; tell me."

"No, ma'am. I won't do it. Can't you wait a few hours? It's almost eleven now. The children will be awake in six hours and we will all come down together. That's the plan isn't it?"

"Yes. Oh, well, I can wait. It's something pretty, I hope."

"I hope it is," said John anxiously.

"BECAUSE, John, you remember last Christmas you got me that patented dishwasher that broke everything into bits when you turned the handle."

"That was because I read the directions wrong and turned the thing backwards," said John hastily.

"Well, I hope you have got me something lovely this time. I have yours."

"What is it, Mary? Tell me."

"You're as bad as I am. No, sir. You'll have to wait. There's one thing I feel sorry about. I wish you hadn't got that gun for Rob. I'm in mortal terror he will shoot himself or somebody else."

"Of course not. If he is going to be an American citizen he has got to learn how to handle firearms. He may be a brigadier-general or an admiral some day."

"I hope not, John. Besides, I have been wondering a little lately if guns and warships are appropriate Christmas presents."

"Oh, pshaw, Mary. Anything is appropriate if you have the money to get it. The main thing about Christmas time is getting something. The bother is to know what to get. The gun won't hurt Rob any more than the candy."

"You got too much of that. Just think, John, two pounds apiece. And Uncle Terry always sends in such a lot of candy every Christmas."

"Oh, well, we can give some of it to Lizzie. She never has enough. Or else send it out to the poor-farm."

"Oh, John!" broke in Mary, wringing her hands and crying hysterically. "Tell the man it is our tree, our tree, our Christmas tree that's gone!"

"Yes, that's what we will do," said Mary.

"Well," said John as he rose, yawning, "let's have one more look at the tree before we go up."

He and his wife went to the door and opened it. John turned on the electric light and he and Mary stepped into the room.

AT FIRST they could not grasp the plain fact. John rubbed his eyes and opened them again. Mary ran forward with a sudden cry, and then stood still in the middle of the room.

The Christmas tree was gone, and everything that had been hung on it and placed at its foot! Not a thing was left except a few broken strings of popcorn, two or three wax candles, a shred or two of gaudy tinsel and bits of evergreen. The tree itself was simply gone, and Mary ran forward to the big window that opened on the side veranda. It stood wide open, and other fragments of the tree and its trimmings were littered on the broad window-sill. In the middle of the sill, resting calmly on its side, was the gilt paper angel and its trumpet, the only thing left behind intact.

"John, oh, John, some one has stolen our tree!" cried Mary as the full enormity of the event became clear. She ran to the open window but John was there before her. He leaped out upon the veranda. Bits of evergreen and small strings of popcorn showed which way the thief or thieves had gone, straight across the lawn, out to the middle of the road, and there the trail ceased.

"They had a wagon!" gasped John.

Mary had followed to the edge of the curb.

"Quick, John! Run in and telephone to the police station. They may catch them yet. Oh, to think of our Christmas—"

John was already in the house snatching at the receiver.

DID you ever have to telephone to a fire station that your house was afire and you wanted the department to hurry up before the house was burned to the ground? Then you can sympathize with John Gray on this Christmas eve as he waits what seems to him like a whole hour before he hears a lazy voice say, "Yes, this is the police station."

"Say! Send a man or two right out here quick. Someone has stolen our Christmas."

"What!"

"Send some one right out here quick. Our Christmas has been robbed, stolen, do you hear?"

"Yes. Stolen! What has been stolen?"

"Christmas!"

"Christmas what!"

"Oh, John!" broke in Mary, wringing her hands and crying hysterically. "Tell the man it is our tree, our tree, our Christmas tree that's gone."

"Tree!" roared John. "Christmas tree. Some one has stolen our Christmas tree. Do you get that?"

"Free?" came over the wire.

"No. Tree! Tree! Christmas tree! Send some one right out here will you?"

"Out where?"

"Out here!"

"Where is it?"

"Oh, give him the name and number, John."

Mary cried again.

"John Gray. 719

Plymouth Avenue.

Come quick, won't you?"

"All right. Be out there with the patrol."

JOHAN hung up the receiver and turned to Mary. She had sunk into a chair and was sobbing. At the sight, John began to recover some of his wits.

"Don't cry, Mary. The police will get them. They can't have much of a start."

"But who could steal a Christmas tree? It might be some prank of the Raymond boys."

"No, I don't believe they would do that. Besides, you know Raymond never lets them stay out after nine o'clock and here it is nearly midnight."

"What shall we do? How can we keep Christmas? To think of all those presents—"

Mary broke down again at the thought. "I hope the six-shooter and the warship will go off together and kill 'em," said John vindictively and ambiguously.

"And there was your present to me," said Mary with a groan. "Now I shall never get it."

"Maybe you will. I can get another."

"Oh, why couldn't you go down town and buy some more things!" cried Mary suddenly starting up.

"Too late," John replied gloomily. "Besides the stores are all closing up. And more besides. I haven't the money to buy any more six-shooters and real toy automobiles."

"But what will the children do?" asked Mary desperately. "Here we are without a single thing for them. It will break their hearts to have a Christmas and no presents."

"Maybe we could borrow a few of the Morgans. They always have stacks more than they need."

Mary was about to reply indignantly to this levity on John's part when the patrol rushed up. Two officers came in and John and Mary answered questions and showed them the place where the tree had stood, and where they were sitting when it was stolen, and where all traces of it had ceased in the road.

AFTER the officers had examined all the evidence and had departed, after solemn promises to do all in their power to catch the guilty, John and Mary heard the clock strike the half hour.

"We shall never see that tree again," said Mary calmly. "Now what shall we do? We must have something for the children. I am going to make some candy."

"It's half after midnight," said John.

"I don't care. I can make some from mother's recipe, in the chafing-dish."

Mary went out into the kitchen, and John, after standing irresolute a minute, went up-stairs.

He peeped into the boys' bedroom as he turned on the hall light. They were sleeping peacefully, and on Rob's placid face there was anything but the warlike look of a brigadier-general or an admiral.

Mr. Gray turned out the light, and went on up another flight of stairs to his den. He sat down to an old desk and pulled out various drawers and took out half a dozen articles, wrapping each one up carefully and marking them with the children's names. He gathered them all up and came down-stairs with them.

Mary was busy over the chafing-dish.

"I've thought of a plan," said John, spreading out the articles on the table. "You put the candy in their stockings and one of these in each. Then we'll hide the rest somewhere and ask them to find them after dinner. There's that Chinese god Colfax sent me last year from Tientsin, and the little box of Japanese water flowers that has never been opened, and the Fairy-tales Graves sent us from Tokio. I've been keeping them for rainy days, and the children have never seen them."

"Just the thing!" exclaimed Mary with enthusiasm. "Oh, John, you are the brightest man except when at the telephone. I never knew you to get a message straight. But what shall we tell the children about the tree?"

"Tell them the truth," said John wisely. "The excitement will keep them from thinking about their loss."

THAT was the strangest Christmas the Gray family had ever spent. Before five o'clock three children were sitting up wide awake. Rob whispered to his brother.

"I know what they've got. A tree. Father tried to sneak it into the barn two nights ago, but I saw him. Let's go down and turn on the light before father and mother wake up. I want to see my gun."

"And I want to start my automobile," said Paul, hastily climbing out of bed.

"And I want to wind up my doll and hear it cry," said Dorothy.

The three white figures stole down-stairs with no more noise than that made by Rob as he fell over a rug in the hall.

They opened the door into the parlor and turned on the light and stared. Instead of a beautiful tree they saw the well-known furniture of the room and nothing else, except three stockings hanging from the parlor mantel.

Their astonished exclamations awakened their parents.

When they came down the matter was explained. The boys looked very sober. But as the family sat down to breakfast, Dorothy relieved the seriousness by leaving her place, going over to her father and saying:

"What if those wicked men had shot you and mother. That would have been even worse, wouldn't it?"

"I believe it would, for us," said John Gray with a laugh which changed into a half-sob when Dorothy put her arms around his neck and kissed him.

They were still at breakfast when their nearest neighbor, Mark Raymond, came in.

"Just reading about your loss in the paper! It's the meanest thing I ever heard of. But I've found one of the things. I was out early and saw this bundle lying close in by the curb in front of my house, and it has your name written on it, Mrs. Gray."

"Oh, my present!" exclaimed Mary. It was the queer-shaped package she had asked John about. She hastily cut the string and unwrapped the package.

"What is it?" she said when it was uncovered.

"It's a combination towel-rack and shaving-mirror and—"

BUT that was about as far as John got. Everybody roared, Mark Raymond with the rest. Rob got hold of the combination and tried to work it, and something caught his fingers and pinched them. They they all roared again, except Rob. Mary laughed until she cried. When they could not laugh any more, Mark Raymond rose to go.

"Well, no use to wish you folks a Merry Christmas. You seem to be having one all right."

"We've got one another," said Mary, looking mischievously at John. "I don't believe any other man in town is like mine to buy his wife a towel-rack and shaving-mirror combined."

John looked a little disturbed at first, then his face cleared up.

"Same here, Raymond. My wife is different from all the rest. She can take a joke even when it isn't meant."

Raymond looked at Gray with hesitation. Then he spoke suddenly.

"Say, Gray, can you—would you and Mrs. Gray go to church this morning if you had an invitation?"

"Church!"

"Yes. You see I belong to the Brotherhood at Strong's Church. You know Strong. Well, he is holding a Christmas morning service. Lots of good music and a short sermon. Mr. Vinge plays the organ. The English have Christmas Day services in their churches, and everybody goes."

John Gray looked undecided.

"Oh, I don't know. I'm not much of a church-goer, as you know, Raymond."

"That's the reason I'm asking you," said Raymond with a smile. "Be delighted to have you come. Both of you."

"Why not?" said Mrs. Gray. "Lizzie will get dinner. No one has stolen our turkey. I saw it go into the oven. And I like to hear Strong."

Rob spoke up eagerly. "Did you say Mr. Vinge is going to play the organ?"

"Yes," said Raymond.

"I want to hear him," said Rob, who was music-loving in spite of his warlike proclivities. "Can't I go?"

"Me, too," chimed in Paul.

"I won't stay here alone. I want to go," said Dorothy.

A Christmas Prayer

ACROSS the floor of my room shine the rays of the morning star. Soon, O Christ, it will be dawn, and the world will waken to celebrate once more the day of Thy birth. Here, on my knees, I ask a boon—for myself—for all men.

Teach us to pray, not selfishly, but that we may know contentment.

If the drifting days bring unhappiness, the sorrow of separation, grant that we may meet them with the knowledge that Thou art love.

Give us youth in our hearts.

Grant that we may walk the days with love towards our fellow-men, like unto the Divine love that Thou hast towards us.

Teach us to be humble—to play our part where we stand, doing the most we can with what gifts Thou has given unto us.

Grant unto us the gift of good cheer, so that we may bring light and happiness into the lives of others.

Grant unto us, also, the gift of giving, not waiting for the material things of this world, but that we may give of ourselves—a perfect sacrifice before Thee.

Give us respect for our elders.

Grant unto us the gift of charity.

Give us the gift of loving kindness and patience, that we may be tender with those dependent upon us; little children, and those friends of mankind, the dumb animals.

Make us loyal to thee, and to those whom we serve, and who would serve us.

Teach us that we may be truthful to our best ideals, for if we are fair to ourselves, we can be false to no man.

In the name of Thy Son, I pray this Christmas morning, sure in the knowledge that Thou wilt harken unto me, and grant my prayer. AMEN.

"We'll all go," said Mary decidedly.

"I don't care," said John, laughing. "It's a queer Christmas to start with and might as well be queer to go on with. I never went to church on Christmas in my life."

"Won't hurt you," said Raymond much pleased.

"Sit with my folks. We are all going."

SO AN hour later John Gray and his wife and their children were in church with their neighbors, the Raymonds.

John Gray felt a little bewildered. But he had been more or less bewildered since he opened the parlor door to find the Christmas-tree stolen. As the service went on, the beauty of it crept in upon him. The church was trimmed with wreaths, and up near the pulpit was a tree, shapely and benignant, with no presents on it, but lighted with small electric lamps and tinged with white. Vinge, the blind organist, sat at his beloved instrument. What melody flowed out of it! The Christmas glory flooded his keys.

John glanced at his wife. Her face was wrapped with tender feeling. "Glory to God in the highest," sang the children's choir. The fresh, young voices were fragrant of Bethlehem and the nativity. Gray looked along at his children. Rob, the warlike, was lost to all the world, his boyish face upturned to catch all sound, his eyes fixed on Vinge, his soul caught in the meshes of that blind man's harmony. Something choked John Gray. What if some time his boy should be a great organ player! What fine children God had given him!

His glance came back to his wife. What a lovely face she had. What a beautiful mother she had always been. How devoted to her husband. How proud of him in spite of his awkward blunders and his many faults. He quietly reached for her hand, and thrilled at the clasp of her warm, firm fingers. She smiled at him and then together they listened to Phillip Brooks' most beautiful hymn, "O little town of Bethlehem, How still we see thee lie—" and again a little later in the service they joined their voices with the congregation, as they sang,

"Angels from the realms of glory Wing your flight o'er all the earth—"

Then the sermon touched them. Even the children could understand it, it was so simple, and so clear in telling what Christ meant to the earth.

WHEN the service closed in a quiet moment of worship, the people rose silently and went out. At the door Gray exchanged greetings with several friends, and as he walked along home, said to his wife:

"Say, Mary, I liked that. Wonder why the churches in America don't have Christmas Day services more generally."

"It meant more than I can tell, to me, John. Somehow I feel younger and happier. Doesn't that seem queer, when all our presents are stolen except mine?"

They both laughed.

"We have each other," said John gently.

"And the children," said Mary.

"And the children," said John.

After dinner, the children hunted for the other articles their father had hidden. They were simple things, saved for rainy-day use, but they were real surprises. On going near the big window in search for her present, Dorothy discovered the gilt angel with the trumpet. It had lain peacefully there during all the excitement.

Mrs. Gray put it on the mantel over the clock. Later in the day while the children were out in the kitchen cracking some nuts Rob had stored in the barn last fall, she said to John, "I believe that angel has something to do with our happiness. Doesn't it seem strange to you, John? It was a dreadful loss, but we don't seem to be feeling so dreadful about it. After all the boys never got the gun or the warship. And they don't seem to feel so very bad."

A SHOUT of laughter came from the kitchen, where some of the Raymond children were visiting with the Grays and showing them their presents. And they could hear Dorothy say in a tone of superiority—"But that's nothing. We had a burglar in our house last night."

"It does seem strange," said John. "The police just phoned up that they can get no clue to the robbery. It's been a very queer Christmas. Mary, what were you going to give me in exchange for the towel rack?"

"Go up into your den and find it," said Mary shyly.

John went up, two steps at a time.

On his writing-desk he found it. A photograph of his wife framed in an old gold, oval frame which had belonged to her mother.

When he came down he was met by Mary at the foot of the stairs.

"Oh, John, do you like it? And it's a surprise to me, too. I thought it was gone with the rest. But when you went through the window I saw my present to you on the veranda, and saved it for a surprise. Do you know another woman in town who wouldn't have told?"

"No, I don't. And I don't know another like you in any way." And John kissed his wife, who actually blushed for happiness.

LATER in the evening as the family sat in front of the fire eating nuts and apples, Mrs. Gray asked Dorothy to go into the library and bring a box she would find on the big table.

When it was brought in, Mrs. Gray asked Dorothy to open it. Faded tissue-paper wrappings came off. And there lay an old-fashioned doll dressed in India muslin, with quaint ribbons under a Converse hat. Dorothy was overcome. Mary whispered to John—"Bessie's doll. I haven't had the heart to give it to any one until today."

A tear fell on John's hand as the memory of their first child crept into the firelight and softened the glow of that new Christmas. Later when the children were asleep, Dorothy hugging the India muslin doll up to her cheek, John said to Mary as they came down and sat by the fire again.

"After all, we have had a beautiful day, Mary. We have one another."

"And the children," said Mary.

And the firelight flung a flame a little higher than the rest so that the trumpet of the gilt angel stood out very clear with the words, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased."

Then there stole into the hearts of John Gray and Mary Gray, his wife, at the close of that blessed Christmas Day something more like the Peace of God than they had ever known. The Child Christ meant more to them than He had ever meant. And in their hearts they both yearned for a better life, glorified by Him Who is the peace of those whose hearts are restless and the joy of those whose hearts are sad.

The Editorial Forum

DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON
Editor-in-Chief

RAE D. HENKLE
Managing Editor

DR. GEORGE H. SANDISON
Editor Emeritus

Help Russia's Starving

ON ANOTHER page of this issue of the Christian Herald will be found an advertisement of the Russian Famine Fund. It is authorized by a large committee of American men and women of prominence, among whom will be found representatives of all creeds and all nationalities. They are united in this appeal by reason of their deep sympathy for millions of starving peasants in the great Volga basin—peasants who have had a year's crop failure and who now are in a condition where only American charity can save them from death.

The famine in Russia is one of the worst in history. It is comparable only with the great catastrophe which descended on China a year ago and which the readers and friends of the Christian Herald did so much to relieve. Available surveys show that millions—some estimates place the number at 15,000,000—people are directly affected by the food failure. President Harding called attention to the tragedy in his annual message to Congress and urged a governmental appropriation to assist in the relief efforts which are now in progress.

Administration of the money collected by the Russian Famine Fund will be in the hands of the American Friends' Service Committee which made such a wonderful record of relief the last two years in Central Europe and which is a member of the European Relief Council brought into being largely as the result of Herbert Hoover's efforts. The Friends' are now on the ground with their representatives spread all through the famine district. They have pledged themselves to take under their care and carry through the famine period a minimum of 50,000 boys and girls. How many more they can add to this number depends on the willingness of the American people to back them up with contributions. A dollar will save one of these children for a month. They are asking the people of this country to place $5,000,000 at their disposal. That doesn't seem such a huge sum to spend for human life.

It is interesting to recall that the readers of the Christian Herald, provided the first international relief that ever went into Russia when this magazine sent a cargo of flour to combat the serious famine in that country in 1891.

We believe you will want to have a large part in saving the children of Russia today. It is a desperate need. If your heart prompts you to help, send your contribution in any amount, no matter how small, to the Christian Herald.

It will be forwarded to the treasurer of the national committee and be made available at once for the work of the Friends in the stricken district. All contributions will be promptly receipted for.

International Good-Will

ONE of the most astonishing things about the Washington Conference was the constant use of terms that conveyed the idea of friendship and good-will. Of course, the pessimist and the professional diplomat understood that all those expressions were the usual language of diplomacy and really meant nothing when it came to real feeling of the delegates towards one another. In other words these pessimists would say the delegates smiled at one another but kept their daggers conveniently concealed under their sleeves ready to use them when any one's back was turned.

But it is a monstrous thing to charge all humanity with deceit and double dealing. If anything was clear at the beginning of the Conference, it was the absolute sincerity and humane desire of President Harding and Secretary Hughes. Could anything be finer than President Harding's sentence in his address of welcome to the Conference when he said, "We only wish to do WITH YOU that finer, nobler thing which no nation can do alone." And what could any one wish for more than Secretary Hughes' impassioned sentence to the delegates,—"If you desire, most ardently and wholly desire peace, the peace will be enduring!" And what could any one ask for more clear, even to Germany, than Premier Briand's appeal in the last speech he made in New York just before leaving for France, when he said, "I am quite sure if all men of good-will joined in endeavor, the fear that weighs on the world at the present time would be determinedly dispelled. Gentlemen" (and he was speaking to Germans), "France is lying in wait for any gesture of GOOD-WILL on the part of Germany."

If a Frenchman could say that to Germans, and really mean it, is it not at least some hint of a new spirit coming into international relations? And is it not the most tremendous need of the nations at this Christmas season to create and maintain the spirit of GOOD-WILL? For after all, that will do what no diplomacy or even statesmanship will do at the present time in the world's eventful making of history.

The New Era in Ireland

ON BOTH sides of the Atlantic the news that the long dispute over the status of Ireland is at last definitely settled, has been received with genuine gratification. After months of negotiation—which at times seemed far from hopeful—a satisfactory conclusion was reached and an Agreement signed by representatives of the British and Irish governments on December 6, in the historic room at No. 10 Downing Street, London. It officially recognizes the "Irish Free State" as the title and designation of the newly created government. It will enjoy the same wide privileges and powers as are exercised in the Dominion of Canada, the Australian Commonwealth, the Dominion of New Zealand and the South African Union. It will have its own parliament to enact its laws, and its own Executive. It will bear the same relations to the Imperial parliament and government as the group of four governments already named. It will exercise supreme control over its own finances, accepting, however, responsibility for its proportion of the British National War Debt. The "Irish Free State" will also give reasonable guarantees to the Unionist minority. The new state will still be a loyal part of the British Empire, accepting certain imperial obligations; but in its own domain and over its own affairs, its authority will be complete.

Ulster is left to choose between union with the "Irish Free State," or retaining her own status, and agreeing to rectification of her frontier.

Thus passes one of the most trying periods in both British and Irish history. The Agreement is regarded by the British people and press, and by the people of the new "Free State" as in many senses the greatest historic document in a thousand years. That a satisfactory conclusion was reached is due to the spirit of conciliation which led to concessions on both sides, and also to the conviction that the time had come for redressing ancient wrong, and recognizing the validity of Ireland's claim for self-government.

The Irish people have now their great opportunity. With their brains and characteristic ability, we shall expect to see them take hold of the work that lies before them in the best spirit. Ireland has been a factor in the development and progress of other lands, including our own. With harmonious councils and good leadership, the "Irish Free State" can look forward to an illustrious future among the progressive peoples. Now that the long strife is ended, let us sincerely hope that all antagonisms will be forgotten, and harmonious relations firmly established.

The Need of Revival

IN a recent national gathering in Manchester, England, the Christian Herald's valued contributor, Rev. J. H. Jowett, gave expression to the general hope and expectation of a wide-spread revival. The need of an outpouring of the Holy Spirit is felt there—as deeply as we here in America feel it—to be the "one thing lacking," and for which the whole of Christendom is earnestly praying. "I am waiting," he said, "for a vessel long overdue, coming across the mystic waves, that is not freighted with triviality and frivolity. I am looking for a vessel coming across those waters, which shall be to me an argosy of light and truth."

There are thousands of earnest ministers of the Gospel in this expectant attitude. Some are looking for a prophet. Rev. William Pierson Merrill is one of the watchers in our American churches. "If once there shall be a deep and fervent desire," he says, "to see the truth of God and to know the right, the prophets will come. It is our place to be ready whenever they appear."

Our churches are praying for revival. Our Prayer Leagues and other Christian organizations are beseeching the Throne for a great baptism of the Spirit. In countless homes earnest men and women are pleading for a time of general awakening and refreshing. Never were so many prayers ascending as now. Shall we not keep on praying until the answer comes, through our very impurity?

Remember the Watch Night of Prayer (Dec. 31) the Week of Prayer (Jan. 1-7) and make the coming year a whole year of daily prayer for the conversion of the world. If all of God's people do this, the revival will come.

The New Christmas Spirit

IT SEEMS, this Christmas, as if a breath of angel song, wafted from across the centuries, is creeping into our souls. The heart of the world is growing kinder and softer—as the hearts of men grow in the light of a shining star. The glorious message of "Peace on earth, good-will toward men," is taking on a new and splendid meaning.

From the blood-drenched battlefields, from the horrors and doubts of war, we have come to a newer understanding of the Power and the Glory. A conference of quiet men—thinkers rather than fighters—is even now planning for the peace of the human race, and for the prosperity of nations. The sword is being laid by—the plow is again being lifted in eager hands. Love and pity, brotherly kindness and helpfulness are stirring in all hearts. We can not help feeling that song will again sound on weary lips; that flowers will grow where trenches have been; that workmen will learn content, and that rulers will know only worthy ambitions. We feel that the earth is ready to throw away the chains of an ancient bondage.

On this Christmas—with a new hope arising like the dawn—we can feel the same exultant thrill that the shepherds felt as they knelt at the Holy Child's feet. And we can feel that the Holy Child was not born in vain!

The President's Message

TO THE average reader, Presidents' messages, with occasional exceptions, have a marked similarity. Mr. Harding has the fortunate faculty of investing his messages with human feeling. In the message of December 6th to Congress, there are many passages of this character which give it a deeper interest than is usually accorded to statutory official documents. He opens by disavowing any purpose of a world-restoration program; that he regards as the business of the nations immediately concerned, and they must work it out for themselves. But we are ready to help them through the struggle, and will do so unselfishly.

It is not our purpose to discuss the various propositions of the message in rotation, but rather to indicate those points which illustrate how strongly the President has at heart justice and the common good.

While recognizing as indisputable the right of labor to organize, he takes the view, which the Christian Herald has repeatedly emphasized, that in a considerable proportion of the troubles that arise between labor and capital, when strikes occur, the involuntary sufferers are the non-participant public who have no means of protection.

In another paragraph we are reminded of the President's phrase: "The pyramid of our society, which he evidently regards as a structure that can not have a more substantial basis than the soil, as 'the farmer feeds them all.'" He advocates the promotion of farmers' markets, not only that the producer may receive better rates for his labor, but to lighten the cost for the ultimate consumer.

There are other outstanding features in the message that give evidence of a close and conscientious study of public affairs. He suggests that Congress push reclamation work on the 20,000,000 acres of government domain still unallotted, and that the question of providing farms for our returned soldiers be given serious consideration. He also urges greater energy in home-making legislation, and believes it possible to conduct such work "without injurious competition with established activities." He has a word of encouragement for the American relief workers among the famine sufferers in Russia, and recommends an appropriation to supply 10,000,000 bushels of corn, and 1,000,000 bushels of seed grains for spring planting in the famine areas.

Leading problems that call for congressional action are discussed in the message. Finance, refunding of our war loans, the merits of a flexible tariff, the freight rate problem and others, receive attention. The subject of taxation he will take up in a future message.

He evidently considers it well to wait for further developments before discussing the Disarmament Conference. But he does not let the opportunity pass without expressing the strongest hope for the Conference's work. "It is easy to believe a world hope is centered on this capital city," he says in conclusion; "a most gratifying world accomplishment is not improbable," clearly suggesting that he has the strong expectation that this government will have the satisfaction of knowing it has furnished at least the basis or foundation for world peace, although we must wait patiently for the full accomplishment.

The World News of the Week

Peace Envoys Sign Agreement Creating "Irish Free State"

THE long months of negotiation between British and Irish peace envoys at last have been crowned with success through the signing of an agreement creating the "Irish Free State," marking one of history's greatest triumphs for the principle of settling conflicts through negotiation instead of resort to armed force. The agreement was reached after the Sinn Fein Cabinet had rejected what was considered the final offer of the British Government, and at a time when the public expected at any moment an announcement of the rupture of the parleys.

Facing a return to a state of warfare, the envoys joined in a last despairing effort to find a solution of the centuries-old conflict. The British representatives conferred, submitted their decisions to a full meeting of the British Cabinet, and then held a four-hour session with the Irish delegates, at which they offered certain modifications in the proposals previously rejected by the Sinn Fein Cabinet. Late that night, after earnest consultations, the Sinn Fein spokesman returned to No. 10 Downing Street, and after three hours of further discussion, in which it was made plain the British Government was offering its ultimate concession, they signed the peace agreement, the first paragraph of which reads:

"Ireland shall have the same constitutional status in the community of nations known as the British Empire as the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, and the Union of South Africa, with a Parliament having powers to make laws for the peace and order and good government of Ireland, and an Executive responsible to that Parliament, and shall be styled and known as the Irish Free State."

But the signing of the agreement does not insure peace in Ireland. It has yet to be ratified by the Dail Eireann, the Sinn Fein Parliament. The Sinn Fein Cabinet is divided as to acceptance, and Eamon de Valera, titular head of the Sinn Fein, has issued a statement denouncing the agreement as "in violent conflict with the wishes of the majority of this nation" and in this stand he is supported by two members of the Cabinet. It was believed in London that the Dail Eireann would ratify despite his opposition, as it has appeared for several months that de Valera had lost the actual leadership, but his following may be strong enough to cause much trouble. The British Parliament and the Sinn Fein have been summoned to meet on the same day to pass on the agreement. Ulster's consent is not necessary to put the pact into effect, but Sir James Craig, the Ulster Premier, advised against hasty action and made a trip to London to clear up with Premier Lloyd George points regarding which he was in doubt.

Two of the questions on which the peace envoys had the greatest difficulty in reaching an agreement were the status of Ulster and the oath of allegiance. The latter problem was solved by a special form of oath in which the members of the Irish Parliament swear true faith and allegiance to the Constitution of the Irish Free State and to be "faithful to his Majesty King George V, and his heirs and successors by law, in virtue of the common citizenship of Ireland with Great Britain and her adherence to and membership of the group of nations forming the British Commonwealth of Nations."

As to Ulster, it is provided that the Government of Ireland act of 1920 is to remain in force so far as the northern Parliament is concerned should she refuse to accept the agreement, but there is a stipulation for the creation of a special commission to determine the boundaries for northern Ireland. Since Ireland is treated as a single entity, provisions also are made for the co-operation of the two Irish Parliaments in establishing certain safeguards if Ulster declines to enter the Irish Free State. Neither Parliament will be permitted to make laws endowing any particular religion or to impose any religious disability.

A representative of the Crown in Ireland is to be appointed in like manner as the governor-general of Canada; the Irish state assumes responsibility for a share of the public debt of the United Kingdom; it is authorized to organize a military defense force and to undertake its own coastal defense, but is to accord harbor and other facilities to the British forces as stipulated in an annex, and in time of war or strained relations is to allow such defense facilities as the British Government may require.

Congress Resumes Work

RECOMMENDATIONS for a flexible tariff and for legislation to regulate labor disputes were two of the high spots of President Harding's message to Congress, delivered in person to a distinguished assemblage, which included not only the lawmakers and high officials of the American Government but the statesmen from Europe and the Orient who are in attendance on the Washington Conference.

In urging that a way be found to make the tariff flexible and elastic, so that rates may be adjusted to meet unusual and changing conditions which cannot be anticipated exactly because of disturbed economic conditions all over the world, the President suggested

The Appropriation Pie

United States Appropriations, 1920

| | | |
|-----------------------------------|-----------------|------|
| I. Past Wars | $3,855,482,586 | 68% |
| II. Future Wars | 1,424,138,677 | 25% |
| III. Civil Departments | 181,087,225 | 3% |
| IV. Public Works | 168,203,557 | 3% |
| V. Research, Education and Health | 57,093,661 | 1% |
| Total | $5,686,005,706 | 100% |

(Figures furnished by Dr. Edward B. Ross, of the United States Bureau of Standards)

The data for the fiscal years 1921 and 1922 are not yet available.

the extension of the powers of the Tariff Commission to permit a scientific and wholly just administration of the law. To surmount constitutional difficulties, he proposed that the President be authorized to proclaim higher or lower duties to meet conditions which Congress may designate, and promised to exercise this power only on recommendation of the Commission. This involves a revolution in American tariff practices, but the comments of Republican leaders showed there was a strong chance of the President receiving the authority he requested.

Mr. Harding's labor proposals evoked immediate attacks from Samuel Gompers and other union leaders, despite the fact that he gave only a general outline of what he wished to accomplish. Declaring that "it is not desirable that a labor organization shall be permitted to exact unfair terms of employment or subject the public to actual distresses in order to enforce its terms," the President added:

HISTORIC BIBLE PRESENTED BY MARSHAL FOCH

It was the pulpit Bible of the Protestant church in Rheims, and was one of the few objects in the structure to come through the German bombardment. The Marshal presented it to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, at a reception in his honor, in recognition of the aid given by the Protestant Churches of America to the people of France's devastated regions

"As we have great bodies of law carefully regulating the organization and operations of industrial and financial corporations, as we have treaties and compacts among nations which look to the settlement of differences without the necessity of conflict in arms, so we might well have plans of conference, of common counsel, of mediation, arbitration and judicial determination in controversies between labor and capital. To accomplish this would involve the necessity to develop a thorough-going code of practice in dealing with such affairs. It might be well to frankly set forth the superior interest of the community as a whole to either the labor group or the capital group. With rights, privileges of immunities and modes of organization thus carefully defined, it should be possible to set up judicial or quasi judicial tribunals for the consideration and determination of all disputes which menace the public welfare.

"In an industrial society such as ours, the strike, the lockout and the boycott are as much out of place and as disastrous in their results as is war or armed revolution in the domain of politics. The same disposition to reasonableness, to conciliation, to recognition of the other side's point of view, the same provision of fair and recognized tribunals and processes ought to make it possible to solve the one set of questions as easily as the other. I believe the solution is possible.

"The consideration of such a policy would necessitate the exercise of care and deliberation in the construction of a code and a charter of elemental rights, dealing with the relations of employer and employee. This foundation in the law, dealing with the modern conditions of social and economic life, would hasten the building of the temple of peace in industry which a rejoicing nation would acclaim."

Four-Power Treaty Arranged

A TREATY putting into the discard the Anglo-Japanese alliance and pledging the United States, the British Empire, France and Japan to respect each other's insular possessions and dominions in the Pacific Ocean and to have recourse to mediation in case of disputes concerning those possessions has been negotiated at the Washington Conference and has been initiated by the representatives of the four Powers. The formal signing of the treaty by the United States is subject to the making of a convention with Japan concerning Yap and other mandated islands in the Pacific, but Senator Lodge announced that the negotiations with regard to this were almost concluded.

The treaty is of such great importance that its terms deserve careful reading. Its four articles are as follows:

Article 1. The high contracting parties agree as between themselves to respect their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the regions of the Pacific Ocean. If there should develop between any of the high contracting parties a controversy arising out of any Pacific question and involving their said rights which is not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy and is likely to affect the harmonious accord now happily subsisting between them, they shall invite the high contracting parties to a joint conference to which the whole subject will be referred for consideration and adjustment.

Article 2. If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly and separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

Article 3. This agreement shall remain in force for ten years from the time it shall take effect, and after the expiration of said period it shall continue to be in force subject to the right of any of the high contracting parties to terminate it upon twelve months' notice.

Article 4. This agreement shall be ratified as soon as possible in accordance with the constitutional methods of the high contracting parties, and shall take effect on the deposit of ratifications, which shall take place at Washington, and thereupon the agreement between Great Britain and Japan which was concluded at London on July 13, 1911, shall terminate.

Senator Lodge, in announcing the negotiation of the treaty, called attention to the fact that it did not affect questions within the domestic jurisdiction of the Powers and declared that "no military or naval sanction lurked anywhere in the background or under the cover of these plain and direct clauses."

Comment among Senators of both parties indicated that there probably would be no great difficulty in obtaining the votes necessary for ratification, although some Senators have announced their determination to wage a hard fight against the treaty.

Progress has been made toward a settlement of the Chinese problems, although much remains to be accomplished. In committee a resolution was adopted pledging the nine powers represented not to enter into an agreement or understanding, either individually or collectively, which would impair the four Root principles which form the basis of the discussions regarding China. Little progress has been reported in the negotiations between China and Japan for the return of Shantung to China.

Budget Report Presented

THE first report of Charles G. Dawes, Director of the Budget, which has been sent to Congress by President Harding, estimates the expenditures of the

(Continued on page 946)

A Mother's Christmas Dream

A Sermon by REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.*

TEXT—Luke 2:19. "And Mary kept all these things and pondered them in her heart."

IN ONE of Robert Herrick's quaint poems of the Nativity, he addresses the Star of Bethlehem:

"Tell us, thou clear and heavenly tongue
Where is the Babe but lately sprung?
Lies He the lillie-banks among?
Or say if this new birth of ours
Sleeps, laid within some ark of flowers,
Spangled with dew-light? Thou canst clear
All doubts and manifest the where.
Declare to us, bright Star, if we shall seek
Him in the morning's blushing cheek,
Or search the beds of spices through
To find Him out?"

And the Star answers:

"No, this ye need not do,
But only come and see Him rest,
A princely Babe on's mother's breast."

A mother with a Baby in her arms. Behold, the mystery of life and immortality brought to light!

The day is breaking over the hills of Bethlehem. In a low-browed cave sits Mary—as mothers have been sitting ever since the foundation of the world—dreaming, wondering, and whispering to herself, "I have gotten a man of the Lord!" Will her dreams come true or will they vanish into thin air?

What are these "things" that Mary has been "keeping in her heart," and on which she "ponders" now? They were, no doubt, the things that had been intimated to her by the angel of the Annunciation (Luke 1:26-35). And, by the same token, they are the deepest mysteries of our Christian faith.

The angel had said, "Fear not, Mary; the Holy Thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God!" By the "overshadowing of the Highest" she knew the stupendous fact, though she could not comprehend it. Let others doubt the virgin-birth of Jesus; His mother could not.

As a daughter of Israel she must have been familiar with the oracles; and surely the words of Isaiah would come to her: "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel," which, being interpreted, is God with us. (Isaiah 7:14.)

Ask Mary now, "Is this your son?" Her answer must be, "Aye, born of my travail pains and very flesh of my flesh." Ask Joseph standing by, "Is this your son?" His answer must be, "Nay; by the divine overshadowing I am his foster-father only." Then ask God and, lo, the heavens are opened as He answers, "This is My beloved Son; the long-looked-for Seed of Woman who is come, to bruise the serpent's head. Hear ye Him!"

And on this the mother with knit brows sits

*Dr. Burrell is pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church (Ref.), New York City.

musings. Who can comprehend it? "Great is the mystery of godliness; God manifest in flesh; the angels desire to look into it!"

THE mystery deepens as Mary calls to remembrance the further word of the Annunciation. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus." Why Jesus? "Because he shall save his people from their sins." But how is salvation possible, save by the shedding of blood? For it is written, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins."

A shadow falls over her, the dim shadow of a Cross! She recalls the prophecy, "He shall be wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities—he shall be led as a lamb to the slaughter—he shall make his soul an offering for sin!"

And to the heart of this fond mother the forecast is like the piercing of a sword. (Luke 2:35.) To know that the little lad on her bosom is destined to be "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief"—this is sorrow's crown of sorrows for her!

Then she remembers how the angel said: "Behold, the throne of David shall be given unto him"; and her soul is quieted within her.

So here is great David's greater Son, "whom kings and prophets longed to see and died without the sight." The little hand that lies so helplessly and trustingly upon her breast, though it be pierced with agonizing pain, will ultimately wield a scepter; "His kingdom shall be an everlasting kingdom and His dominion shall be forever and ever!"

This is the golden thread of ancient prophecy—the Via Dolorosa leading ever to a throne—"for unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father and the Prince of Peace."

AS THUS the Virgin Mother ponders on the things "kept in her heart," a group of rustics, a-tiptoe, are gazing in at the doorway. Then come the shepherds with their marvelous tale:

"We were abiding in the field last night, keeping watch over our flock, when lo, the angel of the Lord came upon us and the glory of the Lord shone round about us; and we were sore afraid. And the angel said to us, 'Fear not, for behold I bring unto you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the City of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you, ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.' And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying, 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men!'"

She must surely have listened to this wondrous tale with a far-away look in her eyes. Her vision is now thrown upon the larger screen of the future. She sees the armies of the world upon their knees. The lion and the lamb lie down together and her little Child is leading them.

So Mary's faith outruns her wonder. She lifts her eyes, dimmed still with foreboding tears, and humbly, gratefully, devoutly whispers to her Lord: "Behold thy handmaid; be it unto me even as thou wilt!" The horizons of her vision roll onward to the Golden age—

"When peace shall over all the earth
Her ancient glories ring,
And the whole world give back the song
Which now the angels sing,
Glory to God in the highest;
On earth peace, good-will to men!"

And now, as this handmaid of the Lord—so highly favored on earth, more highly in heaven—pursues her ministry among the ministering spirits there (Heb. 1:14), does she behold the Christmas joys in countless homes of Christendom and add this to the other blessed "things" that she still and forever keeps in her devoted heart?

"God rest ye, all good people,
Upon this happy morn;
The Christ of all good Christians,
Was of a woman born."

AT THIS happiest season of the year we shall do well to ponder on the great verities which were hidden in the heart of Mary on

Continued on page 945

Our Sunday Service at Home

The Christian Herald Sermon is now read in many Homes as a Sunday Evening Service, a simple form of conducting which is outlined below. Neighbors should be cordially invited

Order of Service

Opening Hymn—"O Little Town of Bethlehem," or "Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing."

Invocation—"The Lord's Prayer"—all join.

Scripture Reading—"The Nativity: The Angels' Song." Luke 2, verses 8 to 18.

Dr. Jowett's Sunday Meditation (see page 943, first column).

Sermon—"A MOTHER'S CHRISTMAS DREAM"—To be read aloud by the head of the household or his substitute.

Requests for Prayer—these may be offered by any of those present who feel led to do so. The requests may be forwarded to Pastor Sheldon, in New York, for submission to the Prayer League.

Closing Hymn—"Jesus, the very Thought of Thee," or "Joy to the World, the Lord is Come!"

Benediction—by Pastor Charles M. Sheldon to be read aloud. Our Blessed Lord and Saviour, speed us on our way as we thank Thee for the Blessing of this hour of Worship. Plant the seed of Thy Truth in good soil. And make real to us, we pray Thee, Thy presence, for we need something more than the human to inspire our human weakness. Grant it to us, we beseech Thee, O Lord. AMEN.

The Daily Meditation

By Revs. J. H. Jowett, D.D., C. C. Albertson, D.D., E. W. Caswell, J. A. McAfee, D.D., D. J. Burrell, D.D., and R. Braunstein

Poverty and Wealth

SUNDAY. Rev. 3:17. "Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; I counsel thee to buy of Me." You might think this is an indictment of the men of the world, men who have sold themselves to Mammon, who have made piles of money, and who have been utterly careless as to how they made it. They are swaggering about with an air of attainment. They are surrounded with material extravagance. They are gorgeously dressed, and costly jewels blaze about them. They are loud, and garish, revelling in mere parade, and they live away from their souls, and have no communion with God. And they think themselves rich, and they are famed for their riches all over the country-side! And yet—they are entered in the register of God as wretched, and miserable, and blind, and poor.

But although the word of our Lord applies to the poor rich, whose poverty is clothed in splendor, it is not immediately of these that the word is spoken. It has reference to men and women who are professing Christians, members of the Church, people who claim to hold a great faith, and label themselves the friends of the Lord Jesus Christ. They are the folk who try to make the best of both worlds. They give an arm to Mammon and an arm to Christ, and they go swaggering along as the friend of both! Nay, that last sentence is altogether wrong. It describes what no one has ever seen. You cannot go down the road arm in arm with Mammon and Christ. You have got to desert the one if you go out with the other. And that is what these people were trying to do. They were trying to have two lovers, and they took them out in turn. At one time they gave a little attention to Christ, and at another time they gave all their interest to Mammon. It was a zigzag sort of living, and it filled the days with patchiness and compromise.

But it turned out, in the case of these Laodiceans, as indeed it always does, that in a dual fellowship of this kind Mammon receives the tribute of passion, while Christ only gets a tepid devotion. Our hot ambition sides with Mammon, and we give our lukewarm respects to the Lord. Mammon really owns us, but we throw an occasional coin to Christ.

But the strange thing is this: these Laodiceans believed that the dual fellowship was answering famously, that they were prosperously exploring two mines, piling up treasure on earth and piling up treasure in heaven. Indeed, they imagined that they were just as rich on the side of Christ as they were on the side of Mammon. It was a sorry delusion; but then Mammon is great in the use of opiates, and he puts our better judgment to sleep. He hypnotizes us, and we call dress fine gold, and we esteem rags as fine raiment, and we look upon dead words as vital fellowship, and we regard "going to Church" as life in Christ. It is a tragic delusion, but millions have been possessed by it. Their eyes were held, and they thought themselves to be millionaires, while they were miserable paupers.

The Lord calls upon these Laodiceans to end the dual fellowship. He pleads with them to stop these blighting compromises, to turn from these wandering delusions to reality, from a living death to the life indeed. Our God is the only home of enduring treasure. In Him we find gold without alloy, as "gold tried in the fire." And what is this but the splendid currency of divine communion? And in Him we find "white raiment," without spot or stain. And what is the white raiment but the garment of His righteousness, the garment of our salvation? And in Him we are to find "eye-salve that we might see," the restorer of perverted sight, the corrective of our delusion.

We can buy these blessed treasures of the Lord. Buy them? What money have we to offer in exchange? We are poor; what are our means of barter? What does the Lord ask of us? Who is the Asker? It is the Lover of our souls. And what does He seek from us? He seeks our love. "My son, give me thine heart." That is all. We give ourselves and we gain God. J. H. J.

Life's Three Great Crises

MONDAY. Psa. 130:1. "Out of the depths have I cried unto Thee." In the life of the average man there are three possible crises of a spiritual character. These are the experience of human helplessness, of human loneliness and of human failure. The first takes the form of a consciousness of utter futility. Some of the most despairing cries which have ascended to the heavens have come from men and women who confronted the apparent impotence of the strongest life. An Alpine climber who lost his life on a snowy height left this message: "It is very cold up here and the clouds shut out the view."

This was the verdict of disillusionment. Then much of life is inevitably lonely. We face great decisions alone. Sorrow isolates us from our fellows. At last we go out of life alone.

More acutely still there may come to us the sense of failure. Whoever accomplished all he set out to do? Only one has been able to say, "I have finished the work Thou gavest me to do." Professor Huxley once wrote to a friend: "I suppose all we can hope to do is to make our mark and pass on." Perhaps it is not necessary that we should make our mark. Jesus never said anything about having made His mark, but He made it nevertheless. So here are three possible crises in experience.

What has Christianity to say to us in times like these. To the helpless there is the assurance, "Underneath are everlasting arms." Underneath what? Underneath us. Underneath our weakness, underneath our need. To the lonely there is the assurance that God is our Comrade. Sometimes we are more alone in company than in solitude. And sometimes in solitude we are conscious of a companionship that earth could never give. "The tabernacles of God are with men." Christ's name is "Immanuel"—God with us. To the soul that confronts apparent failure, Christianity speaks with extraordinary emphasis. We are assured that we work with God when we work for Him and "our labor is not in vain in the Lord." The work is not ours but His, and He shall see the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied. C. C. A.

The Divine Comforter

TUESDAY. II Cor. 1:3. "The God of all comfort." The Gospel of comfort is blessed to burdened souls. How many multitudes are under loads of toil and sorrow too great for happiness, inquiring, "Where can we find relief and courage to endure as good soldiers of Jesus Christ?"

Faith in Christ pierces the clouds, letting in the sunlight of the Divine Presence, bringing rest to the troubled spirit. To realize that our Lord lived the life we are living, a wanderer without a home, hunted and persecuted by evil men, who sought His life, that He is touched with the feelings of our infirmities, having been tempted and tried as we are, and that, at last, He died to save, comfort and redeem sorrowing, sinful millions, brings blessed peace to the heart. When Christ left this world, He sent down His Holy Spirit to be our Comforter and companion, that we might not suffer alone. The Spirit unfolds to the heart the treasures Christ bequeathed to men. He gave His all for us; His garments to the soldiers, His mother to John, His blood for our cleansing, His peace for our comfort, His body to the tomb for the resurrection hope of the world. He gave His wounds, for our transgression, His home for our abiding-place, His love for our everlasting joy. O what a comforting Friend, Who "loved me ere I knew Him."

We cannot fully solve the problems of evil, of wars, of calamities of pestilence and famine, but we may know the cure of comfort while these horrors prevail. We do not despair of God when He comes with all His riches to our rescue. We must feel our need before we will send for the Captain of our salvation. He is the God of eternal comfort. Other comforters go down to dust at last, while He is alive forevermore. If your life is hid with Christ in God, all is well always. E. W. C.

To the Glory of God

WEDNESDAY. I Cor. 10:31. "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Christianity is not a creed to be accepted, a ritual to be performed, or a philosophy to be adopted. Christianity is a living, vital, throbbing thing—a life to be lived. Until we so conceive of it, we have not come to a knowledge of its import or importance.

Religion has been defined as the "consciousness of the universe—that it is infinite, eternal and that it is all God's." Such would not be far wide of the mark as a definition of Christianity. To see the relation of the things that we are doing from day to day with the whole plan of God is not easy; yet Paul implies that it is possible. It does require real insight to see the connection between the minutia that goes to make up life for most of us and the cause of Christ. Yet it can be done.

The man who has learned to live out Paul's injunction, that whatsoever a man does, he is to do for the glory of God, has learned one of the great secrets of life; he has learned how to live. The secret is not one easily discovered; the lesson not one easily learned. It was through the bitterness of many an experience that Paul learned the lesson. You and I may find no easier road, but until we have learned so to live, we know not how to live as we should. J. A. M.

Humble Beginnings

THURSDAY. Matt. 13:31. "The kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed." Beginnings are always interesting. Not unlike the humble origins and seemingly insignificant beginnings of nature's wonders are the values and ideals and standards of the Kingdom of Heaven. Speaking of his conversion, Savonarola says, "A word did it!" Christian literature is replete with similar incidents, illustrative of the "word in season to him that is weary," and the deed done to him that is needy, "for His name's sake." The great reforms and splendid emancipations of the ages found their birth in obscure environments and commonplace surroundings.

Genius knows no geography and talent has no limitations. The muse is often fed on a crust and the college president finds his first schooling in the furrow of the plow. Christian ministry is not a matter of dimension of one's sphere, but a matter of consecration to one's task.

There are leaders for tomorrow's crusades in every town and hamlet. The John Wesleys and the Martin Luthers who will rebuke the errors of the next half century are now the youth in our little Sunday Schools and farm homes tucked away in the hills and valleys of this broad land.

The deed that is good and helpful, done in the corner of your environment shall be felt in every corner of this wide world. He who does good never knows how much good he has done. The little seeds planted now shall express themselves in the coming years as a potent harvest. The effort that seems most in vain, the task that seems the most hopeless, shall be blessed and multiplied by Him who blessed and multiplied the loaves and fishes twenty centuries ago. R. B.

The Thankful Spirit

FRIDAY. Eph. 5:20. "Giving thanks always for all things to God." This preacher was true to his text. He never says much of his hardships and sufferings. When he does mention these, they are incidental. But the mercies of God, the blessings he received, the promises he had proved true—these he often mentions. Three hundred years later than Paul lived John Chrysostom, a good and brave man who preached very plainly against iniquity of all kinds. The empress was not a good woman, so she schemed to have him falsely accused and banished. He died an exile from his home. Thirty years later his body was brought back to Constantinople for burial in the imperial tomb. Chrysostom's motto was, "Praise God for everything!" When he was driven from home, when he was a stranger in a strange land, his letters would often end with that doxology, "Praise God for all things!"

Where did Chrysostom get his motto? From Paul. And where did Paul get his rule of life? From Christ. In the institution of the sacramental supper it is twice recorded that Jesus "gave thanks." The shadows of the Crucifixion were gathering around Him, yet He gave thanks. It would be well if we were always thankful. We could change the weather to suit ourselves, for however cold and dark the days and nights, it would always be warm and bright in our hearts. Riches and poverty, comfort and discomfort, are more dependent upon the mind than upon circumstances, just as peace and strife are interior and experiential, rather than external and circumstantial. There is no darkness on earth that God and we working together cannot make bright. C. C. A.

The Wheat and the Tares

SATURDAY. Matt. 13:30. "Let both grow together until the harvest." It is good for the wheat that it should grow in the same field with the tares. True, the children of the Kingdom are thus exposed to temptation, and oftentimes led away into worldliness and evil ways. But in the school of discipline, the nerves and sinews of character are made strong. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life."

It is good also for the tares that they should grow together with the wheat; for, through the influence of the children of the Kingdom, the children of unbelief may be led to better things. Root them out? Oh, no! "A certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard; and he came seeking fruit thereon, and found none. And he said unto the vine-dresser, 'Behold I come seeking fruit these three years on this fig-tree and find none. Cut it down! Why doth it cumber the ground?' But he answering said, 'Let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it and dung it. If it bear fruit, well; but if not, then cut it down.' Behold, this is the patience of God!" D. J. B.

Free Investment Circulars

Interesting and valuable investment literature published from time to time by the leading Banks and Investment Houses is now available for Christian Herald Readers.

As a convenience to you we have arranged with these Financial concerns to send direct to you these Investment circulars. Write us asking for them by number or simply checking list and write name and address plainly on the margin. Financial Department, The Christian Herald, 99 Bible House, New York City.

Conservative Bonds—Current bond circulars, describing recent issues of high-grade bonds, with full details of security, yield, etc. Ask for Circular No. 1.

Public Utility Securities—Circular No. 2, describes a variety of public utility bonds and preferred stock issues, well secured and offering a high yield at present prices.

Real Estate Bonds—Several booklets issued by investment houses in different sections of the country present the advantages of real estate bonds and notes—the oldest and basic form of investment. These issues yield 6 per cent. to 7 per cent. Ask for Circulars 4-6 for city real estate bonds, and Circulars 7-9 for farm mortgage bonds.

Partial Payment Investing—This method enables investors to buy sound securities by making payments monthly until the bond or preferred stock is fully paid for. Meanwhile all interest or dividends accrue from the time the investment is begun. Ask for Circular 11.

To Invest $25 or More—Two-year time deposit certificates paying 6 per cent., and 5 per cent. certificates payable on demand, secured by first mortgages, can be bought in multiples of $25. Ask for Circular 43.

Liberty Bonds—Circular No. 14 describes the various issues of Liberty Bonds and the remarkable investment opportunities they offer at the present time.

Farm Mortgages—details also circulars regarding 6 per cent. First Mortgage Farm Loan Certificates issued in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000. Send for Circular 38.

Selecting Your Investments, Strong Box Investments, Creating Good Investments, are three booklets describing the service and safe, high yield investments of a nationally known investment house. No. 43.

How Henry Wilkinson Became Rich—Booklet 52 is the story of the man who was satisfied with safety and a fair yield on his investments. Persistence, Patience and sound judgment made him financially independent.

Choosing Your Investment Banker—Recently issued by a well-known Investment House. It is the first and most important step to successful investment. Request Booklet 53.

Service to the Investor—Booklet 54 gives details of the service offered to investors by the investment department of one of the largest banks maintaining thirty offices throughout the country.

Booklet 55, The Investment. A booklet which you will read with interest. It contains full information concerning a strong and safe type of investment.

National Capital First Mortgage Investments—Booklet 56 describes bonds secured by Washington, D. C. Real Estate.

A Guaranteed Income is the title of booklet 57 published in the interests of sound investment where the safety of principle is the prime requisite.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company First Mortgage 20-year 8% Sinking Fund Gold Bonds—Coupon bonds in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000. Callable at $120 and interest. Circular 58.

Detroit United Railway First Mortgage 8% Sinking Fund 20-year Gold Bonds payable at maturity at 107 1/2 and interest to net over 8.10 per cent. interest exclusive of premium in denomination of $1,000 only. Circular 59.

The Revolt of Jeroboam

International Sunday School Lesson for January 1

I Kings 12:1 to 13:6

By REV. SAMUEL D. PRICE, D. D.

FOR the next nine months the lessons will complete the general course in the Old Testament which began in October, 1918, and was resumed in April, 1920. We start now with the dividing of the Kingdom after the death of Solomon, and the last lesson of this quarter will cover the ending of the Northern Kingdom in 721 B.C. by surrender to the Assyrians. The second quarter will be concerned with the Southern Kingdom to the overthrow of Jerusalem in 586 by the Babylonians. In the third quarter of this year the lessons will follow the general title "The Exile and the Restoration." These studies are most important to the Bible student, as they deal with portions of the Bible which are less familiar to most people. Some persons have such a limited knowledge of the Old Testament that many of those books are almost unknown to them.

By even a reasonable amount of study the content of these lessons, together with the context, can be mastered and much pleasure experienced, whether you are a teacher or a pupil. Study hard enough to become enthusiastic. Recently a teacher was heard to say on the platform of a county Sunday School convention, that no longer did she fear to face any class, since she had completed a course in teacher-training. She had learned how to study her lesson and also to impart the essential truths. Now she is eager to teach. Some lessons in the present nine months' course deal largely with history, while others are centered about such great persons as Elijah, Elisha, Jonah, Daniel, Esther, Nehemiah and Ezra.

It is presumed that every one in the great Christian Herald class of over a million readers has a good-sized print Bible—one that you can enjoy reading without any eye fatigue. Then each one can have a Sunday School lesson leaflet or quarterly which you receive from your own Sunday School. If you are not an attending member you should become a member of the Home Department of some Sunday School—the agreement is to study the lesson for a half-hour each week. Helps are always needed in making a careful study of each lesson, and you will find much profit in a careful study of Tarbell's Teachers' Guide, Peloubet's Notes, Arnold's Practical Commentary of the Sunday School Lessons, Snowden's Sunday School Lesson Book and Torrey's Gist of the Lesson. Many purchase at least two of these volumes. If at the end of the year you will address the writer, whose name is found at the top of the page, he will give you the name and address of some missionary who will be glad to receive these books as your gift for his use next year. Other books for your Sunday School library will be named later. Remember, you cannot give out to your class what you do not first put into your own mind; therefore, there is the necessity for constant study. A good-sized map of Palestine, as related to the Old Testament, is regarded as invaluable for both personal study and class work. Such a map, printed on muslin can be obtained through the Book Department of the Christian Herald. As you familiarize yourself with the geography of Bible lands, your Bible study is greatly assisted.

SAUL, David and Solomon had each reigned forty years. During the close of Solomon's rule there were many evidences of national weakness. Though there was the great, new Temple at Jerusalem, spiritual things did not always come first. The people were already conscious of the oppression of taxation. This was just as Samuel predicted, when the people asked for a king that they might be in style with the surrounding nations (I Samuel 8:10-18). Before the death of Solomon, there had been a revolt instigated by Jeroboam. It was soon repressed and the would-be ruler fled to Egypt. He had meanwhile been encouraged concerning future successes, as the prophet Ahija tore a piece of cloth into twelve parts and gave ten to the temporarily thwarted young man.

Following the death of Solomon, there was a great gathering of all the people to Shechem. (Learn how to pronounce every Bible name accurately. Begin with Shechem, which is rarely given rightly, even by preachers: the first "e" is long as in the word "she") Nabulous is the modern name for this Samaritan center. Rehoboam, a poor successor to Solomon, was the man put forward by the administration for coronation as king. He showed that he lacked the wisdom prayed for by Solomon (I Kings 3:4-9) when he gave the coarse reply to the delegation from the people who were looking for some kindness from headquarters. To be sure, Rehoboam conferred before making reply, but the absolutely right answer in some matters is so clear that there is no occasion for a conference.

After the king had acted it was the people's turn to express themselves, and this soon took place. There had been growing lines of cleavage between the northern and southern parts of the Kingdom. There was a large amount of tribal jealousy, and it was especially acute in the important tribe of Ephraim, (just north of Judah) in whose leading city of Shechem the all-Israel gathering had assembled for the coronation. There were ten tribes to the northward of Judah which had grown very restless by reason of the heavy taxation demanded to maintain the unduly extravagant household of Solomon, and also to erect the magnificent temple in Jerusalem. They had just been informed that worse conditions confronted them, and that scorpion hurt would succeed the blows from the lash. The cup of patience and submission was full to overflowing. Then the cry of revolt was raised; an unsuccessful attempt to defeat the setting up of the Kingdom of Israel was made. Jeroboam had returned from Egypt and the Divided Kingdom began with Rehoboam reigning over Judah and Jeroboam over Israel.

JEROBOAM made his serious mistake in putting the security of his kingdom before exact obedience to God. The command had been given that all Israelites were to go to Jerusalem for the three Jewish feasts each year, and it was thought by the new king that if those from the Ten Tribes did this, they would become loyal in time to the Jerusalem King. The expedient of establishing two centers of worship in the Northern Kingdom was resorted to and golden calves were set up in Bethel, just twelve miles north of Jerusalem and seventeen south of Shechem, and in Dan, in the extreme northern part of the Kingdom. This was idolatry and gross disobedience. It should be noted that the Northern Kingdom was destroyed 135 years sooner than the Kingdom of Judah, which continued to worship at the God-directed place.

A few minutes of memory work will prove helpful in all further Bible study in which the Twelve Tribes appear collectively or individually. Learn the names of the twelve sons of Jacob in the order of their birth: Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Dan, Naphtali, Gad, Asher, Issachar, Zebulon, Joseph and Benjamin. Note that there are no tribes called Levi or Joseph, but there are tribes called Ephraim and Manasseh, names of the two sons of Joseph. Now observe as you study your map, that on the eastern side of Jordan you have the tribes Reuben, Gad and half of Manasseh. Learning these names and relating them to the map will prove a helpful supplemental Bible study, for the individual, the class or the school.

PRECIOUS BIBLE PROMISES

By SAMUEL CLARK, D.D.

320 pages, gilt back, fine cloth, large type and fine paper

It contains:

1. Bible Promises to Believers.
2. Bible Promises Relating to Troubles in Life.
3. Bible Promises of Spiritual Blessings in This Life.
4. Bible Promises of Blessings in the Future World.

And many other chapters containing hundreds of inspirational verses from the Bible.

"The materials which are collected here are all divine. It is an easy matter to find something suited to the frame of our souls or our present wants on every occasion, and that soul who knows what a suitable promise is worth in an hour of darkness or temptation will never think such a work as this, and such a various treasure, can have sufficient value set upon it.

A year's subscription to the Christian Herald, 52 weeks, and a cloth bound copy of "Precious Bible Promises," both postpaid for $2.25

The cloth bound book sold separately, postpaid, for 60 cents.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

"SLOAN'S always fixes me up in a jiffy. A warming slap of Sloan's Liniment and pains and aches soon become a memory." Good for all exposure aches and pains, rheumatism, neuralgia, backaches, stiff joints, sprains and strains. Sold by all druggists, 35c, 70c, $1.40.

Keep it handy
Sloan's Liniment Pain's enemy

PELOUBET'S Select Notes

The World's Greatest Commentary on the International Sunday-School Lessons
By AMOS R. WELLS, Litt.D., LL.D.

Let us send you a pamphlet containing the first lesson taken from the volume of 1922

Price, $2.00 Net; $2.10 Delivered
W. A. WILDE COMPANY
120 BOYLSTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.
Madison Terminal Building, Chicago

Make Your Money Earn More

Are Your Investments Earning 8%?

If they are not, you are getting less than you can obtain, with assured safety.

Miller First Mortgages and First Mortgage Bonds, amply secured by valuable Miami real estate and possessing an unbroken safety record, yield 8%. This is an exceptional interest rate, made possible only by general conditions. Take advantage of this opportunity to obtain a profitable worry-free investment.

Partial payment accounts invited

Write for descriptive circular of offerings, A-24, and for booklet, "Miami Mortgage Investments."

G. L. Miller Bond & Mortgage Co.
Miami Bank & Trust Building
MIAMI, FLORIDA

Everything About Cuticura Soap Suggests Efficiency

Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. For samples address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

NO JOKE TO BE DEAF

—Every Deaf Person Knows That I make myself hear, after being deaf for 25 years, these Artificial Ear Drums. I wear them day and night. They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them. Write me and I will tell you a true story, how I got deaf and how I made myself hear. Address: GEO. P. WAY, Artificial Ear Drum Co. (Inc.) 6 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

YARN DIRECT FROM THE MILL

PRICES REDUCED. Popular shades of Worsted and Silk-and-Worsted. Agents wanted. SAMPLES FREE
NORFOLK YARN CO.
739 B Boylston St. Boston 17 Mass.

LOOMS ONLY $9.90

Big Money in Weaving
rugs, carpets, portieres, etc. at home; from rugs and waste material. Weavers are rushed with orders. Send for free loan book. It tells all about the weaving business and our wonderful $9.90 and other low priced, easily operated looms.
UNION LOOM WORKS, 282 Factory St., Boonville, N.Y.

WESSON OIL—a delicious salad oil, a wholesome frying fat, a good shortening—all in one handy can.

A Mother's Christmas Dream

Continued from page 942
that first Christmas day. The mystery of the Incarnation? Aye; deep and inscrutable as ever, but to all truth-lovers as simple and as marvelous as the love of God. Let old John Tauler sing it:

"There comes a galley laden;
A heavenly freight on board;
It bears God's Son, the Saviour,
The great undying Word.

"And proudly floats that galley
From troubled coast to coast;
Its sail is love and mercy,
Its mast, the Holy Ghost.

"Now earth hath caught the anchor,
'The ship hath touched the strand:
God's Word in fleshly garment—
The Son—steps out on land."

Or shall we ponder on the Atonement?
A mystery deeper still! Let old Robert Southwell sing it:

"As I in hoary winter's night
Stood shivering in the snow,
Surprised I was by sudden heat
That made my heart to glow.

And lifting up a fearful eye
To view what fire was near,
A pretty Babe, all burning bright,
Did in the air appear.

'For this,' quoth He, 'on fire I am.
To work men to their good;
So will I melt into a bath
To wash them in My blood.'

With this He vanished out of sight,
And swiftly shrunk away;
And straight I called unto mind
That it was Christmas Day."

OR SHALL the Conquest of our Lord engage our Christmas thought? If so let us ponder it as the deepest mystery of all. Verily, God's ways are not our ways! That eleven men should be called from fishing-boats and toll-booths to lead a campaign for the conquest of the world, and should lead it so successfully that hundreds of millions are now following in their train, this is the Lord's doing and marvelous in our eyes! Let us hear it from the lips of an unknown minstrel who sang to our fathers long ago:

"When Christ was born of Mary free,
In Bethlehem, in that fair citie,
Angels sang with mirth and glee,
In excelsis gloria!

The King is come to save mankind,
E'en as in Holy writ we find,
Wherefore this song we have in mind,
In excelsis gloria!

Then, dear Lord, for Thy great grace,
Grant us in bliss to see Thy face,
Where we may sing to thee solace,
In excelsis gloria!

Summon your hearts, beloved, to ponder on these things. Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men! The dream of the Virgin Mother comes true. The fulfilment of the Annunciation message grows clearer every day. The child of Bethlehem is unveiled. The Lamb of Calvary is exalted. The King draws near! Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good-will toward men!

Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and let King of Glory enter in!

Japan and the Conference

Continued from page 935
Within this old saloon for nearly half a century were photographs of Booth and an inscription over one of them read, "The handsomest man in Washington had a drink here fifteen minutes before he killed the ugliest." Can history find anything under the sun to illustrate better the devilish nature of the liquor traffic!

BUT I did not mean to stop so long in this sordid spot. Let us hasten away from it out to the corner of Nineteenth and U Streets. A good brisk walk of over a mile from the White House. Here stands the Chinese Legation, on a quiet and beautiful corner.

I went up to the Chinese Legation without any introduction, and as I opened the door into a handsome hall there was not even a single liveried or gold-braided servant in sight. But an old negro woman who was at work in the front of the hall asked me if I wanted to see any one. She was so pleasant about it that I said boldly that I would like to see the Chinese Minister if he was at liberty. She asked me to be seated in a small but beautifully furnished drawing-room while she took my card somewhere, and before I had time to ponder on the lack of formality a fine-looking, attractive man came in and greeted me very warmly and began at once to express in the finest English I have heard since I first came to this city, the exceedingly great obligation the Chinese people were under for the wonderful (I am using his own phrase) helping hand the readers and contributors of the Christian Herald had extended to China during the famine.

And then I understood I was in the presence of the Chinese Minister, Mr. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze, a man with a wide vision of the needs of humanity, and one who had the courage and the conviction to talk about them.

For after he had repeated with emphasis his feeling of gratitude for his suffering people, which he said they shared with him so that the name of the Christian Herald was known better than any other American name, I put to him this direct question:

"What are your feelings on this great conference? Are you willing to tell our readers what you believe is the attitude of China towards the rest of the world, including Japan?"

His answer was positive.

"I am an optimist," he said. "And I believe with all my heart that the time has come for all the nations to adopt an economic basis for national life instead of a military basis. Only in that way can any of us live. As to Japan, I believe the way will open to clear away all the difficulties that have been created between us."

I THINK I have never seen a human being express more sincere and heartfelt conviction than Mr. Sze expressed in that sentence. And then he went on to say:

"Look at China herself. Not military in her thought or practice. Rome, Assyria, Babylon, Egypt, all those old military nations have perished. My country, the most defenceless and unprotected all through the centuries, has survived, and has the promise and prospect of living longer than any military nation on earth. It is because at the bottom there is in the Chinese character a sense of justice. And of fair play. Yes, you may quote me to your readers and to the world as being very, very hopeful of the final outcome of this conference, and you may be assured that China comes to it with no other desire except to help, a solution of all these vexed questions, so that when the conference is over we shall have a less warlike and unbrotherly world."

What could the Christian people of America ask for more positive than this!

I came away from the quiet corner of Nineteenth and U Streets feeling so heartened that I walked back as far as Pennsylvania Avenue, and not caring, after that meeting, to go by the corner of Tenth and the Avenue, I went around by the white shaft that stands like a beautiful finger pointing into heaven, saying to myself:

"There is a human brotherhood. It is beginning here even among the sordid and dreadful relics of the past age, and by the grace of God it shall 'cover the earth some time as the waters cover the sea.'"

HEBE

An Economical
Holiday Dinner

Puree of Split Pea Soup

Celery Olives

Chicken Pot Pie, Dumplings

Mashed Potatoes

Creamed Onions

Lettuce, Mayonnaise

Pumpkin Pie

Plum Pudding

Coffee

Make this holiday dinner your best ever

YOU can do it with the help of HEBE. Use this convenient and economical cooking aid in all your holiday cooking and you will notice the improvement—added richness, finer flavor and better results all around.

Begin by using HEBE in the soup for a rich, delicious puree. Then use it in the gravy and the mashed potatoes. Make the white sauce for the vegetables with HEBE, and the mayonnaise dressing for the salad. Tasty and nutritious desserts can be easily made with HEBE, and there you have the whole dinner prepared economically with the aid of HEBE—more appetizing foods, and the whole meal well balanced and nutritious.

The only way to find out how economical and convenient HEBE is, is to try a can in your daily cooking. HEBE is pure skimmed milk evaporated to double strength enriched with cocoanut fat. In cooking operations it serves a threefold purpose—to moisten, to shorten and to enrich.

Order HEBE from your grocer today and write to us for the free HEBE book of recipes. Address 4406 Consumers Bldg., Chicago.

THE HEBE COMPANY
Chicago

Seattle

THE SCRIPTURE TEXT CALENDAR FOR 1922

COVER DESIGN IN COLORS

A reproduction of the famous painting, "Master, I Perish," is the principal feature of the cover design of the Scripture Text Calendar. By referring to the Scripture Text Calendar you can tell what the Sunday School Lesson will be for any Sunday in 1922.

TWELVE WORKS OF ART IN COLORS

JANUARY—Christ Healing the Sick Child.
FEBRUARY—Returning from Jerusalem.
MARCH—The Story of the Good Samaritan.
APRIL—He Is Risen.
MAY—Christ Teaching Little Children.
JUNE—The Son of a Carpenter.
JULY—Christ Going Through the Wheat Field.
AUGUST—Christ and the Fallen Woman.
SEPTEMBER—Jesus Sitting by the Sea of Galilee.
OCTOBER—The Rainbow Promise.
NOVEMBER—The Story of Jacob's Ladder.
DECEMBER—The Holy Night.

We send this fine Calendar $2.20 and the Christian Herald for one year, both for.....

The Calendar sent separately, post-paid, for..... 35c

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House New York

A FRIEND

of all ages, replete with the health-giving vitamins

SCOTT'S EMULSION

through its rich nourishing and vitamine-properties, promotes growth, restores strength and builds up resistance.

AT ALL DRUG STORES
PRICE, $1.20 and 60c.

Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J. 21-88

What 15 Cts Will bring YOU From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 15 cts. (coin or stamps) will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is a cheerful illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center for people everywhere; an independent home paper that tells the story of the world's news in an interesting, understandable way. Now in its 29th year. This splendid National weekly supplies a long-felt want; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to know what is going on in the world, this is your best means. If you want a paper in your home which is reliable and wholesome; if you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, entertainingly, briefly—here it is. Splendid serial and short stories and miscellany. The Question Box Answers YOUR questions and is a mine of information. Send 15 cts. to show that you might like such a paper and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15 cents does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Try it for 13 weeks. Address: The Pathfinder, 519 Langdon St., Washington, D. C.

You can be quickly relieved, if you STAMMER

Send 10 cents in stamps for 288-page cloth-bound book on Stammering and Stuttering, "Its Cause and Cure." It tells how I relieved myself after stammering for 20 years. Benjamin N. Bogue, 6294 E. Bogue Bldg., 1147 N. W. St., Indianapolis

4-POUND SILK BUNDLES WONDERFUL SILK AND VELVET BARGAINS

For Quilts, Fancy Work, Portieres, etc. Send 10 Cents for big package of large beautiful silk remnants including free quilt designs and agents' catalogue describing our 4-pound silk velvet, creosham, and other remnant bargain bundles; also instructions how to earn money at home by sewing. UNION S. WORKS 263 FACTORY ST., BOONVILLE N. Y.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 86 THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

GO INTO BUSINESS For Yourself

Establish and operate a "New System Specialty Candy Factory" in your community. We furnish everything. Money-making opportunity unlimited. Either men or women. Big Candy Booklet Free. Write for it today. Don't put it off! W. HILLIER RAGSDALE, Drawer 37, EAST ORANGE, N. J.

PATENTS

Send sketch or model for preliminary examination. Booklet free. Highest references. Best results. Promptness assured. Watson E. Coleman, Patent Lawyer, 624 F St., Washington, D. C.

TRY A POUND of my pure home-made nut and fruit chocolates. $1.00 per pound, postpaid SARAH E. WATTS, PORTSMOUTH, R. I.

The World News of the Week

Continued from page 941

federal government for the year ending June 30, 1922, at $3,967,922,366, exclusive of postal expenditures paid from postal revenues. The total actually spent for the year ended June 30, 1921, was $5,538,040,689, so that the results of the economy campaign instituted by the administration are becoming apparent. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the expenditures are estimated at $3,505,754,727, representing still further saving, but yet more than $150,000,000 in excess of the estimated revenue under the provisions of the new revenue act.

In making up the budgets, Mr. Dawes paid no attention to reductions in expenditures which might result from the Washington Conference. One computation was that the cost to the taxpayers of all factors relating to wars and the maintenance of armed forces totaled no less than $2,900,000,000 annually, leaving the cost of the government, as estimated for 1923, for civil purposes not much in excess of $600,000,000.

Only five of the items intimately connected with wars give the following tabulation:

| | 1923 | 1922 |
|--------------------|---------------|---------------|
| War Department | $369,902,107 | $389,091,406 |
| Navy Department | 431,754,000 | 478,850,000 |
| Pensions | 252,350,000 | 258,400,000 |
| U.S. Vets' Bureau | 455,232,700 | 438,122,400 |
| Int. on pub. debt. | 975,000,000 | 976,000,000 |

Total.....$2,484,238,809 $2,539,463,806

Canadian Liberals Win

CANADA'S general election, the first in the Dominion's history in which women voted on terms of equality with men, resulted in the overwhelming defeat of the Conservative party, which for several years had been in control of the government. The Liberal party will have 120 seats in the new Parliament; the Progressive or Farmers' party, with its strength in the western provinces, 62; the Conservatives, 50; and Labor and independents, 2. Premier Arthur Meighen, who had held office since July, 1920, was defeated in his home district in Manitoba, and nearly all the members of his cabinet also lost their seats in Parliament in the general overturn.

The main issue in the election was the tariff, the Conservatives standing for revision upward to protect Canadian interests and using the existing emergency tariff in the United States as an argument in favor of retaliatory measures by Canada. The Liberals advocated substantial reductions in duties and a longer free list in order to lower the cost of living, with the duties on British goods one-half the general tariff, and the Progressives also demanded lower tariff rates.

W. L. Mackenzie King, the Liberal leader, was elected by 1,000 majority in a district normally Conservative and will be called upon to form the new ministry.

Church Unity Covenant Proposed

THE Commission on Unity of the Congregational Churches has issued a call for a covenant of church unity, declaring its readiness to confer with representatives of any other churches "concerning realignments or unification of our respective forces and ministries."

"At this time," says the call, "when the leading nations of the world are entering into a covenant of ten years for the readjustment of their military forces for the sake of keeping the peace of the world, shall not the churches of Christ do likewise?"

The objectives for combined action proposed by the call are:

1. The fellowship of the members of any church in and with the members of all churches.
2. The mutual recognition and utilization of the ministry of the different churches for common needs and service in all.
3. The offering thereby of larger fields and greater incentive to enter the ministry to our young men, as well as limiting the number of ministers required for effective home service, when one may be better than two or more.
4. More gradually, but possibly within the period of this ten years' covenant of peace, such consolidation or combinations of the educational institutions and their means of the different communions might be brought about as would prove advantageous for the best education and fellowship in their studies of the ministry of the different churches.
5. Any philanthropic, social, mission or federated work of the churches.

BISHOP NICHOLSON HEADS ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE. Bishop Thomas C. Nicholson, of Chicago, has been elected president of the Anti-Saloon League of America for a term of two years, succeeding Bishop Luther B. Wilson, of New York, who declined reelection because of new church duties. New vice-presidents elected were Josephus Daniels, Bishop W. N. Ainsworth, Bishop A. R. Clippinger, and Rev. S. H. Brooks. Rev. A. P. Baker, general superintendent; Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel; S. E. Nicholson, secretary; and Foster Copeland, treasurer, were continued in their offices.

GUATEMALAN GOVERNMENT OVERTHROWN. The government of President Carlos Herrera in Guatemala has been overthrown by a revolution, and a commission consisting of three generals has assumed control pending elections for a new Congress and new President. The coup was accomplished almost without bloodshed, only three persons being killed in the fighting between the revolutionists and the police of the capital city. Herrera had been in power since April, 1920, when he ousted President Estrada Cabrera, who ever since has been held in prison. Guatemala is one of the three states in the new Central American Union.

SCORE PERISH IN WRECK. More than a score of persons perished when two passenger trains on the Newtown branch of the Philadelphia and Reading railroad collided head-on at Woodmont, Pa., and the wreckage caught fire. One estimate placed the number of deaths at twenty-seven, but the exact toll of the wreck, attributed to one train crew's violations of orders, probably never will be known, because of the condition of the debris.

REPRESENTATIVE FLOOD DIES. Representative Henry D. Flood, of Virginia, who had been a member of the House since 1901 and had attained a position of leadership on the Democratic side, died at his home in Washington as the result of a heart attack, after an illness of several weeks.

RIOTING IN CHICAGO STRIKE. A strike of packing-house employees in Chicago has been accompanied by serious rioting, the worst outbreak coming when crowds of strikers and strike sympathizers, estimated to number from 50,000 to 100,000, which had gathered in the stockyards district were dispersed by the police. In the hours of disorder one death occurred, two persons were injured probably fatally, and twenty-three others were injured. Nine of those injured suffered from bullet wounds. A thousand extra policemen were sent to reinforce the five hundred already on duty in the district, and restored order. Minor outbreaks occurred in other packing centers.

Young People's Topics for January 1

By REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

learned to influence his own environment. The big things that are being done today out on the frontiers, are not being done by stored but current power. So long as the current flows the light shines. So long as the wheels turn, the machinery moves. So long as things need to be done, they will be done by men and women who are already doing.

Amos R. Wells in his little book, "Reaching Up and Out," contributes this thought: "Back of all we think or say or do there is the ideal, the perfect, the possible thought, and word and action. Of that beautiful thing our thought or word or deed is only the shadow, often a sadly grotesque shadow. When we write a letter, it is a parody of the letter we might have written. When we greet a friend, it is a mocking echo of the true hail of comradeship. When we perform a task, we are merely practicing for the authentic achievement. Life is practice, never achievement. Life is trying, never perfection. But the Christian, the only true, authenticated optimist says with Browning:

He guides me and the bird. In His good time."

The door of nineteen hundred and twenty-one is closed. The door of nineteen hundred and twenty-two is open. If that open door has "Opportunity," written on one side, it has "Responsibility" written on the other side. Pausing to lament over the failures of the past will be injurious to the interests of the future. Enter the New Year not only for God but with God, in earnest prayer and sincere preparation. We face the next year, not with the thought that there are so many months, weeks, days, or hours, but with the thought that there are privileges and opportunities and responsibilities crowding the moments, challenging our manhood and womanhood and the plans and programs we hold as kingdom builders and civilization finders of God's eternal purpose.

"Another year is but another call from God

To do some deed undone and duty we forgot:

To think some wider thought of man and good,

To see and love with kindlier eyes and warmer heart,

Until acquainted more with him, and keener eyed

To sense the need of man we serve

With larger sacrifice and readier hand our kind."

"I see my way as birds their trackless way.

I shall arrive. What time, what circuit first,

I ask not; but unless God send His hail, Or blinding fireballs, sleet or stifling snow,

In some time, His good time, I shall arrive:

While Death Plays Santa Claus

Executive Committee

Allen Wardwell, Chairman
Jane Addams
Mrs. August Belmont
Charles C. Burlingham
William M. Chadbourne
Paul D. Cravath
Lewis S. Gannett
Robert Morris Lovett
Walter W. Pettit
Frank L. Polk
Charles H. Sabin, Treasurer
Graham Romeyn Taylor
Helen Todd
Felix M. Warburg
L. Hollingsworth Wood
Harry Powers Story, Secretary

National Committee

Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D.D.
Dr. Frank Billings
Harriot Stanton Blatch
Cornelius N. Bliss, Jr.
Alfred J. Boulton
Arthur Brisbane
John Graham Brooks
Mrs. Cora Haviland Carver
Bayard H. Christy
C. P. Coleman
Edward Cornell
Fred M. Corse
Charles R. Crane
John W. Davis
Jerome T. DeHunt
William C. Edgar
Charles W. Eliot
John Lovejoy Elliott
Harry M. Fennimore
Irving Fisher
Hon. Joseph I. France
Hon. David R. Francis
Col. Michael Friedsam
John A. Gade
E. F. Gay
Samuel Gompers
Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, D.D.
Norman Hapgood
Robert Herrick
Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch
William M. Johnston
Alexander Kahn
Dr. Gertrude Kelly
William Kent
E. F. Ladd
Col. Herbert Lehman
Cyrus H. McCormick
James G. McDonald
John A. McSparran
Rabbi Judah Leon Magnes
Capt. Wm. A. Maher
Anne Martin
Hon. Ogden L. Mills
William Fellowes Morgan
Walter M. Nelson
Morgan J. O'Brien
Fremont Older
Herbert Parsons
Francis G. Peabody
Dr. Raymond V. Phelan
Mrs. Gifford Pinchot
Glenn E. Plumb
Ernest Poole
James H. Post
Mrs. John T. Pratt
William C. Redfield
Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D.D.
Raymond Robins
Dr. Frank F. Rosenblatt
Julius Rosenwald
Rev. John A. Ryan
Mrs. Vladimir G. Simkhovitch
Alfred E. Smith
Mrs. Willard D. Straight
Henry W. Taft
Thomas D. Thacher
Norman Thomas
Mrs. Charles L. Tiffany
Oswald Garrison Villard
B. C. Vladeck
Lillian D. Wald
J. H. Walker
Robert Wardrop
Robert W. Webb
George P. West
George W. Wickersham

GAY colored lights—glittering tinsel—the laughter of children—the tree—
Home—and off there in the Volga country people are starving to death.

Holly and mistletoe—bulging stockings by the fire in the living-room—red and white candy canes—little packages tied with red and green ribbons—Mother—and off there in the Volga country the nurses are separating the babies who are going to die today from the ones who won't die until tomorrow.

Dad carving the turkey and spilling gravy on the tablecloth—the family laughing at Baby as she sucks the drumstick bone—teasing Mother because she didn't put enough sugar in the cranberry sauce—and off there in the Volga country they're eating bread made of dried grass and ground-up horses' hoofs.

While our lights are gay and our homes are filled with Christmas cheer—
Death plays Santa Claus.

Off there in the Volga country millions of people are dying of hunger while we say "Merry Christmas" and celebrate the birthday of Jesus Christ.

$10 will save 10 lives for a month

$100 will save 100 lives for a month

$1000 will save 1000 lives for a month

Every dollar spent in America :- Every dollar spent for relief

RUSSIAN FAMINE FUND

Distributing through The Society of Friends (The Quakers)

National Headquarters 15 PARK ROW, NEW YORK

With committees in

BOSTON
PITTSBURGH

PHILADELPHIA
NEW YORK

CHICAGO
MINNEAPOLIS

and other American Cities

Will you organize a committee in your town?

CHARLES H. SABIN, Treasurer
Russian Famine Fund,
15 Park Row, New York

Dear Sir:

I enclose $..... as my contribution toward the relief of the suffering in Russia.
Please send acknowledgment to

Name.....

No..... Street.....

City.....

35 STORIES OF FAMOUS AMERICAN AUTHORS

THE PUBLISHERS CHARGED $5.00 FOR THIS SET. WE SEND IT POSTPAID FOR $2.50. SOLD ONLY IN SETS, OF SIX CLOTH BOUND VOLUMES.

Many thousands of these excellent sets were sold at higher prices.

VOLUME ONE

- 1 The Transferred Ghost, by Frank R. Stockton.
- 2 A Martyr to Science, by Mary Putnam Jacobi, M.D.
- 3 Mrs. Knollys, by J. S. of Dale, author of "Guernedale."
- 4 A Dinner Party, by John Eddy.
- 5 The Mount of Sorrow, by Harriet Prescott Spofford.
- 6 Sister Sylvia, by Mary Agnes Tincker.

VOLUME TWO

- 7 The Spider's Eye, by Lucretia P. Hale.
- 8 A Story of the Latin Quarter, by Frances Hodgson Burnett.
- 9 Two Purse-Companions, by George Parsons Lathrop.
- 10 Poor Ogla-Moga, by David D. Lloyd.
- 11 A Memorable Murder, by Celia Thaxter.
- 12 Venetian Glass, by Brander Matthews.

VOLUME THREE

- 13 Miss Grief, by Constance Fenimore Woolson.
- 14 Love in Old Clothes, by H. C. Bunner.
- 15 Two Buckets in a Well, by N. P. Willis.
- 16 Friend Barton's Concern, by Mary Hallock Foote.
- 17 An Inspired Lobbyist, by J. W. De Forest.

VOLUME FOUR

- 18 Lost in the Fog, by Noah Brooks.
- 19 A Light Man, by Henry James.
- 20 Yatil, by F. D. Millet.
- 21 The End of New York, by Park Benjamin.
- 22 Why Thomas Was Discharged, by George Arnold.
- 23 The Thachypomp, by E. P. Mitchell.

VOLUME FIVE

- 24 The Bishop's Vagabond, by Octave Thanet.
- 25 Lost, by Edward Bellamy.
- 26 Kirby's Coals of Fire, by Louise Stockton.
- 27 Passages from the Journal of a Social Wreck, by Margaret Floyd.
- 28 Stella Grayland, by James T. McKay.
- 29 The Image of San Donato, by Virginia W. Johnson.

VOLUME SIX

- 30 Marse Chan, by Thomas Nelson Page.
- 31 Mr. Bixby's Christmas Visitor, by Charles S. Gage.
- 32 Eli, by C. H. White.
- 33 Young Strong of "The Clarion," by Milicent Washburn Shinn.
- 34 How Old Wiggins Wore Ship, by Captain Roland T. Coffin.
- 35 "—Mas Has Come," by Leonard Kip.

Every home should have a set of Eleanor H. Porter's Best Works IN FOUR VOLUMES, CLOTH BINDING

NOW SOLD IN ANOTHER EDITION FOR $8.00. WE SEND THIS SET, POSTPAID, FOR $4.00. SOLD ONLY IN SETS.

Into countless thousands of homes the stories of Eleanor H. Porter have come as harbingers of sunshine and gladness. Wherever the English language is spoken, men and women have grown to recognize her supreme gift. As one woman wrote from a little mountain village in Kentucky, "More than any one else, Mrs. Porter gives back to us the joy of knowing that this is a beautiful world."

57 SPLENDID STORIES By A GREAT AUTHOR

VOLUME ONE

"The Tie That Binds"

contains

- 1 The Cat and the Painter
- 2 The Heart of a Hunchback
- 3 Polly's Christmas Surprise
- 4 Nuts to Crack and Mary Ellen
- 5 To Let—An Apartment
- 6 Her Wedding Journey
- 7 The Subjugation of Joan
- 8 A Matter of Loyalty
- 9 Jack
- 10 A Woman You Know
- 11 Escorting Harriet
- 12 A Case of the Inevitable
- 13 The Angel of Peace and Billy
- 14 The Second Fiddle
- 15 A Quarantined Quarrel
- 16 A White Rose
- 17 The Squaring of Mr. Jack
- 18 Loosed

VOLUME TWO

"The Tangled Threads"

contains

- 19 A Delayed Heritage
- 20 The Folly of Wisdom
- 21 Crumbs
- 22 A Four-Footed Faith and Two
- 23 A Matter of System
- 24 Angelus
- 25 The Apple of Her Eye
- 26 A Mushroom of Collingsville
- 27 The Angel Boy
- 28 The Lady in Black
- 29 The Saving of Dad
- 30 Millionaire Mike's Thanksgiving
- 31 When Mother Fell Ill
- 32 The Glory and the Sacrifice
- 33 The Daltons and the Legacy

These four volumes give a fine selection of stories for any home library. Order a set now while the opportunity is before you. We cannot make another edition at so low a price. While the balance of the "special edition lasts we will send a four volume cloth bound set prepaid for $4.00.

The CHRISTIAN HERALD, Book Dept.
Bible House, New York

- 34 The Letter
- 35 The Invisible Five
- 36 The Elephant's Board and Keep
- 37 A Patron of Art
- 38 When Polly Ann Played Santa Claus

VOLUME THREE

"Across The Years"

contains

- 39 When Father and Mother Rebelled
- 40 Jupiter and Ann
- 41 The Axminster Path
- 42 Phineas and the Motor Car
- 43 The Most Wonderful Woman
- 44 The Price of a Pair of Shoes
- 45 The Long Road
- 46 A Couple of Capitalists
- 47 In the Footsteps of Katy
- 48 The Bridge Across the Years
- 49 For Jimmy
- 50 A Summons Home
- 51 The Black Silk Gown
- 52 A Belated Honeymoon
- 53 When Aunt Abby Waked Up
- 54 Writers for Three
- 55 The Giving Thanks of Cyrus and Hulda
- 56 A New England Idol

VOLUME FOUR

"Oh, Money! Money!"

"If you don't know how to get happiness out of five dollars, you don't know how to get it out of five thousand," says Maggie, the cheery philosopher of "Oh, Money! Money!" and this is the key-note of Mrs. Porter's story.

OUR MAIL-BAG

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters, nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

MANY of our readers in their letters express their gratification at the news of the Family Altar revival. W. G. S., Dorranceton, Pa., writes: "We must worship God in spirit and in truth, and not in formal prayers. If you can get this conviction fixed in the minds of those who are to erect the Family Altar in their homes, you will make things move. God does not want mere lip worship. He wants the heart. He says, 'Give me thine heart and I will give thee a Kingdom.' We have had Family Prayer in our home for 29 years and we love it. When God meets us, He is our Heavenly Guest. The spirit of prayer is the very soul of religion. Without it, religion is like a room in zero weather without a fire."

U. McG., Gwinner, N. D., writes: "I have been an interested reader of the Christian Herald for some time and wish to assure you that your weekly sermons and Daily Meditations have sure been a comfort and pleasure to me. I am writing to you to secure your co-operation in the organization of a Home Altar and regular worship and explanation of the Bible, etc. Please advise me where modern hymn books may be secured. Other information and advice on the subject will be appreciated also. Would it be advisable to invite friends and neighbors?"

When the Family Altar services are begun in the Christian Herald next month, the way will be made clear to all who desire to join in the movement. If any friend happens to be your guest by all means invite that friend to share in your Altar service, which will be very brief and simple.

C. H. M., Saluvia Pa. writes: "How can people expect to go to heaven when they do not keep the Sabbath holy and obey God's laws? When I was a boy there were no Sunday trains. Furnaces were stopped over the Sabbath. Now if they have improved them so that they can't stop, better do away with the improvement. Enough can be made in six days. Of course there would be a loss. All Sunday work is done to make more money. God has given us six days, and we are not satisfied, but take His day too. Giving large gifts to good causes will not undo the sin of doing business on the Lord's day and compelling men to work, thus depriving them of the chance of keeping the Sabbath right."

Mrs. E. C., Gentry, Ark. The passage in Psa. 84:6: "Who, passing through the valley of Baca, make it a well," is held by the old translators to mean "the valley of tears," or "valley of weeping." Some authorities point out that the reference is to the mulberry tree, or the balsam shrub, and that the phrase may be justifiably rendered the "valley of the tear-tree." The concluding words, "make it a well"—are held to imply that ordinarily the place is dry and sterile, and that its only moisture is found in tears and weeping. As "weeping" signifies dejection, "a well," in contrast, symbolizes overflowing comfort and gladness.

Mrs. L. C., Vicksburg, Miss. Many have found the passage you indicate, Luke 11:4, in the Authorized Version, a stumbling-block; but it is readily explained by standard commentators. God tempts no man, although, by the withdrawal of the Holy Spirit, the individual may be left open to the attacks of the tempter. Satan was the tempter of Jesus (Matt. 4:1). See also Job, chaps. 1 and 2, where Satan is shown as the tempter of the patriarch. The only sources of temptation are the world, the flesh and the evil spirit. With regard to the passage in the Lord's Prayer, it has long been a subject of discussion and some ancient authorities make it read, "Leave us not in temptation, but deliver us from the evil one." There are other variants in the Prayer, so that one may feel free to choose among them. See further texts on the subjects in Rev. 12:9, John 8:44; 11 Cor. 11:3; 1 John 3:8; Mark 1:13; Luke 4:2; Acts 5:13; Matt. 26:41. It can be set down as a general principle that God tempts no one to commit sin, but He does test our faith in Him and our love for Him by trials.

Mrs. S. J. M., Winfield, W. Va. Mr. Wells's book has little value from a scientific viewpoint. He has touched on problems wholly beyond his reach. His historic review, however, is interesting and profitable reading, and his humanitarian spirit is strongly marked. Leaving his speculative philosophy aside, what he has written concerning modern civilization and the "mind of mankind today," the folly and wickedness of war, and the need of a great spiritual inspiration for the world—these are the proper themes of the book. We learn that he has made a number of changes and modifications in the latest edition, some of which affect his conclusions on recent world developments considerably.

Frankness is admirable, even though it may hurt a bit occasionally. We like the spirit of frankness in the letter of Rev. W. O. Hart of Lincoln Academy, Kings Mt., N. C., in which he writes: "In your Mail-Bag for Nov. 19 was a proposition from one of your readers for the Herald to make up a Family Prayer-book having a passage of Scripture, the Apostles' Creed and a short prayer for each of 365 days, also a form for saying grace at the table. I feel inclined to ask you to consider if that would not be an unwise thing to do. Would it not encourage people in selfish neglect of the rightful claims of God upon them? Helping them to virtually say to God, 'My private affairs are the most important; I have scarcely any time to give to you.' They mumble hastily through the form for grace at the table, then rush through the prescribed readings for that day, hurling the prescribed prayer at God as if to say, 'That will do for you'; then rush off to business. God wants us to talk to Him in our own words, both in acknowledging His many mercies and blessings and in prayer for the things we really need. To me, the reading of a prayer to God from a book that was written by some one a way in the past is an abomination and distasteful to God. In my boyhood home father often said, 'Prayers and provender hinder none.' Even when we were farming and the busy season was on, we would have the same devotions after breakfast, each one reading a verse in turn, through the chapter. Sometimes father would say a few words about a verse of special interest, then we would all kneel while he praised God with thanksgiving, and prayed for the things that were on his heart to ask for. The farm was well worked and crops gathered in season, for God prospered us. Four words in Genesis always thrill me; 'Enoch walked with God.' If he had merely buried a prayer-book at God, would He have been so delighted as to have taken him to heaven to be forever with Himself without the pangs of death?"

It is a question which has two sides. We teach the little, lisping child to pray, and we also need to teach some of those who, though having reached the stature of manhood and womanhood, are not yet able to frame even a simple petition for themselves. While we do not believe in the use of formal prayers, yet, if even these will unseal the lips and break the silence, they are better than none. But our correspondent is right in his protest against printed formal prayers, which can never meet a real spiritual need. Prayer is a great spiritual privilege, which increases in power, value and attractiveness with the using. And the real prayer is that which springs spontaneously from the heart, and finds fervent utterance at the lips. That prayer is heard.

Giles B. Cooke (a retired minister of the P. E. Church), Mathews, C. H., Va., gratefully acknowledges receipt of answers to his inquiry in the Mail-Bag from a number of friends, all of whom sent copies of the poem sought for.

Rev. H. M. Mentzer, Pastor of the United Brethren Church of Valley View, Pa., writes of the recent visit of Evangelist John Goode of the Bowery Mission: "We were delighted to have Mr. Goode with us. He served us splendidly. He impressed us anew with the 'Riches of God's grace' in the redemption of the human soul. Extend our best regards to him." His letter conveys the church's offering, and adds: "Accept this as a token of Mr. Goode's service, and for the needy cause to which you will apply it."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by the Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer, Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Ray D. Henkle, Secretary. SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $3.00 a year in advance. Remittance should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald. FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed to Canada, add fifty cents; outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year (subscription price). Canadian remittances accepted at par. CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least three weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. For example, Dec. 21 signifies that subscription expires with the last issue of December 1921.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Copyright, 1921, The Christian Herald. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y. Entered as Second-Class Matter at the Post-Office Department, Ottawa, Canada.

More Than Four Million Homes Will Get It

The Beautiful 1922 Scripture Text Calendar

and Thoughts for Daily Meditation

is the finest calendar the Christian Herald has ever offered to its readers. See below how anyone may secure a copy at nominal cost.

DAILY WORDS OF CHEER

The Scripture Text Calendar for 1922, with its combination of the beauties of art with the daily words of inspiration from the Bible, will, we think, meet with general approval. The art work, including both the front page and the inside pictures, is reproduced in the beautiful four-color process printing.

The size of the Calendar is 9¼ inches wide and 16 inches long. The pages are on fine enamel paper with metal top and cord hanger.

The beautiful picture in colors on the front cover of this issue of the Christian Herald shows one of the twelve colored pictures of this superb Calendar.

TWELVE WORKS OF ART

Besides the cover design, the calendar contains a four-color picture for each month. We present herewith a list of these works of art:

- JANUARY—Christ Healing the Sick Child.
FEBRUARY—Returning from Jerusalem.
MARCH—The Story of the Good Samaritan.
APRIL—He Is Risen.
MAY—Christ Teaching Little Children.
JUNE—The Son of a Carpenter.
JULY—Christ Going Through the Wheat Field.
AUGUST—Christ and the Fallen Woman.
SEPTEMBER—Jesus Sitting by the Sea of Galilee.
OCTOBER—The Rainbow Promise.
NOVEMBER—The Story of Jacob's Ladder.
DECEMBER—The Holy Night.

You can only appreciate the general excellence of the design and the artistic effect produced by the combination of beautiful colors by sending for the calendar itself.

As an adornment for the walls of the home, the famous picture, "Master, I Perish," artistically adapted to the cover design of the Scripture Text Calendar for 1922, is one which speaks eloquently, conveying to the beholder a suggestion of hope and good cheer.

By referring to the Scripture Text Calendar you can tell what the Sunday School Lesson will be for any Sunday in 1922—an aid to the busy teacher.

A 200-YEAR CALENDAR

On the back of the Calendar is a 200-Year Calendar, by the use of which you can locate the day of the week on which you were born, or any important event in recent history; in fact, the dates within two centuries. A table of the Easter Sundays between 1860 and 1955 is given; also a table showing Standard Time Around the World. These educational features add to the practical utility of the calendar and enhance its value to old and young.

Here is how every reader may get one

We will send the Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks (new or renewed) and a copy of the Scripture Text Calendar, both postpaid, for ONLY $2.20

We will send single copies or extra copies of the Calendar, postpaid, for 35c a copy. If you are not renewing your subscription just now, send 35c to get a copy of the Calendar. Order now, for the quantity is limited. You will be delighted with its beauty and daily value.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

65 BIBLE HOUSE

NEW YORK

Clubbing Rates of the Christian Herald with other Magazines

Any of these excellent offers saves money for you.

| COMBINATION | Reg. Rate | Clubbing Rate | Saving to Subscriber |
|---|-----------|---------------|----------------------|
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Woman's World..... | .50 | $2.10 | $.40 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Today's Housewife..... | 1.00 | $2.25 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| The Pathfinder..... | 1.00 | $2.35 | $.65 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| McCall's Magazine..... | 1.00 | $2.50 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Today's Housewife..... | 1.00 | $2.50 | $1.00 |
| Woman's World..... | .50 | | |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| People's Home Journal..... | 1.25 | $2.65 | $.60 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| McCall's Magazine..... | 1.00 | $2.75 | $1.25 |
| Today's Housewife..... | 1.00 | | |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Boys' Life..... | 2.00 | $2.75 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| The Pathfinder..... | 1.00 | $2.75 | $1.25 |
| Today's Housewife..... | 1.00 | | |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Modern Priscilla..... | 2.00 | $2.85 | $1.15 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Boy's Magazine..... | 1.50 | $3.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Today's Housewife..... | 1.00 | $3.00 | $1.25 |
| People's Home Journal..... | 1.25 | | |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| American Cookery..... | 1.50 | $3.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Normal Instructor..... | 2.00 | $3.10 | $.90 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Sunset Magazine..... | 2.50 | $3.25 | $1.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| People's Home Journal..... | 1.25 | $3.25 | $1.00 |
| McCall's Magazine..... | 1.00 | | |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Little Folks..... | 2.00 | $3.00 | $1.00 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| The Etude (for Music Lovers)..... | 2.00 | $3.50 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Pictorial Review..... | 2.50 | $3.75 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Collier's Weekly..... | 2.50 | $3.75 | $.75 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| McCall's Magazine..... | 1.00 | $3.75 | $1.25 |
| The Etude (for music lovers)..... | 2.00 | | |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| American Boy..... | 2.00 | $3.75 | $.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Woman's Home Companion..... | 2.00 | $3.75 | $.25 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Junior Instructor..... | 2.50 | $4.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Youth's Companion..... | 2.50 | $4.00 | $.50 |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Little Folks..... | 2.00 | $4.00 | $1.00 |
| McCall's Magazine..... | 1.00 | | |
| THE CHRISTIAN HERALD..... | $2.00 | | |
| Modern Priscilla or The Etude (for music lovers)..... | 2.00 | $4.00 | $1.00 |
| Today's Housewife..... | 1.00 | | |

If you prefer any other combination, write to us for a money saving rate

CLUBBING ORDER BLANK THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Bible House, New York

$.....remittance is enclosed for which you may send me for ONE YEAR each of the following at the special clubbing rate.

| | New or Renewal | Begin with Issue of |
|-------------------------|----------------|---------------------|
| 1. The Christian Herald | | |
| 2. | | |
| 3. | | |
| Name | | |
| Street or Route No. | | |
| Town or City | | State |

Boys and Girls—Make your own Christmas Candy at Home

It's great fun—easy to make and costs little. Read how to do it.

NO festival was ever so beautiful as Christmas.

It's the time, as every boy and girl knows, when the Fairy Queen makes her robe of the shimmer of the silver moonbeams; when the Frost King writes his pictured message in feathery crystals on the window panes; when the North Wind strikes his lyre of pendant icicles, and elfin music tinkles through the woodland.

Christmas is the wondrous time of giving—of expressing love and affection in the little token, freighted with golden wishes and tender sentiment.

And it is the time of feasting—of enjoying the good things that many people must consider luxuries at other times.

Of all the good things for the Christmas celebration there is nothing that's enjoyed more than delicious candy. For Christmas really wouldn't be Christmas without candy.

With Karo, the Great American Syrup, the most wholesome and appetizing candy is now within the reach of all.

You can make delicious Chocolate Fudge, Peanut Brittle and Caramels with Karo, that will just melt in your mouth, and make everyone in the family wish that Christmas came once a month, instead of once a year.

And there's lots of fun making these delicious confections—seeing how nicely they “come out.” You could not have more wholesome candy—at any price—and the cost is but little.

Here are the recipes for making Chocolate Fudge, Caramels and Peanut Brittle. From your grocer get the kind of Karo indicated in the recipe. Read the descriptions below about the three kinds of Karo—all three kinds make delicious candy:

Chocolate Fudge

3 cups Granulated Sugar $\frac{3}{4}$ cup Milk
3 tablespoons Cocoa 1 teaspoon Vanilla
1 tablespoon Mazola $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon Salt
2 tablespoons Karo, Blue Label

Cook together sugar, cocoa, Karo, Mazola, salt and milk until it forms a soft ball when dropped in cold water. Set aside until cool. Add vanilla and beat until it creams. Pour into oiled pan and cut in squares.

Peanut Brittle

1 cup Karo, Blue Label 2 tablespoons Water
1 cup Brown Sugar 1 cup Shelled Peanuts
2 tablespoons Mazola

Boil sugar, Karo and water until it is crisp when dropped in cold water. Just before taking from fire add Mazola and nuts. Pour into tin oiled with Mazola.

Karo Caramels

2 cups Granulated $\frac{1}{2}$ cup Milk
Sugar $\frac{1}{4}$ cup Mazola
1 $\frac{3}{4}$ cups Karo, Blue 1 teaspoon Vanilla
Label 1 cup Chopped Nuts

Cook sugar, Karo, milk and Mazola until it forms a firm ball in cold water. Remove from fire, add vanilla and nuts and pour into pan oiled with Mazola.

FREE The beautifully illustrated Corn Products Cook Book of 64 pages—containing splendid recipes for candy making. Sent free with a booklet that every parent should read. Tells all about the wonderful value of Karo; explains the meaning of Dextrose and why children thrive on it. Write Corn Products Refining Company, Dept. A, Argo, Ill.

What some authorities say about Karo and Dextrose

Dr. Edwin F. Bowers, noted writer on foods, says “Karo is one of the most valuable of all energy foods for growing children. It is unusually palatable, and its heavy dextrose content makes it an ideal food for little human dynamos in short dresses and knickerbockers.”

Dr. William H. Porter, great food authority, says that dextrose “develops increased resistance to fatigue, and a greater capacity for sustained mental and physical effort. The nervous system shows more stability. Children seem to develop a better color, as well as an increase in the appetite, and in the capacity for assimilating food.”

Give the children all the Karo that Nature tells them to eat—on well-done pancakes, spread on sliced bread, or made into pure home-made candies. It will make them sturdy and robust, and more active for work, play or growth.

YOUR PROTECTION

Do not be deceived by cans containing syrup that might look like Karo. The name “Karo” is on every can of original Karo—look for it and be assured of full weight cans and highest quality.

BLUE Karo

The standard table syrup for pancakes, hot biscuits, waffles, etc. Also for cooking, baking and candy-making. Light brown color, delicious flavor—a heavy-bodied syrup.

RED Karo

The ideal syrup for every use—for cooking, baking, candy-making and preserving. Because of its honey-like appearance many prefer it as a spread for cakes, biscuits, breads.

GREEN Karo

Flavored with highest grade real maple sugar. Very moderate in price—absolutely pure. The makers of Karo are the world's largest users of the highest grade maple sugar—over a thousand tons used annually.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

The Sunset of the Year

$2.00 A YEAR

DECEMBER 31, 1921

5c A COPY

CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE PAPER

A Sermon — inspired by a Weed Chain Advertisement

The Slip-Shod Driver

TEXT: — "And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country; and there wasted his substance in riotous living." LUKE 15:13.

WHY did the prodigal go into the far country? To escape home standards and the influence of his father's God—to leave behind the restraints centuries of love and wisdom have formed to steady those who live in slippery places. More terrible than any automobile is a carelessly driven life—the higher powered, the more terrible. The wisdom of God and man combine to form the many linked safe-guards that home and religion seek to throw around each life. These are the tire-chains. The man who is leaving these out of his life is leaving the "tire chains in the locker". He is a slip-shod liver. Put on the tire chains. ¶ The slip-shod liver "comes recklessly out of the side streets" . . . of life. He "cuts the corners" of others' rights. He disregards the rules for making and keeping the honest life, the true home, the square business, the clean city and nation. He "Let's 'er go so long as he gets by with it". Drive carefully. For example, when a man marries the finest girl in town (as we all do) and so prevents any other fellow from making her a good husband, it is up to him to give her the very best husband any girl has. So, Put on the tire chains and run carefully. ¶ "The slip-shod driver never inspects his brakes and steering gear." That is, heedless men or women never really consider their own lives carefully, never inspect their self-control—either as to their ability to direct their lives into sane courses or to say and act "No" when they ought to do so for their own good and that of others. One of the primary things in true, sane living is, "Know thy self." And a second, "Control thy self." ¶ Again, "The slip-shod driver does not give signals." He goes over the road as though his were the only car on the way. So the slip-shod liver has no time for conventions, for what people will think, for the peace and quiet of other lives. Often by this breach of the rules of orderly society he puts lady friends in embarrassing positions and, at times, starts uncalled for scandals that wreck reputations and homes. He may get men companions, dependent for their standing on their reputations, into positions that class them with rakes and social outcasts. Possibly no wrong is done or intended, but conventions are violated—the proper social signals are not given—and sharp tongued critics do the rest. In this way, misunderstood and misrepresented, many lives have been wrecked, more yet have been injured. Respect the forms of right conduct. Give the signals. ¶ "The greatest menace"—are the talented men and women of high position or "good family" who are so intent on their own wilful way that, claiming all the prestige which their position gives, they sneer at laws and customs that they should respect and obey, and run amuck with pleasures and passions, or grasping and greed. The greatest menace to America today is LAWLESSNESS of one type or another on the part of her own citizens. ¶ THE REMEDY—is the endless chain of interlinked self-control under the laws of God and man—voluntary upholding of law because everything else is lawbreaking; voluntary doing right because everything else is wrong; voluntary being wise because everything else is foolish.

RESIDENCE 321 S. MOORE STREET

TELEPHONE NO. 799

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

ALCONA, IOWA

B. M. SOUTHGATE, MINISTER

Oct. 28, 1921.

American Chain Co., Inc.,
Bridgeport, Conn.

Dear Sirs:—

I am enclosing a brief summary of my 30 minute Sermon on "The Slip-Shod Driver". I gave out copies of your ad in the morning as an ad of the Service. We had an unusually large audience, especially of automobile men. The sermon was very effective! I thank you for your assistance.

Cordially yours,

B. M. Southgate

The Slip-Shod Driver

THE slip-shod driver leaves Weed Tire Chains in the locker when careful drivers put them on their tires. The slip-shod driver comes recklessly out of side streets; the slip-shod driver cuts corners; the slip-shod driver never inspects his brakes and steering gear; the slip-shod driver does not signal before turning or stopping; the slip-shod driver does not give a warning signal of his approach.

Help us concentrate the light of a condemning public opinion on the slip-shod driver—the greatest menace of motoring.

Help us forge an endless chain campaign for motoring safety for everyone.

Show this advertisement to all slip-shod drivers you meet and ask them to spread its doctrines to others in their class.

Reprints of this advertisement will be mailed on request.

AMERICAN CHAIN COMPANY, INCORPORATED
BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT

In Canada: Dominion Chain Company, Limited, Niagara Falls, Ontario

District Sales Offices: Boston, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Portland, Ore., San Francisco

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS OF CHAIN IN THE WORLD

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

(IN WHICH IS INCORPORATED WORLD OUTLOOK)
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

GRAHAM PATTERSON, PUBLISHER

Four Square with the Law

How You Can Help in Making the Eighteenth Amendment Fully Effective

By ROY A. HAYNES

(National Prohibition Commissioner)

YOU have asked me in unvarnished words to express my opinion of what church people can do to assist my department in the enforcement of the Prohibition Act. I welcome this opportunity of presenting to the Christian citizenship of our land my views on some of the most helpful ways in which assistance can be rendered in making the Eighteenth Amendment more effective. The problem is not a small one and there are many angles from which it may be attacked.

First, let us consider the propaganda that has been most insistent against this law, the avidity with which many newspapers seize upon any items that may tend to discredit the law or its operation and the prominence given to any incident that may seem to reflect upon the success of Prohibition. Some editors even seize the faintest pretext to write unfavorable editorials. Each occasion of this kind is a challenge to an intelligent Christian citizen to write the editors of such papers, plainly setting forth his own views and stating the facts as he sees them. Most papers will gladly publish such letters, and even where they are not published the editor is apprised of the fact that public opinion is on the side of law enforcement.

Dickens, in his inimitable way, holds up the negative Christianity of one of his characters whose religion was largely a protest against the failure of others. I am persuaded that it is not quite enough to denounce the public official who is recreant of duty in enforcing the law, but we should go further and give encouragement and support to those officials who are giving their best efforts to make the law effective. And we should go further than public utterance or private expression: We should be willing to act as witnesses for the Government when the facts of violation are in our possession. It would also be well for our citizens interested in law enforcement to attend the courts, giving moral support to the Government officials. It is too frequently true that the friends of the bootlegger throng the court rooms and the friends of the law are conspicuously absent.

WHILE I have never made a specific appeal to the public, nor asked private citizens to report liquor violations, yet it is true that there are many citizens who do not hesitate to inform public officials of the violations they observe, thus rendering a service that might be difficult to accomplish otherwise. I do not pretend to speak for others, but I hold for myself that each citizen who is the recipient of great blessings under our Constitution and laws is in a measure a guardian and defender of that Constitution and this law, and that it is his duty to combat with all his power any effort being made to nullify the law and to defeat its purpose.

A friend of mine was recently in a theater where one of the stage characters resorted to some stock joke on Prohibition in an effort to get a laugh. There were a few who found it funny, but the great majority were silent. The silence of the great law-abiding and law-upholding majority of our people is sometimes misinterpreted by newspaper men and public officials as either disinterestedness or disapproval of the law, therefore, at this time it would seem most appropriate that we find expression for our principle, and in every way possible put ourselves on record for the law, in conversation, both in private and public places.

I do not mean to obtrude our views where unwelcome, but I do mean that our conversation and deportment should be so pronounced that there can be no question as to where we stand. It is to be regretted in our country that the custom of showing disapproval by hissing the actors has died out so that the cheap and tawdry type of an actor can with impunity cater to the lowest and most obnoxious elements of our citizenship, while the more refined and patriotic elements can only sit in disapproving silence.

NATURE was not kind to me when athletic ability was given out, so it was that I found myself on the side-lines or on the bleachers when college sport held the stage of interest. But, I refused to be a mere silent

ROY A. HAYNES, of Hillsboro, Ohio, is a militant prohibition commissioner. He is obtaining an increasingly effective enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment because he is fighting for it, and he has imbued his associates in the enforcement service with a new fighting spirit.

We asked Mr. Haynes to tell the great body of Christian Herald readers how they could hold up his hands and assist him in the great work he is doing. Here is his answer on this page. There surely is some suggestion in his article that you, as an individual, may adapt.

spectator—my motto was: "He serves who only cheers the runner." As the years passed, I have become more and more convinced of the truth of that motto.

In no fanciful way is it true that the enforcement of the law today is a contest between the official who is doing his duty and the criminal combination that attempts to defeat the purpose of the law for its gain, and the Government agent is in the thick of the fight. He is subjected to the greatest temptations on one hand and to abuse and vilification on the other hand. He is held up to scorn and derision by the enemies of the law publicly, while he is cajoled and flattered, or offered bribes in private. These men are subjected to the severest tests by the unconscionable enemies of the law in a continuous effort to break down their moral fibre and loyalty to duty.

The citizen can perform a real service by giving encouragement to these men in the difficult task they attempt. By the encouraging word or moral support of his efforts the official may be encouraged to even greater activity, or strengthened in his loyalty to duty. An expression of appreciation often comes as an Angel of Strength to men in some hour of crisis. Let us, then, when the opportunity offers, "Cheer the runner."

So far in this article there have been pointed out the ways in which the individual can help by his own effort, unassisted by the team, if I may use the term, or by the organized effort of social, civic or religious nature. There are many of these organizations for the promotion of Christian citizenship and civic righteousness that offer as great opportunities today as at any other time to invest one's money, time or talent in a very effective way. Indeed we see today the wonderful results that are being obtained in almost all parts of the world through the Red Cross, the Missionary Societies and the Social Service organizations of the country. They articulate the Christian humanitarian impulse of the people. So, the humanitarian and patriotic impulse of this country is today organized into societies for the promotion of Law Enforcement, Americanism and Good Citizenship. These nonpartisan and nonsectional organizations are the unmistakable means whereby the Christian citizen may express his loyalty to the Constitution and express his desire to make the Eighteenth Amendment respected and revered throughout the land.

SO THIS is the call for good Americans to rally to the cause of Law Enforcement through individual and collective effort, but it is not the frantic call to rally to a dying cause; it is rather an appeal to Christian citizens to do their duty toward their country, to take their places for the Constitution and the laws of this great land; to arise to the privilege of citizenship and make a definite contribution of their ability in the triumph of a great cause.

Let us not be discouraged. The Constitution will stand. Americanism will prevail over every attempt of anarchy or treason. Let us not lose patience with or faith in the American people, but let us rededicate ourselves to the great task of today in the spirit that triumphed in the past, "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are now in." With that spirit and motive, we shall find, no matter where we serve, that our experience will be similar to that of one of our great Federal judges who recently wrote:

"But my colleague, Judge ——— and I have been enforcing the law and I am proud to report that, comparatively speaking, in ——— the law is respected and our experience shows that it can be enforced. You would expect that this would be one of the most difficult centers in the United States, but among the crooks in the underworld ——— has the reputation of being a place to avoid in the traffic in intoxicating liquor. Of course, we have plenty to do, but I assure you that it is not anywhere near the burden that I expected it would be, and it is getting lighter all the time."

In a recent review of the problem and purpose of the prohibition enforcement office, I said:

"Lining up the problem in groups, we found: First — The problem of the dishonest brewer, distiller, wholesaler and manufacturer. Second — The smuggler, rum-runner, moonshiner with their confederates. Third — Propagandists. Fourth — Last but not least, the apathetic citizen."

"With state directors of keen minds, strong will, unquestioned loyalty, surrounded with men who hold the amendment as sacred, we have constructed new organizations, impelled not by the spirit of change or desire of innovation, but with an underlying purpose to enforce the law in the most positive and direct way."

"The aim of the department is constructive enforcement on a straightforward, high-minded basis, and instructions to directors and agents are to adhere strictly to the law. Directors in every state are conferring and co-operating with United States and state attorneys for the purpose of operating fully within the law, and information in our possession justifies the statement that enforcement results of constructive character are being secured in a degree highly satisfactory, all conditions considered, and the newly organized enforcement work may be expected to increase in efficiency and results with each succeeding month."

Roy A. Haynes at his desk ready for action

The Renaissance in Old Town

And How It Brought a War Memorial of Service to All

By MARTHA CANDLER

"NOTHING changes in Old Town," I ruminated as I walked down the Big Road toward Aunt Lindy's. The shut-up houses with all their front shades drawn looked just as I had last seen them not so long after we went into the war. The same dogs came out to sniff at me. The same board, I noticed, was missing from the bridge over Winding Creek.

"Even a World War would fail to touch the narrow, self-centered population and stir it from its stagnated ruts," I decided somewhat bitterly, but a little further out the bitterness all went out of me. Russet apples, bursting with fragrant sweetness, lay thick in the orchards on both sides of the road. The corn shocks in the fields were pure gold, and asters and golden-rod ran rife along all the fence-rows, while here and there a flaming maple was glorified in the pure orange of the afternoon sunlight. And awaiting me would be Aunt Lindy, one of Nature's choicest philosophers.

She saw me and came down through the rows of horsemint and marigolds to meet me, her well-remembered figure as unchanged as all the rest. When she had pushed me into her big cushioned chair on the sunny side of the spring-house, she told me of all the hundred and one homely things she knew I would like to hear—the preserves, the amount of honey her bees had stored up for her, the wren that always came back to build in the lilac bush. And as I listened, with eyes on the serrated ranks of the autumn-clad hills; I seemed wrapt around with a sense of well-being I had not known since that day—

As she reached over and silently touched my hand, we each knew what was in the other's mind.

"I want you to go with me tomorrow to the dedication of the Community Church and Social Center," she said finally. "It's our war memorial, and I'd just been wishing you could get here for the big day. I s'pose you came on the night train, and haven't seen it yet? Well, that's all the better."

"But Old Town—a Memorial Community Church!" I could scarcely believe it. There were six churches before—"one of every kind," Aunt Lindy had once remarked. Each one had been conducting its own war work when I had left just at the time when the war had begun to be the "rage" in Old Town, with knitting and patented stitch-holders, food conservation, uniforms and all the costly fixtures with so much competition among the little groups that dear "Mrs. Deacon Potts" had meekly said that the folks in the Poor House scarcely knew what to make of things, being suddenly reduced from a surfeit of attention to just what the Baptist Missionary Society could do for them at odd times.

BUT that was all before Bobby Evans, Mayor Evans's son, the Jones boy and Jimmy Turner had gone marching off. It was of these three only sons that Aunt Lindy went on to speak as she told the story of the community memorial.

"You surely recall Jimmy Turner's father," she said at last, "even if you never saw Jimmy. He come on from the North somewhere to take charge of the Methodist Mission over across the railroad tracks. He had a lot of ideas about brotherhood and sociableness and the like. You know how Old Town would take to that, with all its cliques and clans and not much else! This 'un not playing because that one played, and the like!"

"Some got pretty hard down on him and called him downright meddlesome when he went and got the Federal Government to agree to send in a demonstrator to show the farmers how to farm scientifically. They was to pay half if the county would pay half. Well, the county commissioners got as mad as blazes and sent him word they would see him—you know where—first, that their farmin' methods was good enough for their fathers before them and was good enough for them, and that he'd ought to have stayed in the North where his new-fangled ideas was appreciated, and not come tryin' to foist them on honest folks that would have to foot the bills."

"He taught the mill boys wood carving and carpentry and gardening, and they was all crazy about him. I liked him, too, from the first I saw him walkin' past my gate here on them there 'hikin' trips' he took the boys on. The way he took off his hat, if he had one on, and bowed to me with all his white hair a-blowin' in the wind, you'd a-thought I was a queen and no less. Sometimes he'd walk by alone when I was inside, and I'd watch him through my scrim curtains. He always had a shinin' look on his face and stepped along triumphant-like, remindin' me of the place in the Bible where it tells about Moses when he walked and talked with God.

"Once he got up a dramatic show among the boys. He went to Mayor Evans and wanted to get free use of the Court House to give it in, that bein' the only place big enough for gatherin' after the Town Hall was condemned and closed up and the wind blew over the Chautauqua building. Old Nancy's Henry that works in the Court House said it was something awful the tongue-lashing that Evans give the old gentleman. Told him he didn't have a thing to do with the Court House, and if he did, he'd charge them as much as anybody else, he would! Said he didn't hold with fillin' mill hands full of stuck-up notions, and makin' them think they owned the earth—the mills are outside the city limits you know, so he could talk independent. And most of the town sided with him. And

Not Old Town's new building, but the Neighborhood House at Englewood, N. J., one of the best examples of a community center for a small city the boys had to go ahead and have their shindig as best they could in the empty rooms over the undertaker's where they have their club room. I could have cried.

"THAT very day I saw him comin', and stepped out, real impulsive-like to speak to him and tell him not to pay no attention to Old Town's set ways. But bless you, I couldn't say a word."

"How beautiful your sweet peas are," he says with that beatific smile of his, and went. That wasn't long before Jimmy Turner come on from his college to stop with his father a spell before going to war. After he come, I'd see the two of them walking past every day, arm in arm, the boy so fine and straight and tall, and his father lookin' up at him, so proud-like."

"Then them three boys went, with most of us at the depot to see them off, laughin' and cryin' while the brass band played 'Dixie' and 'My Country, 'Tis of Thee.' After that, one by one, seems like most of the other boys come of age and went. Gradually, Old Town stopped prancin' in the harness and settled down to the long, anxious strain. Things weighed heavy. Most of us hated to look in the dailies that come from the city on the noon train, or at the Old Town Star, and bated not to. Then Widow Young over across the creek got the word about her son. One day not so long after that, handbills was scattered about announcin' that a 'sing' would be held in the Court House that night, and urg'in' everybody to be there, and sing the songs the boys were singing 'Over There.' Seems like everybody was there. Mis' Green, the Methodist organist, played on the piano, and everybody joined in the songs.

"Then Mr. Peabody, the Episcopal clergyman, got up and suggested everybody paying special tribute to the memory of Eli Young. 'We all remember him,' he says. 'Every man, woman, and child remembers how he used to come up Main Street mornings on his way to work, rain or shine, always radiant, always happy, always with a cheerful word for everybody. We know that's the way he went out to meet the enemy and do his final duty, the same as he did his every-day duty. Now, let's pay silent tribute to his memory for a moment, then join in singing the "Battle Hymn of the Republic!"'

"Tears were streaming down our faces as we all sang that final 'Glory, Glory, Hallelujah!'

"We sat silent after that, nobody feeling like talking, or singing anything else. Then Lawyer Jones got up.

"Brethren," he says—he used to be a Baptist deacon and I guess he forgot it wasn't prayer meeting—we have paid tribute to our fallen hero. In our hearts we are all thanking God for the boys that are still safe. But there is something else you do not know and I feel that you ought to know it if I can tell you without violating confidence. He turned to the corner where Mr. Turner had been sittin' all evening with a question-like motion, and as Mr. Turner nodded back I noticed how terrible white he was.

"It's about Jimmy Turner," Lawyer Jones went on. "There was a dangerous trip to be made right through into the enemy's lines and that boy volunteered to make it. All of us here with sons in the service (he looked toward Mr. Evans and old man Hathaway) hope our boys would have done the same thing if they'd been there, and we are proud of Jimmy Turner having done it. Somebody in the back of the house started to cheering and he had to stop for a minute."

"What I was goin' to say, though," he went on, "is that that boy was asked to leave a written statement about any property he might own before going. The only thing he had in the world was a hundred dollar Liberty Bond and—he had to stop for a minute his voice suddenly got so husky—he sent that to his father here to start a fund for an Old Town Community Center. He knew that had been his father's cherished dream. He wanted the gift to be anonymous, but I think it will do us good back here in our safety and ease to know what he wrote about it's taking a World War to get us acquainted with our neighbors and teach us the simple meaning of friendliness. "Us boys know." Them was his last words. He hasn't been heard from. Word may come any time of his safety but—"

"Just then everybody turned to the door. There outside stood Bill Robbins, the night operator from the depot, motioning to Mr. Turner to come out. He looked hot and excited as if he'd run all the way. Everbody was astir, recallin' how he had gone in person at three in the morning to take the word to Widow Young and break it easy-like. Some tried to hold Mr. Turner back, but he got up, pushing them aside and walkin' out, erect but totterin'. He shut the door after him. After what seemed a long time, he come in and, holdin' back the people crowded around to condole with him, he drew Lawyer Jones and the Baptist preacher into the little jury room. Directly somebody come and took Mis' Jones in, and we all sat around and waited. You know how it is when you're in a house a-watchin' with somebody while they are waitin' for a loved one to pass on. Well, it was like that. I was plum sick at heart for the old man."

AFTER what seemed like ages, Preacher Willtss come out to the hall to telephone and we found out it was Lieutenant Laurence Jones and not Jimmy Turner that the telegram had told about. Bill Robbins had thought that Mr. Turner would be the best one to break the news. 'Killed in action,' the message had said, and Mis' Jones, not being so strong, had fainted away back there in the jury room. Directly the doctor come and they took her away in the automobile, Mr. Turner and Mr. Willtss goin' along with Mr. Jones and his sister. The rest of us stayed, sorter huddled together. Mis' Green started to play the Battle Hymn again, but choked and broke down when she tried to lift the tune.

"Then old 'Skinfint' Billings, you remember him, got up and cleared his throat. He said he reckoned it was correct that it took a war to teach folks some things. Said right out loud that he'd never known before how much he'd missed from not having a son, and that his sorrow was greater than these others', because no matter how much they were called on to give up, they could give to the great cause with joy and pride, and have their memories left to them. 'Not having a great possession to sacrifice,' he went on, 'I want to give of the small possessions that I have!' He was always called the richest and stingiest man in the county.

"I want Jimmy Turner and our boys if they do come back to be able to say that we have been worth the sacrifices they have made so freely for us, and—" his voice got so low you could hardly hear him, "and, if they don't come back, let us believe that they are invisible witness to the manner in which their mantles fall upon us.

"I want us now," he said, "to pledge ourselves to build this Community Center he wrote about, and to make it a Living Memorial to the spirit of service which exalted our boys. Lets us make it a place where we may all serve each other and the community at large, and prove the democracy they marched forth to establish. I herewith pledge my property at the corner of Main and Depot Streets as a building site. How many are with me?"

"That is the site the Old Town Improvement Association has been trying to buy for ten years, and has offered him ten times its value for, and that the town has tried to condemn and buy for a public park. I guess you come on the night train, so you didn't notice the change in it, new building, grounds all laid out, and all.

"Evans got up and said he'd give two thousand. Then Mis' Evans pulled on his coat-tails, and when she could stop cryin' whispered something to him, and he got up and made it three thousand. Mis' Evans, you know was always the leader of the Monday

Twenty set, that's Old Town's Four Hundred, and the most snobbish woman in town, they said. Mis' Anderson pledged a thousand for the Colonial Dames, and Miss Lawrence five hundred for the Daughters of the Confederacy. The Girls' Patriotic gave five hundred. Even Henry, who rings the Methodist bell and janitors the Court House, give ten.

"I PROMISED fifty myself." Aunt Lindy took up her narrative after we had silently watched the last rays of the sunset fade, and she had moved our chairs in and put the kettle on over the bed of live coals in the kitchen fireplace. "Part of it I'd saved for a rainy day, and the rest I'm making by baking cakes and selling them in Maxwell's grocery.

"We surely did see the Glory of the Lord that night. Stayed till early morning just talkin'. It was old man Billings himself who said the whole town ought to get as much out of the Community Center as the mill boys got out of the rooms over the undertaker's store. It was Mayor Evans proposed, meek and humble-like, that so long as the idea was a long-cherished one of Mr. Turner's, why not move his mission work into the Center and make him resident host.

"Why not build an auditorium in the Community Center!" somebody else suggested, "and use it for Sunday afternoon union services," the location being about the most convenient one in town for most folks. Everybody liked the idea, some beginning to talk right away of a pipe organ and all such that could be put in later.

"No, Jimmy Turner was never heard from. We waited a long time, then put the gold star on our service flag for him. When we told Mr. Turner about the happenings there that night, he was pleased and deeply touched. But doin' an honor to him is something like tryin' to put God in your debt. He always pays you back a hundred-fold. He said it had come to him after thinkin' it all over that the Community Center ought to be a regular Sitting-Room and Parlor for the whole county, and not just for the village, and that if there was no objection, he would like to see a room set aside special for country women so they could rest and brush up after their shopping, or lay their children down for naps. Then he said the social meeting-rooms ought to be put at the disposal of men from out over the county when they come to town to court or county business or anything like that. You'd have thought he'd hated the county officers after the way they'd treated him, now, wouldn't you?

"WELL, tomorrow, as I say, is the dedication. There's going to be music and speeches, and a procession of all the little children in town, dressed in white and carrying flowers, will be followed by the bearers of the memorial tablet that is to be placed above the platform in the big auditorium, in memory of the boys of the town and county that fought in the war. We'll go together."

Twilight had deepened into dark as we sat over our empty teacups, with the room lighted only by the flickering of the dying fire, and we remained silent until I suddenly remembered that I must be going.

"The same Old Town," I said aloud to myself as I went home down the fragrant lane lighted by the newly risen moon. "The same—but reborn into a new spiritual consciousness." And I was very small and very humble and very apologetic for the judgment I had uttered, as I turned my face upward to the unmoved and infinite majesty of the heavens and stood still until it seemed to me that the glory of "Old Man" Turner's boy, and the Jones's boy, and the Evans's, and all that other radiant company there with him whom I had lost, shone down upon me and would be shining down upon us all on the morrow which was to be Dedication Day.

"Us Boys Know!" were the words that came back to me as I walked on.

The Village Bethel

By ARTHUR L. SALMON

IN EVERY English village we are accustomed to look to the church for romance and beauty and for historical or other association. Apart from its spiritual significance, the church stands as the local landmark, the memorial, the place of ancient and reverend remembrances. Visitors come to it; artists love it; without it, the village would seem empty. But this old sanctuary, built when men gave of their best in wealth and in craft, has its companion, we may say its rival, not only in the local inn but in the village Bethel. Sometimes there is friction; sometimes there is a more or less full harmony of working and of purpose; but the Bethel is always there, a contrast and in some sense a protest.

It is rarely beautiful; visitors do not ask for its key, artists do not sit to sketch it; it stands by the roadway, bare, simple, uncompromising, with its walls of white or yellow-wash and its single gable, beneath which is inscribed the year of its erection. At times, when more substantially built, we see on its lower slabs the names of donors, who have thus purchased a few years of enduring remembrance. There are exceptions, but it is frequently to this unpretentious structure that we must look for the most active village life of the Sunday.

Partly, the plainness and lack of adornment are the result of poverty; partly, they spring from an innate puritanism; sometimes, it may be, from defective taste, from the lack of any impulse that craves the beautiful.

Within, there are naked walls, perhaps relieved by a few garish texts; there are wooden benches; there is no pulpit, but a low platform with table and chair at the head of the room. In larger villages, of course, the building may be of more pretence; its pews may be comfortably cushioned; there may even be an organ and perhaps a choir. But we are thinking now of the more humble Bethel that is just one advance from the rude unceiled barn.

ONE may ask oneself naturally: What is the force that impels the village-folk to come to this bare and cold room, rather than to the alluring and soothing parish church. The church has an immemorial tradition behind it; the forefathers of the village and hamlets lie in its graveyard; the villagers of today usually come to it for their baptism, their marriage, and to the graveyard for their burials. They go to the parson for relief in want, for blankets and soup; but they go to the Bethel for their worship.

At times, it is true, in places where the questions between Church and Dissent are not bitterly contended, there may be a divided interest; it is by no means rare for a villager to attend his church at one service and his chapel for the other. Such a division may even be heartily approved by the clergyman, if he feels that the chapel gives something which is a little outside his own activities. A wise man will be often tolerant of these wanderings. But in many cases the village folk go to the Bethel only, and find there the only center of their social life.

There are reasons undoubtedly for the preference, and they are not always theological reasons. For one thing, as a rule we may say that the preacher at the Bethel speaks the villager's own language; the parson does not. Even when they have a settled pastor at the Bethel, he is nearer to the social condition of his people; but in small places the services generally are conducted by "supplies," local preachers, at times even by the villagers themselves. Now and then a student from a Dissenting training-college may come, but he is not often greatly appreciated; the folk like to hear their own tongue, their own colloquialisms, their own rugged yet expressive local accent and phrase. They also like dearly to be allowed to lift up their own voices, not only in the hymns which they shout more loudly than would seem becoming in a church, but also at special times in words of extempore prayer or possibly expounding the Scripture.

We must above all remember that the Bethel is usually extremely homely in every sense of that word. The people can shake hands and talk together before or after service; they do not feel stiff and constrained. They understand and do not resent the familiarity with which God is sometimes approached in the prayers; the lack of reverence sometimes evident does not jar upon them. They also can sit where they like and are not awed by the presence of "the gentry."

The villagers like the church to marry and bury them; they can not overcome an old partly superstitious regard for the validity of the church offices; but they come to the Bethel for their daily needs, because it is their own creation. They have a voice in its management; they partly control its purse. The Bethel understands them and caters for them. Also, they are not above the feeling of rivalry with other Bethels that may be near. In some villages we find not only Methodists but Baptists and Congregationalists, each with its own small chapel, and each sometimes in accordance only on the one point of opposition to episcopal claims. There is less of the anti-Church bitterness now, but there is still some in quiet parts.

Agreeing in this, the chapels can yet differ widely and wonderfully on disputed points of doctrine, and are not above sensations of jealousy towards larger or richer congregations. One does not like to be outdone by the other; if the Baptist Ebenezer has a new coat of whitewash, the Methodist Zion must varnish its benches, and the Congregational Bethesda will repaint its texts. Occasionally a shining light in one of the congregations may go wrong, perhaps misusing the chapel funds; and there is so keen a flutter in the rival dove-cotes, that if one were cynical one might take it for joy. It may not exactly be joy, but it is intensely human; and the strength, as also perhaps the weakness, of the Bethel its dominant unvenneered humanity.

Passing along the country roads on a summer's day we can hear the loud, hear y singing, perhaps led by a harmonium, but in any case often painfully discordant. The folk love it, and we must not criticize. The strident shout of the preacher comes to us. When he prays, it sounds as if he were angry; he thinks it a proof of faith to demand things imperatively from God. "Lord answer prayer!" shouted once a Bryanite of a West-Country village, "answer prayer, or I'll tear up the bench!" It seems like a blasphemy; it was really a frenzy of untutored earnestness. The people understood such modes of praying; it did not shock them; they could reply with amens and hallelujahs.

There were children inside, hot and tired and fidgeting, furtively munching green apples or sucking sweets; to them it is all a weariness. But there are elders who are drawing comfort from it. There are strong men facing difficulties in their daily walk, and seeking here for the word that shall lighten and strengthen them; there are lonely women feeling that this, which we may find so discordant, brings them a message of peace.

We pass by the Bethel ourselves; it is not for us, and we pass on gladly to the church of quiet beauty among its whispering trees. Its fine old liturgy appeals to us; its atmosphere soothes and touches, its dim light has reverence, its antiquity speaks of long generations who have worshiped here and brought their troubles here before us. But for all this we must not condemn the Bethel or those who worship there. At most, we may regret, not censure. For this, too, has its appeal to human hearts, human joys and human sorrows.

Little Boy Blue

By JULIA WOOD REA

LITTLE Boy Blue,
Oh, little Boy Blue,
We're patiently waiting
And longing for you.

We know it is lovely
In Babyland, dear,
With skies always sunny
And nothing to fear.

But see, we have fashioned
A soft little nest,
And there's no safer place
Than your dear mother's breast.

We're sure life will hold
For you many things sweet,
And paths be made smooth
For your dear baby feet.

Little Boy Blue,
Oh, Little Boy Blue,
We're patiently waiting
And longing for you.

Apple Blossoms and Pumpkins

An Agricultural Romance of the City

By AMY BRUNER ALMY

Illustrated by William C. McNulty

AS EARLY as February, Joan Trundle, who had lived in department-store atmosphere ever since she was a big-eyed, gypsy-like stripling of a cash-girl, was transferred from the aluminum pots and kettles to the garden section in the basement of Markensheimer's palace-emporium.

Now, at last, without her having been aware before that anything had been lacking in her life, Joan came into her own. The brilliant-hued marvels of vegetation upon the seed packages fascinated her strangely; and even the touch of a hoe and a spade, brought a tingle of enthusiasm to her.

In short, by the middle of March, Joan had come to look at everything from the view-point of gardening. And, because Timothy Rudd, of the haberdashery, was the most upstanding young man of her acquaintance, she began to tinge even him with rusticity. Most persons would not have thought Timothy Rudd the least bit countrified, for he left nothing unsaid as regards perfection of attire. He was tall with an athletic slenderness, and there was such a boyish charm about him that he was openly admired by the feminine three-quarters of Markensheimer's. The men, too, said that he was "straight goods." He had sold neckties and worn perfect ones himself for more than a year at Markensheimer's. He reciprocated the admiration of the girls with an impartial friendship attitude which quite disarmed any intended designs upon him—or, rather, this had been true until the past few weeks, when he seemed to have taken a fancy for Miss Doris Ingles, a veritable picture-beauty, and a painted one at that, new to the millinery department.

It was the middle of a slow afternoon, when a sleet-storm lessened the crowd of shoppers. Joan, happening to look up between sales, saw Timothy Rudd standing near the office-cage. The air in the basement was thick and close. She had just been thinking about Timothy, wondering how such a sort of a man could see anything really attractive in Miss Ingles, when the next instant, by a mischievous trick of her mind, she seemed to see the faultlessly dressed Mr. Rudd in blue overalls and a gray-striped shirt, wiping his forehead with a blue polka-dot handkerchief. She could almost smell the warm, new-mown hay—

"Goodness' sakes, silly!" Joan muttered to herself, "I've got country on the brain." Then, "Fine, thank you, Mr. Rudd!" she responded to Timothy's greeting, as he passed down the aisle. She turned to Mr. Pitkin, head of the department: "It's awfully close down here today, isn't it? Don't you think it would be a good idea to ask for a couple more boxes of those big red and blue handkerchiefs? Any one that's got real work to do, needs them, such as mowing lawns—or haying."

"Good idea, Miss Trundle. You're certainly up on gardening. We're making the manager sit up and take notice. He told me this morning that the receipts from these two weeks have been more than they were all last spring. It's you, I reckon, Miss Trundle."

"Oh, no, it's the combination, I guess. I do rather like this sort of thing. You see, Mr. Pitkin, when you come right down to it, it's like touching something—well, you might say something bigger. I rather believe that country life isn't half bad."

"You're right, it isn't," responded Mr. Pitkin. "I myself was brought upon the farm. Weren't you, too?"

"Me? No, I wasn't. So far as I know, we've always been town-folks. Father and mother were both clerks. When father died, mother went back to the store. She was sick a good deal, so I began working into it. Before mother died, we were in the country a few months—we liked it fine."

THE spring-time that the immense plate-glass windows of Markensheimer's heralded with such élat and promise of verdure, seemed, at first, when Joan reached her home that evening, a very chill and shrunken thing. Home was a tiny room on the sixth story back, with scarcely space enough to turn around in. A battered and scuffed brown leather trunk, occupying a bulky share of the room, held all her possessions. It was a skylight room. "Just that much extra thrown in," Joan was accustomed to assure herself, "no unsightly views, air enough for one, and, since it's cheap, chance to save for some other day." Where the slanting of the roof shortened the wall, and cut an angle from the room, it boasted a window, a little more than a foot deep, and more than a yard wide, which caught, angle-wise, a generous view of the sky and the roofs.

Just outside of Joan's room was the stairway leading up to the roof. It was narrow and steep; at its top was a trap-door opening out upon the roof. Mrs. Withers, the landlady, had called Joan's attention to the advantage of such ready access to the roof, saying that likely she could have it mostly to herself. Some years before, the lodgers had made an attempt to fix up a playground on the roof, but as no one had had the time to watch the children, the plan had been abandoned.

Often, since the fall, when she had taken her room, Joan had climbed the steep stairway to her aerial domain. She had carried up a rickety chair, and, propping it up against one of the tall chimneys, she had in-

"A model garden, I should say! Quite an expert! Now, tell me what to do. I want to get busy right away" dulged herself in the feeling of solitariness, and higness, and freedom, that this sole possession gave her.

"It's clammy, and a bit chilly, but it is spring anyway," Joan said that evening, as she propped up her slanting window. "It's high time to polish my plate-glass on the sky side." She mounted to the roof, and washed and rubbed her window till it glistened. Then she looked about her. Yes, it was spring even upon this dilapidated, smoke-begrimed lodging-house! It entered, crisp and tonic, into the heart of Joan.

It was garden time; you could tell it by the smell of the air, odorless, through the tincture of city smoke, with the hint of new things growing. How fine it would be to have a garden of her own in the country, and live there all the time! "If I only lived a little further out," she thought. Suddenly, she gave an exclamation. Her gaze fastened upon one spot upon the roof. It was where the low parapet of the back of the tenement formed a corner with the higher part of the building. "I'm going to have a garden right up here on top of the roof!" she said aloud. "A garden of my own!"

When Joan's eyes had fallen upon the large shallow galvanized pan that had once served as a sand-pile for the children, she had instantly realized its agricultural possibilities. The tray measured some nine feet by twelve; it was half full of sand, covered with a deposit of dusty mold and the heavy smoke from many chimneys. If it were built up another foot by a board frame, and filled in with rich earth, it would make a promising garden. Before she went down to her room—she remained on the roof until the stars had come out—she had decided to make a garden on the roof.

IF JOAN had been planning to lay out several acres in a garden, she could not have found the details more exacting. After having won over Mrs. Withers to the point of tolerating her garden, she looked into the question of soil, and studied pamphlets on gardening. Finally, a pile of black, scientifically mixed soil was dumped down in the back yard of the tenement. In spite of the six stairways, Joan was determined to succeed. However, after working four evenings, she had disposed of only one-third of it.

Joan was on her knees packing down the earth with an old tin shingle when she became aware of a faint, paddy sound upon the roof behind her as of some one walking. She could see nothing; she heard the multiple, subdued hum from the city below, and the flutter of sparrows against one of the chimneys. She would have to hurry, for night was coming quickly, and she wanted to carry up several more baskets of ground.

"Jo-o-nee!—Jo-o-nee!" An odd, long-drawn-out whistle!

Joan rose quickly, stretching out the kinks in her knees. The call came again: "Jo-o-nee!—Jo-o-nee!!!"

"Who's that? Who are you? How did you know that's my name?" Joan called boldly into the vacancy.

"Oh, that's where I ventured a guess, Miss Trundle," came the answer from behind the chimney, and Timothy Rudd stepped into the open. He was garbed in blue overalls and a gray flannel shirt. His tawny hair caught the glint of the waning sun.

"My, but you startled me just for a moment, Mr. Rudd!" Joan cried. "I didn't see you land."

"Well, I didn't use my biplane this time, Miss Trundle. You see that window over there—yonder—the companion-piece to this one of yours? That's where I live—"

"You—room there! I didn't suppose—" Joan was becoming embarrassed—"I supposed you lived somewhere else."

"I don't. I live right over there, and I've been living there for a year; consequently I happen to know what you have been doing these evenings. A model garden, I should say! Quite an expert! Now, tell me what to do. I want to get busy right away."

"Oh, but you don't have to, Mr. Rudd!" said Joan, feeling very grubby and very happy.

"I insist," answered Timothy, picking up the two empty baskets and starting for the trap-door.

"If you insist, perhaps—well, you may, and you're awfully good," said Joan, following. "But, just imagine, Mr. Rudd of the neckties!"

"Now you listen here, Miss Trundle," Timothy said, turning to look back at Joan behind him on the narrow stairs, "this isn't a matter of neckties—I'm of my native element now—plain farmer." They both laughed, and Joan yielded.

TIMOTHY was Hercules that night: when they heard the tower-clock of the Old Town, across the river, strike eleven, Joan was packing down the last basket of earth, and Timothy was mopping his face with a big blue handkerchief.

"How can I ever thank you enough, Mr. Rudd?" Joan asked, stretching herself up to breathe in the magic of the night that lay softly all about the roof.

"This surely is a fine night, Miss Trundle!" was Timothy's answer.

"It is beautiful," Joan said, breathing deeply.

"It's more beautiful on the roof—than anywhere I've ever been—excepting, of course, the country. It's high, and misty-like, and with the lights shining, and all, it's—it's like an orchard of apple-trees in bloom!"

"Say, now, it really is! But, who ever would have thought of that—apple-trees in blossom!" Timothy gave a long low whistle. "Why, do you know, I could never have thought of that myself!"

"Well, but, Mr. Rudd, the principle is the same!" Joan said, insistently.

"If that doesn't beat all! An orchard with apple-blossoms, in the country! Well, then, how would you like to see some real blossoms, Miss Trundle? How would you like to go with me some Sunday to see an orchard loaded down with blossoms—a whole mile of trees?"

"Would I like it? Oh, I'd love to go!"

"And see here, please don't think that I'm getting fresh, and that I'm going to bother you just any old time. I won't. But I really would like a taste of your garden. I get hungry for the real stuff, such as radishes and peas, you know. And pumpkin! Say, what wouldn't I give for a real pumpkin! I mean the kind I'm used to. I suppose you're going to raise them?"

"Why, yes, I was planning to make room for a couple of them. Don't you think that there'll be room?" Joan asked seriously. "If they're a success I'll give you a whole one—a pumpkin for Thanksgiving!"

"That is some promise, Miss Trundle, and you can count on me for appreciating it. Do you mean it? I sure want it bad enough."

"I do mean it! For Thanksgiving—if you don't bother—much."

"Oh, of course, I won't. And what about the radishes?"

"I'll ask you over for a picnic-supper when the lettuce and radishes are up—sure!"

THE last week of April was blossom-time even in the city. Timothy and Joan took the train, not merely to the suburbs, but to the real country.

Blossom-time and youth! A mile of orchard, undulating hills, sloping gently into hollows, all white, and pink, and deeper pink, with plum, and cherry, and apple.

"Oh, I knew that it was lovely," Joan cried, "but I never dreamed that it was anything like this!"

They were seated on the fallen trunk of a dead apple-tree, on the highest summit of the orchard, in the innermost sea of fragrance. "It's beautiful!" Joan repeated dreamily. She had taken off her neat little blue straw hat. Her dark hair lay in soft, fluffy, tendrils over her white forehead; her dark eyes were deep with happiness; she was rosy, too, as a pink blossom.

"Yes, it sure is beautiful," said Timothy, taking in Joan and the orchard with one long, satisfied look. "Now that I think of it, it reminds me of your roof—only it's a great deal finer, of course."

"Well, you needn't tease. When you don't have anything better, the roof is fine!" Joan shrugged her shoulders determinedly. "I always knew that the country was worth while. I lived there once for three months with my mother."

"Tell me about it."

Joan told him about those long-remembered months, and about her mother, and naturally, with it all, more about herself than she had intended to tell. It followed then, that Timothy told Joan that he had been born and brought up on the farm. He was the only child. When he was sixteen his father died. The farm was mortgaged; he had worked hard for a couple of years trying to clear the place, but it had proved, with his youth and inexperience, impossible. Then they had come to the city, so that his mother, who was not well, might have medical care. He had clerked three years before he had come to Markensheimer's. A little less than a year ago his mother had died. These were the facts he told, yet it was even more the things he did not tell her, that revealed Timothy to her.

"And so, you might have been a farmer! I mean, you came so near being one," Joan said with a hint of wistfulness.

"Do you wish I were?"

"N-o-o, but it wouldn't be bad—do you think it would?"—she looked up quickly.

"No, it sure wouldn't be. Sometimes I do wish that I was back."

They were silent a while listening to the birds, for though it was the middle of the afternoon, they were pouring forth a jubilant chorus of early morning. Suddenly, a vagrant breeze sent a shower of petals over Timothy and Joan; then, another gust came snowing down upon them.

"Look out, Joan!" Timothy cried. "Your hair is all white!"

"Yours, too, Mis-ter —oh, Timothy —like snow on—a pumpkin!"

Laughing, they helped one another up, and walked on through the orchard; they were young, they had only themselves to talk about, and they were in the midst of all that spring loveliness, so it was no wonder, that, for that day, at least, Joan felt that she knew Timothy through and through. As for Timothy—Joan wondered what he might be thinking of her.

THE evening of that first picnic, Timothy climbed over the low parapet of the roof and brought his own dry-goods box to sit on. Joan had made bread-and-butter sandwiches; there were cheese and crackers; but, the crowning feature was a large blue bowl lined with tiny-leaved, curly-tipped lettuce, and half-filled with diminutive radishes. Though neither one of them had ever heard of ambrosia and hymettus honey, they tasted it that evening. The dingy roof of the sagging, worn-out lodging-house; the gaunt, straight chimneys with double chimney-pots; the sleepy twitter of drowsy sparrows; the slender rind of the new moon, pendant and watching; the earthy smell of the freshly watered vegetable patch; Timothy playing on the mouth-organ just for the foolish pleasure of the thing—"the way they do in the country"—Joan listening as if she heard a harp.

The garden lay, like all gardens that night, shadowy and indistinct.

"Are you remembering about the pumpkin, Joan?" Timothy asked when it was so late that they both knew that they had to say good-night.

"To be sure, I'll remember. They're there now, plain as can be—two of them—real pumpkins. You can feel for yourself."

"Well, they are, sure—regular marbles." Timothy's hand closed over Joan's.

"Pumpkin for Thanksgiving, Joan! And say, Joan, you were right, it does seem like an orchard of apple-trees in blossom!"

"It—really—does."

That night, when Joan descended to her skylight room, she was certain that she was going to raise that pumpkin no matter what happened!

There were two other picnic nights, one when the peas were ready to garner, the other, when there were enough string beans to fill two saucers. Each time before they parted Timothy spoke about the pumpkin.

(Continued on page 962)

Always the Same

"IT'S the same thing over and over," I heard a cynic say, a few days ago, "just the same thing over and over—this Happy New Year stuff! Resolutions made just to be broken—debts paid, just so it's possible to run up other bills! Oh, the whole idea of it is nauseating—simply disgusting! Why can't folk be honest with themselves—if not with other people? Why can't folk just admit that they're bad and have no ideals—or anything? Why do they have to talk, just for the sake of talking, about turning over new leaves and writing on a clean, white page?"

Cynics always annoy me. There is so much in this huge world to be thankful for—so much to be glad about! Cynics who persistently—and consistently—look upon the dark side of things, should be isolated. Just as people with contagious and disagreeable diseases are isolated. Cynics—who are always finding out unpleasant things about their neighbors, who are always picking flaws in human nature—should really be shunned. At least, that's the way I feel. Perhaps my feelings made my voice a trifle cool as I spoke.

"But," I said rather slowly, "don't you think it's a fine trait—just wanting to be better? Just wanting to make resolutions and turn over new leaves? Just wanting to write a fresh life story on a clean, white page? Don't you?"

The Cynic made a noise deep down in his throat that sounded like a snort of derision. It was a most disagreeable noise. It matched the expression in his eyes, the hard look about his mouth.

"No, I don't," he told me, "because, underneath, it isn't really honest."

"Then," I was beginning to be just a shade angry, "then you don't think that good intentions are honest?"

The Cynic shrugged.

"Hell is paved with good intentions!" he said in his most annoyingly cocksure tone. "There's no getting around that!"

I was silent. But my silence did not denote that I was in agreement with the Cynic. Only I realized the utter futility of arguing with such a person!

I DON'T know who it was that first said hell was paved with good intentions. But I have heard the phrase often, and I have resented bitterly every word of it. Some good intentions may never come to anything—some may go a-glimmering, like will-o'-the-wisps, in the dark of evening. But some of them make a deep impression, even though they don't come to anything in the end. And some of them last and have splendid results.

It would be quite impossible to figure out the number of wonderful deeds that are the direct result of resolutions and good intentions. Every progressive

And Yet—Like Most Good Things—
Always New and Worth While

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

movement, every lofty aim, every far-reaching reform is the outgrowth of some noble resolve. Even Cynics must realize that—though they won't admit it!

Just at present, in Washington, there is a great Conference going on. It is a meeting that is directly built upon good intentions—that has, for its foundation, the resolutions of clever, earnest men. That Conference is for the purpose of ending war—of making peace a firm and lasting thing. And though it may come to nothing (despite the fact that the whole world is praying for its success!) no one can say that those intentions and resolutions were not honest things! No one can dare to say that they were not worth while—that they have not made men and nations better and richer for being uttered. They have given the weary earth a glimpse of what may be—a glimpse of a coming era of joy and prosperity and happiness. Who would dare to say that they are paving-stones for hell? If anything they are stepping-stones to God's own heaven!

NEW YEAR'S DAY, to me, always seems like the neatest, most restful day in the year. It's like a house newly swept and garnished—a house in which there are no dusty corners or faded draperies or musty boxes of trash. It's like a house with crisp, freshly ironed curtains at each window, and a flower growing in a jar and a ruddy fire on the brushed hearth. It always seems like that to me because—of all other times—it's the season of order and law and tidiness. It's the season when hopes are renewed—when doubts are swept into the discard. When new resolves—which people, despite the cynics of the world, really mean—are hung like fresh curtains in the windows of every soul.

"I always like to wear a new dress on my birthday," a quaint little old woman once told me, "and I always like to wear a sprig o' holly on Christmas. And, on New Year's Day, I always like to wear a smile!"

On the New Year it's pretty nice to wear a smile. It goes with the clean, splendid feeling of the time. A smile is—to New Year's—what holly is to Christmas. It's the best way to start the New Year right.

Starting the New Year right doesn't—as the Cynic so callously pointed out—always mean ending the New Year right. It's only a matter of resolutions and dreams and hopes. But it's certainly better to start it right—even if those dreams and hopes don't come true—than it is to start it wrong. Resolutions, even if they're not kept—good intentions, even though they're destined to be broken—are better than nothing at all!

Yes, it may be the same thing over and over this—to quote the Cynic—"this Happy New Year stuff." It's just the same thing over and over and over. And yet—in this unsettled world, in these troubled times—it's always a blessing and a relief to make cheerful plans and to see bright visions. Always just the same it is—but, like most good things, it's always new and worth while!

A Prayer

GOD, let me start the New Year right,
Let me have dreams as fair and bright
As sunshine. Let new hopes arise,
As I look out, with happy eyes,
Upon the dawning day; and let Me strive to do, without regret,
The harder tasks.

God, let my hands
Be kind and gentle. Sorrow stands
In every year, a saddened ghost . . .
Let me help those who suffer most,
Let me have pity for their pain,
And teach them to know joy again.

God, let my resolutions be,
A step, in all sincerity,
Up to your heaven, let me know
Intentions that will thrive and grow
Until they come to some good end!
Make me, dear God, a better friend
A better help-meet, and an aid—
Let the small stories I have made,
The smaller verses, and each line
That I have penned be wholly thine!

Dear God, upon this day I ask
That you will make each little task
I have a something worth the while!
Give me the heart, always to smile
In trouble's face—to meet with fear
In gallant ways . . .

On this New Year,
Give me your strength and courage, then
Grant me your blessing, God. AMEN

The Editorial Forum

DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON
Editor-in-Chief

RAE D. HENKLE
Managing Editor

DR. GEORGE H. SANDISON
Editor Emeritus

The New Spirit in the World

IT IS beyond question that the formal adoption of the Four Power Pacific Treaty by the Washington Conference will be accepted as one of the greatest of historical achievements. Not only has it the fullest approval of the masses of the American people, but peace lovers in all the nations realize that it is the first important step toward world pacification. It is hailed by the leading London newspapers as indisputably "the greatest event in constructive statesmanship of our time, and fraught with powers for good so large that they can not yet be readily estimated."

In his address in the Conference, Senator Lodge very happily expressed the new feeling that has been awakened among the nations. "I devoutly believe," he said, "that the spirit of the world is such that we can trust to the good faith and higher purposes which the Treaty embodies and enshrines. Agreements of this kind, I know, have often been made before, only to fail. But there has been a far-reaching change in the mental condition of men and women everywhere. . . . The spirit of the world is no longer the same. . . . We appeal to the men and women of the nations to help us sustain it in spirit and in truth."

Speaking for the French republic, ex-Premier Viviani said: "The peoples of the world began to ask, what will be the outcome of this Conference? Is it to end in idle talk, or will it result in either right or light issuing out of the Conference? I think the answer has been clearly given; the Conference has been a success and the peoples of mankind can at last believe in the progress of civilization."

Prince Tokugawa, for his nation, announced that "Japan will rejoice in this pledge of peace upon the Pacific Ocean." Senator Schanzer, for Italy, expressed "full confidence that this great agreement may represent the most firm and lasting guarantee for the safeguarding of peace in the Pacific." For Holland, Jonkheer Van Karnebeek said: "In my country, this treaty will be received with sympathy, because in that country it will be felt that it constitutes and embodies an endeavor to promote peace and tranquillity in those far-off regions neighboring the Netherlands' possessions. We feel that it is an endeavor which may be a new and happy beginning in the world's history."

And so, all around the circle of the Conference, the representatives of the various governments, China included, gave eloquent testimony to the fact that the treaty and the principles it represented were the best assurance that could be desired for beginnings of future peace, or what Secretary Hughes, in his closing remarks, aptly described as "the assurance of tranquillity in this war-wearied world."

Let us take courage and hope that still greater progress may be accomplished before the Conference reaches the limit of its task.

The Evangelist and His Mission

SINCE that episode in the days of the apostles when Philip the Evangelist was sent down to Samaria, where a great ingathering of souls was harvested, there has been an almost continuous chain of evangelism throughout the world. As we look at the records of comparatively recent times, we find that wherever evangelism has had a fair hearing, it has awakened multitudes of sinners and started them on the heavenward way. One readily recalls the luminous career of Finney, the splendid work of Moody and Sankey, of Philip Phillips, of William Taylor, of Chapman and Alexander, and a host of other soul-winners. These were the brave spirits who were inspired to light the Gospel torch in the dark places, and who, when the Church itself needed reinvigoration, proved to be equal to the emergency.

How the apostles themselves appraised the work of the evangelist may be gathered from Paul's classification in Eph. 4:11: "He gave some to be apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers"; also in II Tim. 4th chapter, wherein the same authority defines the wide scope of the evangelistic activities. In those days the office of the evangelist was one of such importance that it was above that of the pastor and teacher. He had a special task to face, and by no means always an easy one. When Philip went down to Samaria, he found himself facing audiences to whom Christ had not been yet proclaimed. And we are told "the multitudes gave heed with one accord, and there was much joy in that city over the good tidings he preached, and many were converted and baptized." One need only read the whole of that eighth chapter of Acts to have before him the picture, vividly outlined, of hundreds of other evangelistic triumphs down through the centuries, in all of which Gospel illumination by men spiritually trained to the performance of this work, was indispensable.

Evangelism today is kept more or less in the background. Why should this be so? There are in this land hundreds of consecrated, experienced men, many of them of high ability, and all with real talent and with records of good work accomplished, souls won, and church membership strengthened. Evangelism has rarely failed to do its work, wherever it has had a fair trial. We know there are many pastors who prefer to be their own evangelists, and this is proper and laudable, though not always wise. We might also question the wisdom of discrediting the value of the trained evangelist's work, as some churches and ministers seem disposed to do on the ground that it is ineffective. In every center of population there is need for the specialized methods of trained evangelism just as there was need for Philip in Samaria.

We bespeak a kindlier feeling between the evangelists and the ministers, a broader tolerance, and the recognition of the fact that the one is just as much a part of the mechanism of the Church as the other. It is the absence of this spirit of brotherly co-operation which keeps pews empty when they might be filled.

The Farmer's Critics

"I DON'T see what you have to complain about," says Mr. City Man, as he looks out over the handsome quarter section of Mr. Farmer. "You have a beautiful lay of land here, fresh air, good food, nature's beauty to beguile, rural delivery, a concrete road to town, good neighbors, fresh milk twice a day, a good wife and a good reputation. Why are you making such a fuss right now when the country is recovering from the war and everybody is beginning to buckle down to business?"

"What you say, Mr. City Man, is true, and a lot more about my farm, and my surroundings and all. I am not complaining about those things. But look here. I'll admit that when wheat was $2 a bushel, I foolishly held on, thinking it would go higher. And I will also admit many other foolish things that the Farmer does all the time. But look at my condition right now. I can't afford to buy coal at the price I have to pay in my township, and my corn now is worth only 20 cents a bushel." (In some of the Western corn and wheat States the farmers in large sections are using corn for fuel on account of the price of corn making it cheaper by the bushel for fuel than coal, owing to the low price of pork to which the corn might be fed.)

"And that is only one item in the farm problem. The most serious thing is the way the young men are leaving the farms of this country. Take my own boys, for example. One of them has just been graduated from college. His mother and I are naturally proud of him. And rightly so. Of course we wanted him to go to college, and we don't begrudge the money it cost to send him. But now that he is through, he doesn't want to come back to the farm. He says he can make twice as much working in a garage in town or getting a position as foreman in an engineering plant. Well, you see the problem. His mother and I are getting on in years, and we can't keep up the hard work much longer. We have another boy just out of high school, and he says nothing on earth will keep him on the farm if he can get a job in town. I prophesy that by 1925 there will not be a farmer under forty years old in this country. The City is calling too loud with its movies and its bright lights and its companionship and its eight hours a day compared with ten, twelve, and fourteen on the farm."

"And let me tell you, Mr. City Man, it will be a serious day for you if all the young men leave the farm for the city. What laws or economic adjustments can change the longing of the young men for city life? Tell me that. Has Mr. Hoover a remedy? Has any one yet? For after all, that is the first problem facing the farmer. He produces $22,000,000,000 worth of new wealth every year in this country. And the agricultural wealth is computed at $80,000,000,000. That is more than is tied up in railroads, manufactures and mines. Mr. City Man, what is your solution of the Farmer's problem to keep the young, educated, brainy men on the farm?"

The Farmer is waiting for Mr. Hoover or some other City Man to answer.

Homes or Rents

MORE than half of the homes in the United States are rented, according to a recent census. The figures cover the year 1920, when 54 per cent. of homes were rented, 28 per cent. were owned clear of mortgage, and 17 per cent. were mortgaged.

These figures include farming communities as well as towns and cities. In round numbers there were 24 million homes, of which 11 million were owned by their occupants, 13 million were rented, 6½ million were free from incumbrance, and 4 million were mortgaged. The proportion of mortgaged homes increased in all cities of over 100,000 except four, and one of those was Kansas City, Kansas, a State which according to the brewer has suffered so tremendously from prohibition.

The difficulty of owning homes is partly due to the fact that houses themselves have been so difficult to build. Materials have been out of the reach of the average pocket-book, and thousands of would-be home builders are living in flats and apartment-houses and hotels because they cannot afford to build even a modest home. Even with the extortionate rentals common in many localities, the cost of rentals, at least for the immediate outlay, has not been so far beyond the salary or wages as actual building would be.

Nothing tends more for self-respect and the integrity of family life than to own a home. Out of a large proportion of divorcees in a certain county in a Western state the greatest number of unhappy families lived in hotels and apartment houses. The happy natural normal life of a family is in a house standing on a piece of land owned in fee simple by the family. There is the roof tree, the associations of the family circle, the ties of the home-coming. No rented place can have the same attachment or sentiment. A man can live in a hotel without loving it. But he cannot live in his own unmortgaged home without feeling for it a sentiment that is different from the ownership of almost any other thing called property.

Wicked Editorials

A FEW newspapers in this country preceding and during the Washington Conference have persisted in their editorial columns in throwing cold water on the entire gathering, discrediting the motives of even President Harding and Secretary Hughes, and trying to create the old atmosphere of suspicion and hate and fear that have been the cause of war for centuries.

Such a use of the press at the present time in the world history of honest attempts to get the nations to talk over matters in friendly conference, is nothing short of wicked. Why any owners of newspapers or writers of editorials could so prostitute their talents for such a base and unworthy use of them is beyond comprehension. If there has ever been a time when all men of all parties and creeds and faiths should unite to create a spirit of good-will and optimism, and to dispel the clouds of fear and ill-will that have hung over mankind for so long, now is the time to do it.

It may be true that some of the foreign delegates came to Washington with sinister designs and ulterior purposes to defeat the plan of limitation of arms. It may also be true that old-world diplomacy is still in evidence, and is being used at this meeting. But it is also true that never before in the history of international relations have more people of all nations been more eager for something to be done to make a beginning of the end of international distrust and hate.

And it is also a tremendous fact that so far as America is concerned this country has no sinister designs and does not try to use the old-world methods of intrigue and deception. To insinuate, as the wicked editorials have done, that the whole thing is popular politics on the part of the President and the Secretary of State is to throw contempt on the most sincere and honest convictions that men like President Harding and Mr. Hughes ever had.

Men who write editorials of the type that have discredited the Conference in advance and as the proceedings went forward, are in a minority in the field of journalism, we are happy to believe. As a rule, the press of America has been optimistic of results, and has tried to create the atmosphere of good-will and international fellowship. The exceptions have been, therefore, all the more conspicuous. And we believe the word "wicked" is not too strong a word to characterize an attempt, made from whatever motive, to question the motives of the Conference and condemn the actors in it of bad faith before the results of the Conference could possibly be reached. If the pen is mightier than the sword, it must not be used as the sword is. It must be wielded with moderation and not with malice.

The World News of the Week

Conference Agrees on Naval Ratios; Yap Dispute Settled

WITH the signing of the four-Power treaty for the maintenance of peace in the Pacific basin, preceding which America and Japan had reached an accord as to the prolonged Yap controversy, and with the giving of Japan's assent to the five-five-three ratio of naval strength proposed by Secretary Hughes, a good part of the business of the Washington Conference has been accomplished. In general there remains for the delegates only the task of untangling the Chinese knot. In the last analysis the peace of the Far East depends on a satisfactory solution of the Chinese problem. In the Root formula a set of principles for the working out of China's future has been adopted, but thus far there has been an acceptance of general principles only, and the details for putting them into effect are to be determined. The questions involved are so many and so complicated that no one expected a solution to be found for all of them at a single conclave.

There was little delay in settling details of the naval ratios for the United States, Great Britain and Japan after the Japanese Government had announced its acceptance of the Hughes proposal. Japan had desired all along to save her giant new battleship Mutsu, and this was arranged by allowing corresponding increases in strength to the other powers. Instead of scrapping the Mutsu, Japan will scrap the Settsu, an older ship; the United States will complete the Colorado and the Washington, now 90 per cent. ready, and will scrap the North Dakota and the Delaware; Britain will construct two new battleships not exceeding 37,000 tons according to American standards of measurement, and on their completion will scrap four battleships of the King George V type. This will give Japan 313,300 tons of capital ships; the United States, 525,850; and Great Britain, 582,050, the larger British figure being deemed fair in view of the fact that several of the ships she retains are of old types. For replacement purposes, the maximum tonnage of capital ships is: America, 525,000; Britain, 525,000; Japan, 315,000.

It was agreed that there shall be no increase in fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific, including Hongkong, but this restriction shall not apply to the Hawaiian Islands, Australia, New Zealand, the islands of Japan proper and the coasts of the United States and Canada.

Before the Pacific treaty was signed by the representatives of America, Great Britain, France and Japan, an agreement had been reached between the United States and Japan regarding Yap and other former German islands north of the equator, held by Japan under League of Nations mandates. By this pact, America obtains all the rights and privileges of League members in all the mandated islands held by Japan, is to receive a copy of the annual report on their administration, and is to have a voice on all modifications of mandate terms, but assumes no responsibility in the matter. On the island of Yap, the United States is to have the same opportunities as Japan or any other nation in all that relates to cables and wireless service, is to have the free operation of the Guam-Yap cable, and reserves the right to establish any wireless station she may wish should the Japanese wireless station fail to give ample and free service.

Throughout her mandated islands, Japan pledges herself to insure complete freedom of conscience and worship, and to give to the missionaries full freedom for the carrying out of their work. Several clauses of the League Covenant were embodied in the agreement, among them prohibitions against fortification of the islands, military training of the natives, and traffic in intoxicants.

Similar treaties are to be negotiated with the British Empire and with other countries holding mandates, in order that American rights may be protected.

Britain Ratifies Irish Pact

THE British Parliament has ratified by large majorities the peace agreement creating the "Irish Free State," but as this is written the Dail Eireann has failed to act after nearly a week of debate. In the British House of Commons the "die-hard" motion to omit from the King's address the phrase approving the treaty was defeated by a vote of 401 to 58, which is accepted as ratification; and in the House of Lords a similar amendment was lost by 166 to 47. Three days of debate preceded the voting, but at no time was there

ONE of the most interesting features devised for the Christian Herald begins in next week's issue when the first "Family Altar" appears on the page of Meditation. The Family Altar is under the personal supervision of Dr. Sheldon, who will provide a foreword and the daily program for each week. Your friends will be glad to know of this plan to increase interest in the home devotions.

IMITATING THE HAWK'S WING IN A FLYING DEVICE

Motorless flying apparatus, of which this is an interesting type, has been developed to a high stage in Germany recently, and some of these gliders have made flights of considerable length doubt that Premier Lloyd George would be victorious.

The Dail Eireann discussion of the treaty was conducted in private and centered largely on whether the Sinn Fein envoys had exceeded their powers in signing the treaty without referring the final draft to the Dublin cabinet. Eamon de Valera was criticizing the methods of the envoys, while Michael Collins and the other delegates were defending their conduct vigorously and insisting on full acceptance of the treaty. One big purpose in the private sessions was an attempt to compose the differences between the leaders, so that the Dail Eireann might present a solid front in whatever course is decided upon. Advocates of the treaty were confident that they could command a majority for ratification.

Sir James Craig, the Ulster Premier, denounced the terms of the peace agreement as a violation of pledges to Ulster and in particular assailed that clause which provides for the establishment of a commission to review the boundaries.

Germany Asks Delay on Reparations

CHANCELLOR WIRTH has informed the Allied Reparations Commission that the German government has been unable to obtain the credits necessary to pay in full the reparations installments due in January and February and has asked for an extension of the time limit for payment. His request for delay is limited to these two payments, but his note admits a realization that "similar difficulties will arise in connection with subsequent payments," so that it forces attention to the general policy of reparations. The most he could promise was 150,000,000 or 200,000,000 gold marks, which is only a fraction of the amounts coming due.

The German government has been attempting to obtain a loan in England to tide it over this period, but its emissaries could find no London bankers who were willing to undertake such a loan in view of the shaky condition of German finances. The Reparations Commission has the power to grant a delay in payment, but it was believed it would refer the matter to a conference of Allied Premiers and be guided by their decision. A meeting of Premiers Lloyd George and Briand has been arranged at which they will discuss not only the reparations question but various other European problems which are pressing for solution.

A Church Plan for World Peace

A WORLD peace program for the Protestant Churches of America has been formulated by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, through its Commission on International Justice and Good-Will, and was adopted at the Council's annual meeting in Chicago. Among the suggestions for the establishment of a world peace system to replace the present war system are the outlawing of submarines, bombing planes and chemical warfare; no quibbling about the Panama Canal tolls treaty; withdrawal from Hawaii of large naval forces and a halt in the building of great naval bases in the Pacific; the release of France from the payment of debts to the United States incurred after America's entry into the war; and the repeal of anti-Chinese legislation not dealing with immigration.

The Commission also suggested that it was time for the churches of America to extend to the Christian of Germany the hand of Christian fellowship and proposed the sending of a communication expressing a desire for renewed friendship and co-operation in the common task.

A message from Arthur J. Balfour, head of the British delegation at the Washington Conference, called for the help of the churches in maintaining peace. "It would be vain," Mr. Balfour wrote, "for statesmen to diminish armaments and contrive treaties of conciliation in a world determined to fight. Even the unforgettable horrors of war will not prevent nations rushing to mutual destruction. More is required and that 'more' the churches must help to provide. It is not that I desire to see the churches take any corporate share in current political controversy. The churches have a higher mission, for it is their supreme duty to raise the ideals of the community and to create the atmosphere in which these ideals can flourish."

Schism in Greek Church Threatened

A SCHISM in the Greek Orthodox Church is threatened as the result of the election of the Most Rev. Meletios Metaxakis, exiled Metropolitan of Athens, to be Ecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople, a position which makes him the spiritual ruler of almost 200,000,000 souls. The meeting of the Grand Synod, which was held in Constantinople, the Patriarch's seat, resulted in an overwhelming majority for Archbishop Metaxakis, who has been in America since March. He was a supporter of former Premier Venizelos, and after the return of King Constantine to power in Greece more than a year ago was driven from the See of Athens and a new Metropolitan was installed.

The Greek government has decided to ignore his election, according to semi-official announcements in Athens, this action having been taken after the Cabinet had heard protests by two Metropolitans of the Holy Synod against the methods by which the Archbishop was elected. Athens newspapers predicted that the new Patriarch would be summoned to appear before the Greek Church Synod in Athens to answer charges of illegally occupying the throne and thereby provoking a schism among the Greeks in the United States.

The Sublime Porte has notified the
Continued on page 963

HANGING A NEW SET OF BELLS IN A RUINED CHURCH

Though the battles which raged over the site of their village left only fragments of their church belfry in place, the people of the village of Clery on the Somme River in France have hung a new set of bells in the wreckage to inspire them with hope for the day when their village shall be reconstructed and the bells summon them to worship in a new church edifice

Perils and Triumphs of the Chestnut

A Dissertation on Old Friends and Their Abuses

I WILL leave it to the philologists who specialize in slang, to determine the connection between the edible fruit of the genus castanea, beloved of small boys and Italians, and the twice-told tales and twenty-times-told jokes of the after-dinner table and the platform. Even the modern dictionary recognizes this accommodated use of the chestnut.

Why has the spreading chestnut-tree come to stand for the upas tree of the forum? While the slang philologists are about it, let them explain to us if the individuals contemptuously spoken of in some circles as "nuts" and "nutty" receive these opprobrious appellations because of their unhappy repetitions of the witticisms of others. These terms bring the whole delicious nut-tree family into disrepute, when their products are thus derided and applied to certain undesirable citizens.

Not to linger on these profitless speculations, let us turn to the different kinds of chestnuts (there seems to be no other universal name for them) which are heard by one whose pathway often leads him to public meetings or public dinners. The stories which certain orators use are so venerable that they deserve more respect than they receive, if judged only by their years.

For instance, almost from my earliest infancy, I seem to have heard of the selfish man whose daily prayer was,

"Bless me and my wife,
My son John and my wife,
Us four and no more. Amen."

It is generally and wisely ascribed to some anonymous petitioner, "you know the man who always prayed—etc." But I have heard a speaker who boldly claimed acquaintance with him. "I knew a man who always prayed—" I heard still another speaker so audacious as to ascribe the prayer to "my dear old uncle who always used to pray—etc." How any one could have so little pride of family as to ascribe such a petition to his avuncular relation, I found it difficult to understand.

Equally popular with inveterate raconteurs the world around is the tale of the individual who was driven nearly stick, stark, staring mad by having the man in the hotel room above him drop only one boot, while he waited anxiously for the other one to come down with a dull thud. I have heard a lady in Germany tell the story with gusto, in her own tongue; she told it about a Teuton, too. I have no doubt if I understood Russian or Coptic I should hear that the same man lived on the Steppes or on the banks of the Nile. One of these vendors of the antique in literature has even been known to describe his own torture while he was waiting for the second boot to fall.

ANOTHER old favorite with after-dinner speakers is the story of Daniel in the Lions' Den, with the addendum that at least a post-prandial speech could have no terrors for the old prophet as it had for the speaker. The first time I heard this introduction, many, many years ago, I applauded vigorously, for the speaker was a real wit, whose first name happened to be Daniel. Since then my enthusiasm for this pat and modest introduction has diminished each year.

However, let us not deride the chestnut-vender. His hearers are far more to blame than he is, for some in every audience are almost sure to applaud him, and he would be more than human who could resist a sure-fire introduction.

Indeed, all such stories would have died a natural death centuries ago, except for the hearty approval of the people who listen. I venture to say that there are few audiences in America that will not "give a hand" to the hoariest witticism ever uttered, even to one of the three original jokes said to have been copyrighted by Adam. Why shouldn't they be repeated? If they give surcease from grief and at least momentary joy to a wearied audience, should any one scold? For you and me to object with any effect, supercilious reader, would be to reduce the sum of human happiness and of oratorical complaisance.

Some hand-blisters, however, are not perennial. They live their little day and die like the butterfly, but, while they live, they are exceedingly active, flitting from platform to platform.

Such was the story of the fisherman who always caught the largest trout, though he conscientiously weighed every one in the presence of his fellow

By

REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

fishermen. When a baby was born into the family, it was found to weigh forty pounds on the same scales. It is years now since I heard that story, though for a time it averaged a new appearance every three months.

The same is true of the maiden by the sad sea waves who could not get her lover to come to the point of proposal, because, as he averred, he couldn't speak plainly on account of sand in his mouth. Her advice, often with a profane adjective, was to swallow it and get some sand into his system. That, too, was a great favorite for a time, and I even heard a minister rehearse it on an ecclesiastical occasion, leaving out the profanity. This time it didn't "bring down the house," perhaps for lack of the vulgar spice, which seems to add vastly to the popularity of a story on the part of a crude section of the gallery.

Why it is that a big, big D, or even a little one, should add pith and point to an old anecdote, I can not understand. It seems to me a coarse, intrusive word, and yet I have seen otherwise sober audiences go into fits of convulsive laughter because of the introduction of a word that consigns some one or something to perdition.

If a clergyman yields to the temptation to use the word in an address, putting it between inverted commas, to be sure, it becomes, to some, excruciatingly funny. Certain women novelists, too, bid for popularity by sprinkling their stories thickly with profanity. Sometimes they overdo it, as a proficient in the art has told me, because they do not know how a man really swears. To me, if I may intrude my old-fashioned, orthodox opinion, such rough-neck writing is full of hideous blots, and is, at the best, a cheap bid for the doubtful honor of a best seller.

THIS diversion, however, has little to do with my subject. Speaking once more of after-dinner speeches, I am glad to record that the man who is "too full for utterance" does not deliver himself as often as formerly, and that many speakers in these days, even after a full meal, do not find it necessary to tickle the ribs of their hearers with a joke of any kind.

After all, unless one is a Chauncey Depew, a Job Hedges, or a Kendrick Bangs, it isn't necessary to do so, for most of us have no humorous reputation to maintain.

An ancient story or witticism is a dangerous blunderbuss in spite of the explosions of laughter with which it is usually greeted. It is loaded at both ends. If the audience should happen to be critical and it should fall flat, it will take the speaker long to recover his equilibrium. The recoil of a pointless joke or one that the audience might possibly regard as pointless, or too aged, is a serious affair. It almost knocks the orator over.

To a sensitive speaker, the very presence of a single person who has heard his moss-grown story before is appalling. That person, like the ancient mariner, seems to fix him with his glittering eye. The speaker would give all his lecture feet to back out, but it is too late—he has begun the story, his friend recognizes it, and he must go on to the bitter end though he knows that after the lecture the friend will slap him on the back and cry out, "Old boy, that story is just as good as the last time you told it!"

Yet these remarks apply only to the shy and self-conscious man. Many a lecture of the old Lyceum days and of the modern Chautauqua days, improves on repetition. "Acres of Diamonds" sparkle more brightly the oftener they are exhibited, and the thousandth time the lecture was given, I understand people fought for an opportunity to buy tickets, though many had heard the lecture more than once before.

I once heard Wendell Phillips lecture on "The Lost Arts," and it suffered not at all from its several hundredth repetition.

John B. Gough, too, would "talk mit his coat-tails," and grow excited in his denunciations of Demon Rum, and his eulogies of aqua pura, for the thousandth time, with never a sign of embarrassment on his own part or weariness on the part of his audience.

The truth is, many auditors enjoy an old lecture or play better than a new one, because they know just where the laugh or the tear comes in. In the same way many of us non-musical folks would confess, if we dared to tell the truth, that when the classical soloist lets us down, we enjoy "Annie Laurie," "The Suwannee Ribber," or even "Old Black Joe," just because they are old, better than a selection from the new opera that is all the rage in highbrow musical circles. Of course, we don't often dare to admit this, or to confess that we regard "Comin' through the Rye," as an oasis in the desert.

COMING from Iceland on a little ship, one of our fellow travelers insisted on frequently telling us at the table, how he fell off his pony on the lava-strewn trails, because of some obstacle over which his steed stumbled. He always prefaced his oft-repeated tale by saying, "I saw it coming. I knew it was there."

That is one of the charms of an old song or an old lecture. We can see its beauty, its fun, or its pathos coming. We know it is there, and we are never disappointed. We have the pleasure both of anticipation and of realization, and in my school days, which pleasure is the greater, though often debated, was never settled.

Indeed, some speakers have a delightful way of taking us into their confidence by distinctly, though unintentionally, indicating that a good thing is coming. Dr. Edwards A. Park of Andover was the greatest pulpit orator and the greatest teacher I ever knew. In the classroom, whenever a witty illustration or quaint thought struck him, his face would light up, a smile would draw the pucker strings of his lips, and we were all ready to doubly enjoy the bon mot or the epigram that was coming, even though a dozen classes before us had smiled at the spot in the same lecture.

Former President Taft is one of the most engaging speakers in the country, and not a little of the joy of hearing him comes from the pleasant little chuckle that emphasizes his best points. Though he seldom repeats himself, yet you may have heard him make the same point before and have heard other orators enlarge upon it, but the underscoring of his benevolent face and audible smile is irresistible.

Far from this is the practice of the conceited orator who evidently bids for applause, and who pauses significantly when he makes a point and waits complacently for you to cheer.

The chairman of a meeting whose duty it is to introduce the speaker of the evening has the hardest time of all to avoid "vain repetitions" of the castanea variety.

"Thespeaker needs no introduction."
"It is a great honor."
"It is the highest privilege of my life," etc., etc., etc.

Pity the sorrows of a poor old introducer. There are nothing but chestnuts in his hand to throw at the audience.

Continued on page 960

A Greeting to the New Year

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON

1. Glad to see you, New Year! Can I do anything for you?
2. You say "Yes"? When shall I begin?
3. Six days ago? Can't call them back; can I?
4. What would you like most, New Year?
5. "A clean, unselfish, serviceable Christian character"? Please say that again. It sounds like a big order.
6. Can't use me for much unless I am that kind of a person? Let me think it over. Perhaps I was a little hasty in asking if I could do anything for you.
7. You don't mean I have to be perfect? Or a saint? Anything of that sort? No? But you have a large use for saints? Plenty of room if I want to qualify?
8. Is it going to be easy to be good this year? Just as easy as it was last year? Thank you.
9. Will it be worth while to live a real Christian life? Won't it be rather slow? Won't I lose a lot of fun trying it? You say, "Try it and see"? I believe I will.
10. I do want to amount to something, New Year! Do you think I can? You do? If what? If I really reckon God in my life? A God of justice and love and purity and eternal values. Yes, I see that if I don't have Him, I don't have anything. New Year, give me God in my life. Then I can do something for you.

Our New Year's Sermon

The Perishable and the Imperishable

By REV. S. PARKES CADMAN, D.D.*

TEXT—I Cor. 3:12, 13. "But if any man build on the foundation gold, silver, costly stone, wood, hay, stubble . . . Each man's work shall be made manifest . . . because it is revealed by fire."

THE dawn of another year reminds us of the real aims of a swiftly fleeting life; a life which has yet to be tried and approved or disapproved in another world than this. There the conventional standards and arbitrary usages which prevail here have no place. There our nature will be probed to its depths; our faith, conscience and character will decree our fate.

The starry spirits that deck the firmaments of Paradise differ in the degrees of their excellence. One man's life-work will go for little or nothing; another man's will shine resplendently. It is a solemnizing reflection that labor which is low in nature and faulty in execution dwarfs the soul of the laborer and unfits him for the immortality beyond the grave. It is an equally consoling reflection that labor which is done from pure and lofty motives and with fidelity, adds luster even to the ransomed spirit.

The Homeland toward which we hasten is a democracy of holiness, but those who dwell within its precincts range from spiritual infancy to spiritual maturity on the one hand; multitudes who have barely obtained an entrance among the blessed, on the other; multitudes who have already achieved distinction through sacrificial service stand next to the Throne itself. Such is the gist of the Apostle's searching argument. It does not limit the Everlasting Mercy, yet neither does it presume to dim the Everlasting Righteousness.

Surely there can be no greater disappointment beyond the grave than to see our life's efforts dwindling before our eyes because the penetrating fires of divine judgment find in those efforts nothing worthy of preservation. Much that men reckon valuable, for which they ceaselessly contend, is doomed to extinction. Much which they despise will be treasured as an enrichment of eternity. To face the future under the burden of a betrayed past is mortifying enough to kill the sweetest bliss. I am afraid that, contrary to some sentimental views about Heaven, those who enter it as objects of compassion rather than of merit, may have to wait for their consummation and undergo the discipline they avoided while on earth.

THE question gains in seriousness and importance because each recurrent year is filled with golden opportunities that do not return. Their gracious benefits must be absorbed as they pass, or we shall find ourselves belated, undone, and destitute when we approach the inevitable hour. Many in this generation misuse their probation. While they are busy with the secondary things of life, the great moments of the soul are forfeited.

Yet God's overtures to men and women are specific, not promiscuous; conditioned, not unqualified; terminable, not continuous. His call has its predetermined periods. Though there is no predestination of human choice and action which cancels our moral freedom and responsibility, the tenure of every individual life is so planned that the sum total of privilege to which it is entitled goes along with it. The Lord has numbered our years and fixed the point at which our tides ebb and flow.

The optimism and buoyancy of youth, the vigor and sagacity of maturity, the reminiscence and mellowness of age, are alike provisions of the Creator. He intends them to equip us for the greater life of an imperial goodness; to contribute in their several ways to the inheritance of the saints in light. We can damage youth by excess, corrupt maturity by selfishness, and pollute age by covetousness. But we cannot recall these seasons of the soul. They are as rigid as spring and summer, autumn and winter.

And he is the wise husbandman who sows to the spirit in the spring of his years, that he may reap life eternal after the frosts of age are no more. The easy-going habits of the sluggard, the waste and ruin of the prodigal, will come back upon them in dire confusion and distress. Time and tide wait for no man. Infinitude is not at his disposal here. What he is and what he does must be achieved quickly, and with jealous conservation of the flying hours. We cannot pass from mud to marble, from stone to steel, from gold to jewels until we have rightly interpreted and strenuously enforced the intentions of our being. Challenge the todays, and the tomorrows will confess that you have not lived in vain.

THE Apostle names two classes of building material which are at our disposal—the perishable, and the imperishable. Evidently we must and haunt the voluptuous dance or the scenes of unsafe pleasure. The grand outbreaks of prophecy and song, the thrill of the gospel that redeems a race, the majesty of its ambassadors, the epochs that have transformed the human story; what are these to traffickers on hay and stubble? Truly they have their day and cease to be.

But the religions, the moral and the intellectual realities on which we rest, as on a rock—the Church, the State, and individual well-being—have required herculean effort and ageless processes. Like the great cathedrals of northern France, the lasting elements of civilization are the result of countless pains and sacrifices. There is nothing in the Bible, in its literary progenies in the highest art or music which has not been wrestled for as Jacob wrestled with the angel at the brook Jabbok.

Cling to these venerable verities. Allow no imitations to displace them. Cunning shams, painted frauds, glazing lies and specious deeds are only fuel for the flame. The faith, hope and charity of Christian living; the teachings of the prophets and apostles of Christian history, the prayers and communions of Christian experience survive all changes and ordeals; they emerge purified and resplendent as the diadem upon a queenly brow.

EVERY one permitted to enter 1922 should cultivate the spiritual insight which perceives whether character is rightly founded and directed. Avoid as you would a pestilence the egotism which poisons life. Self-exaltation and self-aggrandizement are gross offenses against soul-building. They seduced even celestial spirits, for by the sin of pride, the angels fell from their first estate. Ask yourselves, when applauded by your fellow men, if they would praise you did they but discern the secret springs of your boasted conduct. Beware of the lure of popularity. Its enchantments have spoiled many an otherwise commendable person. Rubbish takes the place of the fine gold of a spiritual incentive, when we are content to be men pleasers instead of being well pleasing to God. And the time will come in a moral evolution when the disfigurements of self-will and self-adulation shall stand out like leprosy on a fair skin. Let men discover your good works, and they will glorify your Father which is in Heaven.

All of us have to contend against mixed motives. They are elusive antagonists, swarming in like the flies of a summer noon. Yet they need not be countenanced, nor become a part of us, unless we deliberately foster them. Search your hearts with the candle of the Lord, and these hidden microbes which devour your inward substance will not tarry. For the best service we can render is the service which is inspired by lasting motives of honor and sincerity; motives which ask for no reward except that of an approving conscience and the Father's "Well done."

In character construction, give preference to those truths which your heartfelt experience guarantees. No man, however faultless superficially, can communicate what he has not received, or shine in his own light. It is the reality which God makes vivid to the human soul that illuminates it and radiates from it to other souls. What we have deeply felt, not what we have occasionally heard or assented to in a commonplace way, is the life blood of faith and duty. You attend schools and colleges, you read the Christian Herald, you listen to glowing accounts of the wonderful treasures of God's storehouse in Bible and Church; but their instructions are no more than a tale told to be forgotten until they are absorbed in your being, and dearer to you than fame or fortune.

It is a matter of repeated observation that the constant

Continued on page 961

Our Sunday Service at Home

The Christian Herald Sermon is now read in many Homes as a Sunday Evening Service, a simple form of conducting which is outlined below. Neighbors should be cordially invited

Order of Service

Opening Hymn—"All Hail! The Power of Jesus' Name," or "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun."

Invocation—"The Lord's Prayer"—all join.

Scripture Reading—"A Song of Praise to God for All His Blessings." Psalm 96.

Dr. Jowett's Sunday Meditation (see page 958, first column).

Sermon—"THE PERISHABLE AND THE IMPERISHABLE"—To be read aloud by the head of the household or his substitute.

Requests for Prayer—these may be offered by any of those present who feel led to do so. The requests may be forwarded to Pastor Sheldon, in New York, for submission to the Prayer League.

Closing Hymn—"Nearer to Thee!" or "My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

Benediction—by Pastor Charles M. Sheldon to be read aloud.

Our Father, as the New Year opens, we crave a Blessing from Heaven in order to do our work on earth. Fill our hearts with love, our minds with knowledge, and our hands with mercy to others, that we may be richer when we meet than when we came. We ask it through Him who for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich. In Jesus' Name. AMEN.

be discriminating as well as alert. Some opinions, ideals and convictions are to a man's character what the valuable metals are to coinage and what marble and porphyry are to palaces. They adorn and solidify human nature. Other opinions, ideals and convictions are to a man's character what hay and stubble are to constructive building—synonyms of frailty, destructibility and impermanence. A wise selection of "saving truths" which shape and sanctify all life, hallowing its motives and elevating its commonest habits, is more than a personal fancy—it is an imperative obligation.

Of course, one can build far more expeditiously with wood and reeds than with granite and gold. Primitive people put up their huts and shanties in a few days. But they frequently disappear in a night. The fires which break out in Japanese cities, where the houses are chiefly flimsy bamboo, plastered over with paper, spread with such rapidity that the householder calculates on rebuilding his house every four years. No insurance company will assume any such risk in the Mikado's Empire.

This sort of work reminds you of the minds inflated with pride, the hearts big with carnal ambition, the souls fed on the husks. Sacred realities, fine occupations, self-forgetting zeal, are lost upon people who wear the cap and bells,

* Pastor Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn.

The Daily Meditation

By Revs. J. H. Jowett, D.D., C. C. Albertson, D.D., E. W. Caswell, D. J. Burrell, D.D., I. D. Lyttle, and R. Braunstein

The Opening Gate

SUNDAY. Acts 12:10. "And when they were past the first and the second ward they came into the iron gate." I am always deeply interested in the progressive steps in Peter's deliverance. He was bound, and in prison, guarded by quaternions of soldiers. And the weary prisoner was asleep. And behold, the angel of the Lord appeared in the prison, sent as the minister of deliverance. First he woke the prisoner: "the angel smote Peter on the side." Then he lifted him to his feet; "he raised him up." Then the chains fell away from his limbs like ropes of ice which have been touched by a finger of flame. So far was the prisoner freed. Then began the march to a larger freedom. It was deliverance after deliverance. They passed through the first ward, through all its confining bonds. They passed through the second ward, through all its grim antagonisms. But there was still the iron gate. That was the terror, the last, gloomiest, and most unscalable barrier between the prisoner and his freedom.

I can well imagine Peter thinking, "Yes, so far so good; but what about the iron gate? The chains are gone, the first ward is passed; the second ward is passed. But the iron gate. . . ." If the startled man had any such doubts and fears, they were all misplaced. The angel who began his deliverance did not leave his work half done. No, God's deliverances do not mock us with a partial and ungenerous freedom. His liberty is not stingy. It is always "glorious freedom." And so the angel led the apostle from the inner cell, through all intercepting restraints, to the freedom of the outer street.

Yet, in spite of all examples as to how the Lord deals with men, is it not true that when we have experienced a part of our promised deliverance, we are doubtful and fearful as to whether we shall ever get to the end of the gloomy and embarrassing road? We are quite ready to admit that we have been marvelously helped; the Lord has been wonderfully gracious unto us, but . . . ? Our chains have fallen away, but . . . ? We have been taken through the first ward, and the second ward, but . . . ? And that "but" means that we have got our mind fixed upon some iron gate which we are approaching. What about that? That will be the great test. We fear we shall never get past it. That is how we think and speak, even when our great Saviour is leading us through deliverance after deliverance. Let us listen to one or two of the fearful.

"Yes, I believe I have been led out of death into life, out of darkness into light. I believe I have been born again, redeemed by my Saviour's death, recreated in my Saviour's life, delivered into the privileges of a realm of whose glories I have never dreamed. But . . ." It is the iron gate! The dear soul is beginning to wonder what is going to happen when the freshness of the creative moment is left behind. When he is face to face with the old temptation, how then? Why, the good Lord in whose wonderful mercy thou wast raised from the dead, and in whose vital grace thou art beginning to live—the Lord who smote the chains from thy limbs, and led thee through the first ward, and the second ward, will be with thee at the iron gate, and the thing thou fearest shall be as a cobweb on the road.

Here is another of the fearful. "Yes, God has been marvelously good to me. Even at the graveside he visited me, and in His deliverance I found peace. But . . ." The iron gate! "How shall I go back to the empty house and take up all the old work again, which we used to do together? I shall never be able to do it." Oh, yes, you will be able to do it in the present help of your great Deliverer. The Saviour who has led you past one ward in the dark experience will lead you through another and yet another. The gates will open as you arrive. You will not be left groping in a dark passage, with your trembling fingers bruised and broken by contending with an iron gate. The iron gate will open of itself, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Is not this the word of our Deliverer, "I will not leave you desolate?" And is not this His word, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee?" Our Greatheart will go with us all the way. He will perfect our deliverance, until the last obstacle has been passed—until the day dawns and all shadows flee away. J. H. J.

Onward or Backward

MONDAY. II John 1:9. "Whosoever goeth onward and abideth not in the teaching of Christ, hath not God." The sixteenth century was the period of discovery and exploration. The seventeenth was the age of Puritanism. The eighteenth marked the rise of Methodism. The nineteenth was characterized by the wide diffusion of democracy. The twentieth is dominated by the spirit of progress. How proud people are of being regarded as advanced thinkers! In the name of progress much has been done and is being done that profoundly affects the thinking and the lives of us all.

There were those in the closing years of the first century who took progress as their watchword. There were some Christians who in the name of progress were about to put Christ into the background, professing to have outgrown Him. To such these words of the text were written; to all such they apply. It is a positive and emphatic assertion that whoever, in the name of progress, forsakes the doctrine of Christ, not only fails of progress, but is in danger of losing that without which progress is impossible, namely, the sight and sense of God.

Christianity was not designed for the people of any one age. It is an eternal Gospel, as well adapted to the twentieth century as to the first or the tenth. But there are certain features of it which should commend themselves to the thinkers of an age eager to go forward, an age which passionately seeks freedom. The message of Christianity is first of all a message of emancipation. Then it is a message of readjustment. And it is a message of courage and hope. The Gospel offers us a wide horizon. The free man, the believer who has experienced emancipation and readjustment shall "dwell on high." The high place does not mean promotion, preferment, precedence, but a place of clearer, wider, more piercing and penetrating vision. Our soul's life depends upon keeping step with Christ. It is only as we stand at His side that we are safe in strength and sure in hope. C. C. A.

The Only Way

TUESDAY. Heb. 10:20. "By a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us." Jesus lived sacrificially and we also must live sacrificially. "Dying we live," is the motto of the college of consecration—giving up, forgetting self, doing the hard thing, not because it is hard and not for the sake of the doing, but because there is no worthy goal, no great achievement, no wonderful consummation, by any other path or way or route. The philosophy of these materialistic days is, "We must make a living; be practical; succeed." But the answer is always the same, as given by the best minds: "The only way to live successfully the life that yields the richest rewards is by service and ministry in behalf of others." The world still cries: "We must live! We must live!"

True, Paul does write to Timothy: "Take heed to thyself." He means that Timothy should take heed in order to be efficient to serve well. Selfishness consists not in looking out for No. 1. Alfred Lyman gives us the three greatest maxims in the world. The first is Greek, the second Roman, and the third Christian. They are: "Know thyself," "Control Thyself," "Deny Thyself." These three form the method of "Taking heed to Self." They come in the order named: Self-knowledge, self-mastery, self-sacrifice—in other words: Intelligence, morality, service. Yes, we must live; but we must so live in order to help others to live better. The preparation is sacrificial living, and the goal is the kingdom in our midst. R. B.

The Love That Covers Past Sins

WEDNESDAY. Eccles. 3:15. "And God requirereth that which is past." How blessed it is to know that the past is under the atoning blood of Jesus! Our sins are blotted out as a thick cloud, because He paid our debt; all we owe to the law of God. Our past failures are redeemed; our protested notes are endorsed by the King; we have entered into partnership with eternal wealth.

How many dwell needlessly upon past weaknesses, sin, sorrow, and shame! They would be made stronger by forgetting the things that are behind and pressing on with hope of achievement in present and future fields.

Our Heavenly Father says, "Fear not; thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth; my kindness shall not depart from thee; with great mercies will I gather thee. No weapon formed against thee shall prosper." Though the Eden of the past seems lost, the glory of present triumph and the promises of future victory are Paradise regained.

We must not linger around the old ruins of Sodom or Pompeii. There is no inspiration in destruction, except in warnings to escape unto God's mountains of holiness. The dust of years will not obliterate the deeds of evil, but Christ will hide them under the deep waters of pardoning love. We can thus be saved from mourning over lost opportunities, by improving every one of the present moments. The Gospel of grace is the only hope to the soul in its deepest despair. The voice that is ever whispering on the wild billows: "It is I; be not afraid," will bring to the heart infinite calm. E. W. C.

The Master-Key

THURSDAY. James 1:6. "Let him ask in faith, nothing doubting." The pilgrims, in Bunyan's allegory, on their way to the Celestial City were given over to despondency when they found themselves in Doubting Castle. They had been beaten by Giant Despair with a crab-tree cudgel, and they feared lest the Lord had forgotten them. On Saturday about midnight they began to pray, and continued thus until almost the breaking of day. Then Christian, as one amazed, broke out into this passionate speech: "What a fool am I, to lie thus in a dungeon when I may walk in liberty! I have a key in my bosom that will, I am persuaded, open any lock in Doubting Castle." Hopeful said, "This is good news, my brother; pluck it out of thy bosom and try." And, as he turned the key in one door after another, they flew open with ease, and Christian and Hopeful came out into the light of day.

A willingness to believe—not blind credulity, but a rational faith, founded on evidence and backed by the authority of Scripture, is a key that will solve the honest doubt of every thinking man. Pluck the key out of your bosom, my friend, and try! D. J. B.

In "The King's Highway"

FRIDAY. Rom. 8:14. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." What a wonderful thought is that set forth here by the Apostle—"led by the Spirit." Men are usually led by someone or something, whether they are conscious of it or not. Even the leaders, humanly speaking, are themselves led.

Here is a man who is led by an ambition. He starts out in life determined to reach the top. The ambition may not be the most worthy, and he tramples upon others in order that he may reach his goal. Another is led by an ideal that is as lofty as the ambition of the other is low. His ideal is his guiding star, and in the efforts put forth to attain unto his ideal, he is kind and courteous. In between these two are the various things that lead men, some upon the straight line, others upon a tangent.

But life's great steadying principle is that of being led by the Spirit. I sometimes fear that many a good man or woman makes the mistake of trying to lead the Spirit. God has pointed out to us the path He would have us take, and we say "O Lord, why must it be this way? Cannot I take this other path?" And often we allow the strong wind of our own desire to meet the tide of God's commands, and when as a result we have tempestuous waves, we begin to talk about the crosses we have, when as a matter-of-fact we have made the crosses ourselves.

There are not several right courses in life—there are not even two: there is one right way and that is the "King's highway of Holiness." And no man can walk this way successfully unless he is led by the Spirit of God. Conversely, the one who is led by the Spirit of God must needs be led aright. He is a "joint-heir with Christ," and by the Spirit is being led to ultimate glory "together with Him." I. D. L.

Triumphing Over Weakness

SATURDAY. Isa. 23:33. "The lame take the prey." Some who have achieved greatness were born blind, deaf and dumb, like Helen Keller. Her patient, persistent teacher, Anne Sullivan Macy, taught her first to spell "water," as water was poured into her hand. Afterward she learned the name of everything she touched. When Helen Keller was graduated from college, she delivered a beautiful address upon happiness, repeating at the close, the 23d Psalm. Love for learning, determination to overcome all hindrances, wrought this miracle of attainment.

When Phillips Brooks told Miss Keller about God, she said, "I have known Him for some time, but did not know His name." We therefore know that the Divine Spirit can communicate with the soul even without the bodily aid of sight, hearing and speech.

Endeavoring to make the best of yourself should be the motto of all who are handicapped by environment, limited or dwarfed or crippled in bodily powers, or hampered by heredity. Homer, Milton and Mathewson were companions in blindness, but they "took the prey" of victory in the battle of life. Carnegie, Rockefeller, and Harriman triumphed over poverty; Lincoln, Lloyd George, Booker Washington and Edison arose from obscurity to the loftiest summits of fame. Necessity becomes the mother of achievement; the will to win trusts in the supreme power of God. Out of weakness we are made strong; the lame leap as the hart, the blind see, the dumb sing. It is thus one may even glory in infirmity, knowing that if we are faithful, we shall be like Him who is perfect in symmetry and holiness. E. W. C.

Elijah the Tishbite

International Sunday School Lesson for January 8
I King 17: 1-24

By REV. SAMUEL D. PRICE, D.D.

SUDDENLY, without any previous mention, Elijah is introduced as one who is in conflict with Ahab, the king of Israel. Ahab is the representative of all that is away from Jehovah, and Elijah is God's man.

Years had passed since Jeroboam led Israel into sins of idolatry. The scheme of centralized worship at other places than Jerusalem had worked all too well. At this time in the history of the Northern Kingdom, many were omitting the recognition and worship of Jehovah, and were not only worshipping Baal, but often practised the licentious rites associated with that worship.

When Israel came out of Egypt, God had expressly told them not to intermarry with the surrounding tribes. Ahab not only disobeyed in this respect, but in marrying Jezebel, whose father had been a priest of Baal, he became a patron of that cult, apparently cooperating with Jezebel as she made iniquity and idolatry popular. The public worship of Jehovah became so scanty that Elijah had the idea that he stood quite alone as an outspoken adherent of the only living and true God; but in this he was mistaken, for there were seven thousand in Israel who had not bowed the knee to Baal. Ahab and Jezebel, with the prophets of Baal and of the groves, became insolently outrageous in their excesses. Then God planned a revolution that would tend to call the people back from their wickednesses unto Him.

Elijah was made the ambassador of God to deliver a startling message to Ahab, which would produce the utmost consternation. In no country are dew and rain more essential than in Palestine. Baal was regarded as the god of agriculture. A challenge was uttered, as well as a prophecy declared, when Elijah suddenly appeared before Ahab and stated that there would be no moisture for king or people except as he shall call for it. Did Ahab suddenly realize the evil of his way, and that he had brought calamity upon his people, or was he so sure of the power of Baal, with reference to harvests, that he was unmoved by the prophet's words?

DURING the three years and six months before Ahab again saw Elijah, he had time for meditation. Whatever he may have declared to Jezebel, he found that dryness was an increasing condition. Declarations are often quite otherwise than facts. Many make all sorts of statements concerning their beliefs; but if these are contrary to the teachings in God's Word, the individual creed is not credible. It can but be eternally disastrous when people believe things that are not so. Ahab tried to be an eclectic, taking what he chose from different religions. Others follow this plan today, and it as catastrophic now as then. Salvation is through Jesus Christ alone, and "other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid," that will stand the storms of life, and then be adequate at the Judgment Seat.

Since we are to have four lessons (not counting that on Elijah in Naboth's Vineyard) with Elijah as the central human character, it would be helpful to read now I Kings 17: 1 to II Kings 2: 12. Then look up references to Elijah in other parts of the Bible. You should always compare Scripture with Scripture. Note especially Christ's statement about the widow and Elijah in Luke 4: 25. Dr. F. B. Meyer has written a very helpful biographical, expositional, devotional book entitled "Elijah and the Secret of His Power," which is worthy of a place in your library.

Elijah in the Old Testament has often been compared with John the Baptist in the New Testament, and Elisha with Jesus—as he was always going about doing acts of kindness for individuals and looking after little, helpful details.

With Elijah there was a tragic act and then a retirement into some wilderness seclusion; he does not remain constantly in the public eye. Elijah is like Christ, however, in this, that he must suffer with his people. When the rain ceased to fall and no dew came during the night, it affected the man who had declared the drought.

After he had boldly been God's servant as His messenger, he further obeyed by going to Cherith, probably east of the Jordan. There God continued His constant care. It is blessed when we learn that our heavenly Father can provide for us wherever we may be on God-sent errands. It is in accord with the way in which God deals with us: "abundantly," and "my cup runneth over."

The year or more at Cherith was doubtless a praying time and one of getting extremely well acquainted with God; these require both time and purpose. Meanwhile the brook began to narrow. A stone is above water today which was wet yesterday. Elijah did not understand, but he could trust, and when the water-course was stone-dry his beloved Father gave the next order for his implicit obedience.

THERE are always others in this lonely world who need the help we can render through the bountiful and ever-loving God. Then Ahab was sending searching parties everywhere, and one may have been coming very close to Cherith. It might have been harder for Elijah to leave a flowing brook, but had he failed to obey, he would no longer have been fed.

When we are fully obeying God there is absolute safety though that journey take one into the enemy's country. Be sure when you are in the midst of a sinful surrounding that you are investigating for God, and not for the sake of any mere personal curiosity. Zarephath was in the territory where the father of Jezebel was king. Surely Ahab would not seek for him there!

The widow at the gate of the city attracted Elijah's attention, after his journey of about 90 miles from Cherith. He asked for water first, which could not be denied. This approach paved the way for the tremendous demand, which appeared brutally cruel, as it reversed the principle of "Women and children first." There is a wonderful amount of human kindness in this world, and few show it to a greater degree than when this widow obeyed the command of the stranger. Her obedience brought wonderful blessings during the months that followed. After sharing with another, the meal and oil lasted till the drought was broken. God's power of multiplication is equally great today, and many need to pray with a very literal meaning "Give us this day our daily bread." It keeps God uppermost in our minds when we must go to Him constantly for our necessities. When the son died, the man of God was right there in the home to pray the child back to life. It was with intense joy and thankfulness that Elijah could say to the prostrate mother, "See, thy son liveth!"

The attention of superintendents is called to two suggestive vest-pocket books: "The Superintendent's Helper," and "The Superintendent's Guide." They will assist a superintendent in preparing his program well in advance of each Sunday.

THE population of Alaska decreased 10,000 in the decade of 1910 to 1920, despite the fact that the development of the territory's resources is merely in the initial stage. The loss was chiefly among the white population, for the number of natives showed only a slight ratio of decrease despite several disastrous epidemics during the ten-year period.

COMPANION OF THE ALL-WEATHER TREAD

Although the two tires illustrated above have different treads, both are genuine Goodyears through and through.

Both are built in a factory devoted exclusively to manufacturing Goodyear Tires for small cars.

One of these tires is the famous 30x3½ inch Goodyear All-Weather Tread Clincher.

By long wear, superior traction and freedom from skidding, and low final cost, this tire has won unquestioned leadership in its field.

Illustrated with it is its companion, the popular 30x3½ inch Goodyear non-skid.

More than 5,000,000 of these Goodyear non-skid tires have been sold in the last five years.

Built of the same high grade Egyptian cotton fabric that goes into the All-Weather Tread Goodyear, with a long-wearing but differently designed tread, they have given remarkable service.

Their quality and fine performance have proved to thousands of car owners the folly of buying unknown and unguaranteed tires of lower price.

You can get these tires from your nearest Goodyear Service Station Dealer. Ask him to explain their advantages.

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY
Offices Throughout the World

Goodyear Heavy Tourist Tubes are especially thick, sturdy and long-lived. They come packed in a heavy, waterproof bag. More people ride on Goodyear Tubes than on any other kind.

GOODYEAR

Copyright 1921, by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

To Help Your Boys and Girls,
Get This Splendid Book for Them.

CHILDREN'S STORIES

From the Bible

With 48 Superb Bible Pictures in Colors by

HARRY G. THEAKER

A BOOK that has long been wanted. It is often forgotten that the Bible is the greatest story-book in the world, and that it is especially rich in stories about little folk or that have a special interest for children. The old, old stories are here charmingly retold in simple language by BLANCHE WINDER. The illustrations are delightfully fresh and unconventional.

Size 8½x6½ inches—344 pages, large clear type

The list of colored illustrations is too lengthy to print here, but they are all Bible subjects selected with special care to illustrate the text.

This is the book that parents have long wanted to read to their children.

It is ideal in size, contents and beautiful colored illustrations, and we anticipate a large demand especially from those who have already written to us to find such a book and offer it to Christian Herald readers.

This excellent volume will be a welcome addition to any boy's and girl's home collection of good books. It is not only entertaining, but thoroughly educational. The book is a marvel of quality when the low price is considered. The 48 fine colored illustrations in "Children's Stories from the Bible" are well worth the price asked for the complete book.

Special Combination Offer

The Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and a copy of "Children's Stories from the Bible," both postpaid for..... $3.50

The book, sold separately, postpaid for..... $2.00

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE, : : NEW YORK

Perils and Triumphs of the Chestnut

Continued from page 956

The ordinary book reviewer makes great use of them also. He has certain adjectives that he can not get away from. He must not displease the publisher if he can help it, though the feelings of the author are not of so much account. So he works "brilliant," "striking," "suggestive," "well worth reading," or else he gives up in despair, quotes the publishers' comment on the jacket of the book, or a few lines from the preface, and lets it go at that.

The author, who, to tickle his vanity, subscribes to a clipping bureau, pays five dollars for a hundred paragraphs and then finds that fifty-one of them are quotations from the publishers' jacket, does not feel that he has received his money's worth. Even the east wind of a stinging criticism from a reviewer who really reviews, is preferable by far to the soft, southern breezes of prosy, repetitious commendation.

I AM fully aware that there is a difference between the well-known chestnut which the dictionary describes as "a worn-out joke," and the repetitious catchwords of the political arena and the campaign stump. Yet they are near relations. I think the campaign stump must at least be the remains of a decayed chestnut tree, so much use is made of the same old damnatory word or phrase to kill off the opposite party.

Sometimes a phrase or a nickname or a cartoon, by incessant repetition, seems to injure permanently the reputation of a good man. Nast's cartoon of James G. Blaine as the tattooed man, covered on every inch of his body with the dollar sign, would not have done much harm if it had been reproduced only once. It would have gone the way of most cartoons and soon have been forgotten. But it was so persistently, and, as it seemed to Mr. Blaine's friends, so malignantly repeated, that some financial error was bruited abroad as a crime. Very likely this cartoon, together with "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion," oft-repeated, defeated the great statesman in his aspirations for the presidency.

Vice-President Fairbanks was the most warm-hearted and genial man in public life whom I ever knew. Yet some one who perhaps had taken a miff at him, some one, possibly, who could not obtain an undeserved office, called him the "iceberg" or the "icicle." He was cartooned over and over again as an enormous stalagmite covered with ice or some other incrustation, to which his unusual height and erectness added some verisimilitude. I presume half the people of America who never knew him to this day think of him as an abnormally, cold, stern man.

At a public dinner which he gave in those pre-prohibition days, the caterer to whom he entrusted the details of the dinner, furnished, as was then the custom, cocktails for the thirsty, though without the knowledge or approval of Mr. Fairbanks. However, the ungodly found in this instance a chance to scoff at a man of temperance professions, and "Cocktail Charlie" with direct references to the Vice-President, rang from every vaudeville stage, and one of the few strict teetotalers in public life was set down by many as a wine-bibber and a hypocrite. Even his own denomination denied him deserved ecclesiastical honors. Another baleful example of Satanic repetitiousness.

Such examples might be multiplied, of course. An eminent British statesman and ecclesiastic when asked by an enfant terrible, "Please, sir, why do they call you Soapy Sam?" replied, "Because, my dear, I am so often in hot water, and always come out clean."

After all, not every statesman is so fortunate when tagged with an unpleasant name or characteristic, however undeserved. If a man is spattered often enough the mud sometimes sticks. The devilish innuendo, iterated and reiterated, however meatless the chestnut or insignificant the chestnut vender, not seldom injures a man's reputation long after his deeds have passed into history.

All chestnuts are not cant, but it is not far from the truth to say that all kinds of cant are chestnuts. The war has given us many examples of this. "Red-blooded young men," is a conspicuous example. We are given to understand by many writers and speakers that returned soldiers have a different kind of blood corpuscles than before they went into the army. It is ruddier. They need a different religion and code of ethics preached, or at least a different presentation of the old truths, because they are now "red-blooded."

How hard this phrase has been worked of late! One would think that these young men had tasted gore as well as seen it. We have always supposed that white corpuscles were quite as important as red—indeed, that they were the real soldiers within the human corpus, that rushed to the defence when one was sick or wounded.

Another similar popular and over-worked piece of cant is "a man's man," or, as it is still more offensively put at times, "a he-man." Many seem to forget that patience, kindness, and consideration for others are even more characteristic of a true man than are strength and assertiveness; in other words, that white corpuscles are quite as important as red.

Yet there is a good side to repetitiousness. There are sound chestnuts as well as mouldy ones. Even as in the days of the prophet, education is still "line upon line, precept upon precept; here a little and there a little"—and most of it the same line and the same little, over and over again. The wily advertiser understands this, if the rest of us do not. He insists on telling us, "eventually—why not now?" and by repeating it so often, that "eventually," becomes "now."

If we were reminded only once that we need a biscuit, it would make little impression; but the ten thousandth time we are told the same story, we really begin to think we do.

ONE sign of a great speech, a great poem, a great thought, is that repetition can not spoil it. It can not become a chestnut. Lincoln's Gettysburg speech has been quoted and repeated oftener than any other during the last fifty years, but it only shines the brighter for its many rehearsals. The Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount never grow wearisome from repetition. The Lord's Prayer is every day on the lips of tens of millions but never becomes stale.

A minute particle of radium will continue to give off emanations for a hundred years and yet show no diminution.

So it is with all the greatest words of the greatest men. Their radiating influence is inexhaustible. The emanations from such literature and such men really educate us. I would rather forget all I learned from text-books in my college days, than forget the influence and words of half a dozen teachers. They were not all great scholars; they knew little about modern psychology and pedagogy. They often indulged, very likely, in repetitions. But they had great souls, and something from their souls entered into their pupils' lives.

A modest man hesitates to give advice to teachers and parents. He is quite sure, too, that advice of any kind is seldom taken. But since education must be line upon line and precept upon precept, why not take your lines and precepts, O teachers of youth, from the greatest recorded thoughts and drive them into young minds?

The re-reading of the old reading books, which we almost learned by heart, in the district school, helped mightily to put some good literature into a former generation of boys and girls. The old Bible at family prayers and in the village church helped us still more. The repetitious precepts, the unwearied training backed by the godly example of Father and Mother in the home, have made more great men and women than any other influence.

Do I hear the flippant cry out at my moralizing—"Chestnuts!" "Old stuff!" "I've heard that before!" No, not chestnuts, but radium. Down to the third and fourth generation such influences give out their light. Time can not wither them nor customs stale. In them lies the hope of America for the centuries to come.

The Vapor Treatment for Coughs and Colds

The time for Vapo Cresolene is at the first indication of a cold or sore throat, which are so often the warnings of dangerous complications.

Simple to use; you just light the little lamp that vaporizes the Cresolene and place it near the bed at night.

The soothing antiseptic vapor is breathed all night, making breathing easy, relieving the cough and easing the sore throat and congested chest.

Cresolene is recommended for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Influenza, Bronchitis, Coughs and Nasal Catarrh. Its germicidal qualities make it a reliable protection when these diseases are epidemic. It gives great relief in Asthma.

Cresolene has been recommended and used for the past 42 years. The benefit derived from it is unquestionable.

Sold by druggists. Send for descriptive booklet 62. THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York, or Leeming-Miles Bldg., Montreal, Canada

Don't Wear a Truss

Brooks' Appliance, the modern scientific invention, the wonderful new discovery that relieves rupture, will be sent on trial. No obnoxious springs or pads.

M. C. E. BROOKS

Brooks' Rupture Appliance

Has automatic Air Cushions. Binds and draws the broken parts together as you would a broken limb. No salves. No lies. Durable, cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Protected by U. S. patents. Catalog and measure blanks mailed free. Send name and address today. Brooks Appliance Co., 498D State St., Marshall, Mich.

FLORIDA

Punta Gorda is located in the heart of tropical Florida, in the center of a great region where game and fish abound.

Here the visitor may bathe in the waters of the Gulf, motor over smooth roads, sail over placid waters, or fish, hunt, and go to the heart's content. (Quail shooting at its best here).

THE PUNTA GORDA HOTEL

affords an ideal home. The rates, which are quite moderate, and full particulars will be mailed upon request to

RAY PAYNE, Manager

DAWN

One of Eleanor H. Porter's recent full-length stories, originally published at $2.00. We will send a cloth-bound copy for 60 cents postpaid.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Book Department
Bible House, New York

NO JOKE TO BE DEAF

—Every Deaf Person Knows That

I make myself hear, after being deaf for 25 years, with these Artificial Ear Drums. I wear them day and night.

They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them. Write me and I will tell you a true story, how I got deaf and how Medicated Ear Drum I make you hear. Address

GEO. P. WAY, Artificial Ear Drum Co. (Inc.)
6 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

Grannell's Pocket Lessons

Full Bible text for all the International Lessons for 1922, with Analyses, References, and Daily Bible Readings. Vest-pocket size, 2 3/4 x 5 3/4 inches. 200 pages. Strong cloth binding.

The Judson Press
1701-1703 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Communion Ware of Quality

Best materials. Finest workmanship. Aluminum or silver plate. Memorial sets a specialty. Send for catalog Individual Comm. Service Co.
Room 400 1701-1703 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

You can be quickly relieved, if you STAMMER

Send 10 cents in stamps for 288 page cloth-bound book on Stammering and Stuttering, "Its Cause and Cure." It tells how I relieved myself after stammering for 20 years.
Benjamin N. Bogue, 6295 S. Bogue Bldg., 1147 N. W. St., Indianapolis

SEND FOR FREE SYSTEMATIC CATALOG
Sacred Duets and solos
FREE—Leaflet showing pages from Herbert Johnson's famous new duets: Face to Face, Rock of Ages and others. Your music store sells these duets, or we supply you by mail. Write today.
PLATE'S MUSIC HOUSE
Utica, N. Y., Dept. B

Young People's Topics for January 8

By REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

Organized Methodist Young People

E. L. (Mission Study) Psalm 1

THIS is the day when mission study and missionary work are being stressed more than ever before in the history of the Christian Church. This is in harmony with the dictum of the Master: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Christianity is the religion of the forward look, the expansive program, the wide vision. Therefore every movement within the Church is a forward movement. "Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward" is not only an Old Testament phrase but the New Testament ideal. As Epworthians we are of the army of the New Testament program and the exponents of the extension of the Kingdom of God to uttermost regions. Unless we think in terms of missions, we do not think in terms of Christianity. The prevailing idea and passion of Jesus Christ was the evangelization of the world. Therefore that passion and idea should sway every true disciple. Cognizant of this tremendous fact we shall organize our chapters as missionary societies.

There is much latent power in the membership of the Epworth League, but it is power that needs to be organized. Power can only be directed through a properly organized mechanism, for without it short circuits result. Jesus organized the disciples into the apostolic group. He had a "system," and sent out His workers two by two to win others.

Having organized your mission study class and your missionary work, there is one other thing to do. That is vitalize. Life must be imparted to that organization of parts called the mechanism of your chapter. Life imparts life. Your life, your brain and brawn, your muscle and tissue life will give life to your organization. But Christianity is "the Life of a Man," the Man Christ Jesus, who gave Himself. There will be as much life in your organization as there is life in its membership. The Epworth League is so much plus the personalities of its members. Organize. Have a system. Put life into the League.

Utilizing Opportunities

C. E. and B. Y. P. U. Gen. 41: 14-40

THE world's need is the individual's opportunity. We live in a needy world. The world needs most of all the message of the Christian Church. Christians have what the world needs. One of the phrases we hear from the pulpit and platform and read in the pages of the press is: "This is the day of opportunity." Indeed it is. It is more of a day of opportunity than we imagine. Now the question arises, are we alert to our opportunities and, being alert, do we utilize them? Rest assured that the reason some churches and some young people's societies are successful, known as strong churches and societies, is that they have discovered opportunities for doing good and are meeting these opportunities with efficient service and ministry.

"Get Together." That is the slogan. "Study Opportunities." That is the motive. "Meet the Needs." That is the program. Turn this meeting into a forum. Let some discuss local opportunity for kingdom building. Give your pastor the floor. Then study ways and means for meeting outside need. Give your missionary secretary the floor. Have a Church Night with an attractive program. Invite everybody. Render music. Give recitations. Serve refreshments. Pack a box for some home or mission. Make others happy. Share your possessions. Divide your blessings.

Perhaps some opportunities are gone. Opportunity—one certain kind of opportunity—knocks but once at the door. Other opportunities are on the way and are going to knock. Somebody said "Time flies." No. "We go. Time stays." There is plenty of time to do, to be, what we ought to do and be. But there is no time to spare if we are going to put ourselves on record in an age of "doing" and put the stamp of our personalities on the day of "opportunities to do good."

The Perishable and the Imperishable

Continued from page 957

hearing of holy truth without any set effort to obey it arrests a man's religious and moral development. The pulpit and the religious press depend on a faithful and obedient public mind. They need breadth, inspiration, evangelical passion. But so do you, or you will not believe, though one arose from the dead to persuade you.

LASTLY, no man or woman should begin this year of our Lord without the resolution that others shall be better for our presence here. The question at once arises in what do you deal? Hay and stubble, stuff for the bonfire, or gold, silver and costly stone? It is useless trying to make others better than we are ourselves. Our actual attainments in heart and brain, in goodness and in love of truth, are the exact boundaries of our influence. If parents, children, husbands, wives, relatives and friends are to be zealous, devout, and joyful, these virtues and graces must pass through us to get to them.

We cannot manufacture the principles which produce character in those who are dear to us. The materials of the temple of God, which temple you and your dear ones are, or should be, are not found on earth; they are found in heaven and are transferred to us by the Spirit of holiness. They proceed from the heart of Deity. They are manifested in our Blessed Lord. They are engrafted in human souls by His redemptive grace in the Spirit. Family peace and sanctity, the protection of the household, the right training of its children, and all social betterment must be brought about through men and women who have serene loveliness of temper and purest devotion of life. They will not trouble about fads and fringes—things that perish in the using—or temporary pursuits which lead to nothing. Then wisdom is seen in their filial fear and loving gratitude. They display the superior sense which fixes on the imperishable things that Paul mentions. Every evil way will be shunned. They will walk in the way everlasting.

This may alone bring the race to that millennial peace for which the world is wearily waiting. Could the golden age have been ushered in by fervid rhetoric and the resolutions of conferences, it would have arrived centuries ago. It is not here yet, and it will not be here until the nations learn that they must rend their hearts and not their garments, and turn from their perishable policies to the imperishable Word.

Meanwhile, man piles his Babels to the skies, and decorates the fabrics of his making with all sorts of deluded hopes. But the cities change and his splendors decay. The One remains through whose Incarnate Being heaven's light forever shines. Faith in Him will enable you to view the frivolous gauds of life with healthy contempt. No trials and afflictions can be lost upon those for whom He is supreme. They will live nobly and well. Years succeed years and memories lengthen, but to be threaded on a chain of holy love and work. Thus do you conquer the art of living and build the larger temples for the soul upon the foundation which stands sure, because Christ is its Corner Stone. Thus do you extend the influence for the right which will be in others a leaven and a power.

Build, build now, build ever, and build with the gold of holiness, the silver of service, the precious stone of love. The Lord will perfect and illuminate this building. AMEN.

Annual Sale McCutcheon's Household Linens

Special Price Reductions for January only

Send for Catalog No. 53

ONCE a year since 1893 "The Linen Store" has held a special reduced-price sale of Household Linens and White Goods. It is McCutcheon's January Sale—the big Linen event of the year, eagerly awaited by housewives all over the country.

For this occasion we have prepared a new catalog—a catalog that brings this Special Sale to you, whether you live in New York or San Francisco. You turn over the pages, make your selection, and mail your order to us. It receives the most careful personal attention. In fact it's just as though you yourself were shopping in our store.

For the home—there are Damask Table Cloths, dainty Luncheon Sets, Towels, Linen and Cotton Sheets, and fluffy, warm Blankets.

For the individual—Handkerchiefs of all sizes and styles, Lingerie irresistibly alluring, Children's and Young Girls' Dresses, Imported Dress Cottons, Sweaters, with Hats and Scarfs to match—all distinctive and very wearable.

These lovely things are illustrated and priced in our new catalog—priced decidedly lower than even the low prices at which we have been selling all year.

Write today for this new Catalog No. 53
Take advantage of McCutcheon's
January Sale NOW

Established
1855

James McCutcheon & Co.
345 Fifth Ave.
New York

"Safety Bonds"

The principle of safety has always been such an important factor in considering investment of funds that we are justly proud of the fact that many people call bonds offered by us "Safety Bonds."

How these bonds are strongly safeguarded—and why they are a good investment at 7% is explained in detail in our literature.

AMERICAN BOND & MORTGAGE COMPANY

American Bond & Mortgage Building
127 N. Dearborn St., Chicago—562 Fifth Ave., New York City
Columbus, Ohio Davenport, Iowa
Grand Rapids, Michigan Rockford, Illinois

Sign Below and Mail This Coupon for Literature 913

Name Address

Write for this Booklet

It tells how to receive a generous income for life: regular, unchangeable, non-taxable. Investment absolutely safe. Your money helps a Christian enterprise.

Write for Booklet 7

American Bible Society
25 Bible House
Astor Place, New York

Safeguard your Money

SAFEGUARD your money by investing it safely in time-tested securities. During an experience of more than 38 years no investor in our First Farm Mortgages and Real Estate Bonds has ever suffered the loss of a dollar through us. Amounts to suit. 7% and safety. Send for pamphlet "O" and offerings. Ask about our monthly payment plan.

E. J. LANDER & CO.
ESTABLISHED 1883—CAPITAL & SURPLUS $500,000.00
GRAND FORKS, NORTH DAKOTA.

THE WONDER BOOK OF WHY & WHAT?

The Book That Answers Children's Questions

with beautiful illustrations on nearly every page

SIZE 10x7½ INCHES—256 PAGES, LARGE CLEAR TYPE

A BOOK that every boy or girl will want and every parent be glad to see. It answers hundreds of the questions that little Miss "Wants-to-Know" and her Brother, "I-Wonder," are constantly asking.

The book is not a dictionary, nor an encyclopædia, but a bright, readable volume, every page of which is full of interest and entertainment. There are HUNDREDS OF PICTURES, amusing, quaint and instructive, that are alone well worth the price of the volume.

The COLOR PLATES, each taking a whole page, are specially prepared, and are dainty works of art, at once pleasing and educational.

—LIST OF COLOR PLATES—

Sections of an Atlantic Liner. Favourite Dogs. The Races of Mankind. An Iceberg. A Volcano in Eruption. A Wonderful Mountain Railway. Some Favourite Birds. An Atlantic Airship. Animal Helpers of Man. The World's Most Wonderful Viewpoint. A Blast Furnace. A Giant Crane at Work.

—A FEW OF THE CHAPTERS—

Aircraft. Animals of Long Ago. Animals that Help Man. Astronomy. Bees and their Work. Blood, Circulation of the. Can we always believe our Eyes? Caves, Wonderful. Coal; what it means to us. Cranes that build houses and ships. Fire and what it does. Flowers, Wild. Glaciers. Houses of all kinds. How a Motor Car Works. How our Food comes to us. How Pins and Needles are made. How the Clock Works. How we get our Clothes. How we get our Newspapers. How we get Candy and Biscuits. How we Hear. How we Move and Work. How we See. Ice. Machinery, Wonders of. Mountains, How Formed. Polar Exploration. Snow. Trees, Waterfalls, Great. What are Comets? What is a Cinema? What is Glass? What is inside a Watch? What is the Sun? Winter Sports.

and scores of others

But what a lot there is to learn! No wonder children are forever asking "Why?" and "What?" and "How?" and Daddy sometimes wears a puzzled look.

SPECIAL COMBINATION OFFER

The Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and a copy of "Why & What" both postpaid for..... $3.50

The book, sold separately, postpaid, for$2.00

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD : BIBLE HOUSE
NEW YORK

Apple Blossoms and Pumpkins

Continued from page 953

"Oh, I'll keep my part of the bargain, see if I don't," Joan said.

"Well, if you can raise a pumpkin in that old pan on this roof, you deserve a farm."

"You'll see that I'll do it," Joan said with conviction.

"What makes you so sure?" Timothy asked admiringly.

"Oh, I don't know. I don't always pay attention to things, but when I really do want to do a thing, I think about getting just that one thing. That's the way it is."

"I wish I were so sure," Timothy said, but he did not explain what he meant.

THAT evening there had been a flaw in their companionship: it was the thought of Doris Ingles. Joan had seen Timothy with her three times lately, on the street—as, of course, he had a perfect right to be. Though she hoped that she was sensible enough to know that she had no claim on Timothy, still, since that day in the orchard, it had hurt her to see him with Miss Ingles. She hated that kind of impudent beauty.

The very next day, Joan saw Timothy and Miss Ingles come out of a café too high-priced for her to patronize. Both of them spoke to her. Something seemed to tighten up inside of Joan. Perhaps if she had not known how fine and sincere Timothy was she would not have cared so much.

July was hot and dry. One's mouth always felt full of dust. Everywhere, lawns and gardens were drying up. Joan's garden, too, began to shrivel and turn yellow. Every evening she carried water up the steep stairway from the hall below, nevertheless, in spite of all that her garden seemed more parched than before.

"This garden has got to be a success," she said to herself one evening, with a grim determination. "That pumpkin has to grow!" There was only one now, and it was twice as large as a base-ball. "It's got to be a success for the principle of the thing—and for Timothy's sake, even if he should forget." She had decided that she was not going to ask Timothy over again, for two reasons—there were no more garden delicacies to serve him; and he seemed completely wrapped up in Miss Ingles, who was more stunning than ever. Joan had seen Timothy on the street that very day, alone; he had looked haggard and worried, and he had tried to avoid meeting her; she, like a stupid, had pretended that she had not seen him. Perhaps—it really might be—he needed her. However, the garden was hers, and she was going to keep her promise.

Would it never rain? Would relief never come? The basement was stuffy and sickening in spite of electric-fans.

IT WAS the middle of July when Joan checked in for vacation. She had not realized how tired she was. All that first day she lay upon her bed, only dragging herself out to her meals and to the roof to water her garden. The next day she ached in every nerve and she could not eat, yet she carried water to the roof. The day after, she stayed in her room, too tired and dazed to try to get up. Here, Mrs. Withers found her and told her that she was sick. Joan listened stupidly, then said thickly, "I must get up and water the garden."

"The garden! Nothing! Why, child, you can't do it—you're downright sick!"

"Oh, I must!" Joan answered weakly. "I'll get up right now—" But, with the attempt, she lay back trembling. "I guess I'll have to rest a while—I've got to water it—"

"You won't do no such thing! That garden's a crazy thing, and always was!" scolded Mrs. Withers. "You're just all wore out dragging water up to it. Let it dry up. You rest. I wouldn't be so foolish as to waste strength on such nonsense. Lay still," she repeated, as Joan started to get up again. "You listen to me. I'm going to tend to that garden myself. I'll water it good and plenty. I used to help make garden when I wasn't bigger'n a grasshopper. Good and plenty!" she reiterated, leaving the room.

Mrs. Withers did water the garden, grumbling all the while: "Fancy me doing such an outlandish thing, and me dead tired all the time with everything! You'd think that pumpkin was a piece of gold—fancy me—" There was a wide outlook though it was, for the most part, of many unkempt back-yards; there was a wholesome bigness; and so, as Mrs. Withers bent over the little roof-patch, she found herself remembering a certain unpainted, slanting-roofed cottage surrounded by a rambling garden; she saw a half-dozen children clamoring about a gentle-faced woman. "Dearie me," she sighed, "it's a long time since I've thought of home!"

Joan remained in bed a whole week, not ill with a real fever, though just on the border-line of one. Mrs. Withers looked after her a little each day, and each evening, herself thin and shriveled as a dry weed, she mounted to the roof and took care of the garden. Later, she would come down and assure the sick girl that her garden was doing fine.

"And the pumpkin?" Joan would ask eagerly.

"Doing beautiful, Joan." Then Joan would smile rather wanly and take another long rest.

THE morning that Joan returned to the store, Mr. Pitkin told her the news: Mr. Rudd had left Marken-sheimer's, and nobody knew why he had left, or where he had gone.

"Where could he have gone!" Joan exclaimed inanely.

"Well, they say he's left the city—" It was to be hoped that there was no reason—that is, none derogatory to his character.

"Oh—oh!" came like a faint, checked sob, from Joan.

"In fact, he's disappeared. I always liked him. We all did, but it's that kind, popular and good-looking, like him, that go wrong sometimes," Mr. Pitkin said wisely. "He was a likely fellow, though."

"It's too bad," Joan said wearily.

When Joan reached home that evening she wanted to throw herself on the bed and indulge her misery; instead, she clenched her hands and went to the roof. Timothy was gone! Gone without a word! The moon hung again, like a thin rind, but tonight it was hard and empty. Joan thought it all out, but she could come to only one conclusion: for whatever reason he had gone, or where ever he had gone, there could be no fault attached to his going. And yet, if he had only told her he was going!

Before the end of September Joan had changed to fine china and glassware. Likewise, she harvested her beans, which she carefully put into her empty smelling-salts bottle.

There were disagreeable rumors abroad now about Miss Ingles, who, however, met all insinuating glances with a cold stare, which made her even more arrogantly handsome. Next, the suggestion was afloat that Miss Ingles might know of the whereabouts of Timothy Rudd, should she care to tell. One day Miss Ingles failed to appear as model for the latest fall creations—no questions were to be asked.

Thanksgiving was three weeks away when a heavy frost settled down hoar-white upon the roof. The pumpkin-vine turned black; the pumpkin glistened like a pot of gold in the sharp morning light. Tenderly Joan lifted up her treasure and carried it down to her room.

Not a word from Timothy, not a sign to indicate where he might be. Had she, Joan, been foolish to think that Timothy would care anything about the pumpkin—or—about anything else?

Thanksgiving was still two weeks away. As Joan stepped out of the store that evening she had to brace herself against the cutting wind and the swirling blasts of snow. She was about to take the car when a fur-clad lady stepped out of a waiting cab and beckoned to her to stop. Joan could scarcely see for the flurries of snow. The woman seized her by the arm and began to speak, harshly—then Joan saw with surprise that it was Doris Ingles—"I want to know whether you are fool enough to believe lies about Timothy Rudd!"

"No," said Joan, slowly, "I don't believe one of them. I know Timothy Rudd. He's square—"

"He is, count on that, and decent clear through—no thanks to me either—the kind you can't spoil—he's straight, Joan—" Miss Ingles' hand shook on Joan's arm—"I wanted you to know it, that's all."

"Oh, thank you—" but before Joan could say more, Miss Ingles had disappeared into the storm.

THANKSGIVING came. No Timothy. Joan's dinner at the restaurant choked her. The pumpkin was in her room unclaimed. When the twilight began to sift through her skylight, she peered through, across to Timothy's old window. It was a blaze of orange-gold from the setting sun—like a pumpkin of flame—a glow of promise! "Oh, why am I always so hopeful, just to be disappointed! And yet—he said he would remember."

She climbed the narrow stairway again. Even November had its glamor. It made her blood tingle.

Then, suddenly, from behind that gaunt gray chimney came the call that had first brought Timothy—or—was she dreaming in the dim twilight!

"Joan!—Joan!"

"Timothy!" Joan cried, trembling. "I didn't expect to see you here—I've been looking for you—I mean—Oh, I'm glad to see you, Timothy!"

Timothy was good to look at, standing there in the lingering light. The touch of the outdoors was upon him—of the sunshine and the wind, and of a man's work in the fields.

"Why, you are—you must be a farmer!" Joan exclaimed, taking his brown, extended hand.

"Thank you, I am a farmer. Now, I've come back to town. I've been lucky, too, in getting back to my old room."

"O-oh," said Joan, giving a little jump, and swinging herself upon the parapet. "Have you?"

"Yes, Joan," Timothy answered, seating himself beside her. "I had to come back purposely to see about the pumpkin."

"I have it! I'll go and get it—it's in my room—" Joan started to jump down from the wall.

"No, Joan," Timothy said, holding her back, "don't bother about the old pumpkin!"

"Then—you don't care—"

"Oh, but Joan, I do care." Timothy took Joan's hand, unresisting, in his. "That's all I have been caring for, for a long time, Joan. That's what I have been wanting to tell you. You don't know what the promise of that pumpkin meant to me. When I saw you keeping at that garden, with all the odds against it—just an old dirt patch on a roof—and my knowing that you were trying to make a bit of country out of it, why the very thought of it, kept me up. It—you—it's hard to say it, Joan, but your keeping at that garden, and my knowing that you cared for it, and all that it stood for—why, you and that old garden saved me from going terribly wrong, Joan. I've been a fool."

"No, Timothy, please don't say that!"

"But I was, Joan. I came near going to pieces. That's why I picked up and left, short, without saying anything to any one—I just had to leave to get my bearings. Later, I sent word to Hedge, at the office, so that if any one wanted to send me word, they could find me. And, it seems, some one did want to write. Here, read this." He handed her a letter.

AS JOAN read, her face became suffused with happiness. "Oh, Timothy!" she exclaimed; "they want you back as head of the department! I'm proud of you, and glad, glad, Timothy!" Her eyes were shining.

"I'm not going to accept."

"Not going to take it! Why not?" Joan asked, puzzled.

"Because I'm going back to the country. I'm going to be a farmer, Joan. It won't be a big farm—only eighty acres with pasture included, and it won't even be mine. I'm going to rent it. I'm to take possession in January. That won't be long, Joan. There's a little white house on the place, and a good well. And there's a clump of apple-trees behind the house—not a very big orchard, of course."

"It will be fine, Timothy!"

"I'll have to work hard, and I won't look spruce, like a city fellow, like I used to, you know. But, Joan, this is what I am cut out for, and what I can do best. I've been wanting to do it for a whole year. When I saw how you stuck to that garden—that measly little thing—I got desperately hungry for the country. It was then, when I was longing to get back on the farm, that I came to know that there are some things that it doesn't pay to do, and that there are some kinds of girls one had better let alone, even if they don't seem all bad. I began to get sick of the thought of anything but what's just downright simple good—seeing you, Joan, made me want the real things, the true things of life. But, Joan, this is the queer thing about it, when I got to the country, I began to long still more for the town—and then—I knew that it was just you that I couldn't get along without—that is what I want to tell you—I've loved you ever since you said that this old roof was like apple-blossoms. I—Joan, will you come with me to our farm?"

"I want to—more than—anything."

"We'll go in January—some time we'll have a farm all our own—I wouldn't want you to work too hard, Joan—"

While the November night gathered thick and shadowy about the worn old chimneys, and the stars came out one by one, Timothy and Joan saw in vision their own white cottage set in the heart of a fragrant orchard; they saw, too, through their happiness, pumpkins shining like gold in the frosty field.

The World News of the Week

Continued from page 955

Allies that Archbishop Metaxakis, being of Hellenic nationality, is ineligible to be Patriarch according to the Ottoman Constitution and that the Turkish government therefore will refuse to recognize his election.

Since coming to America the Archbishop, who is fifty years old, has organized the Greek churches in this country into a body independent of the See of Athens, with which they formerly were in direct connection; has established a Greek theological seminary in New York City; and has labored to stop the new martyrdom of Christians in Asia Minor.

CHURCH UNION DEFERRED. Efforts of union of Presbyterian and Reformed denominations have met with a reverse, according to a report of a recent Richmond conference issued by Rev. Dr. Clarke, of Nashville, editor of the Presbyterian Advance. It was explained, that one be satisfied with nothing but complete union in one church, a group favored closer relationship did not think it best for the various churches to surrender their autonomy. It was voted therefore to refer the proposed constitution to the separate committees for action and meanwhile the churches will continue to co-operate under the plan of the Council of Reformed Churches.

J. M. CURLEY WINS BOSTON MAYORALTY. Former Mayor James M. Curley was elected Mayor of Boston by a plurality of a little more than 2,000 in a four-cornered contest in which 160,000 votes were cast. Municipal campaigns in Boston are supposed to be on non-partisan lines, and Mr. Curley, who formerly was a Democratic member of Congress, had as his nearest opponent John R. Murphy, a Democrat, who was labeled the "good government candidate."

$20,000,000 VOTED FOR RUSSIAN RELIEF. The bill appropriating $20,000,000 for the relief of famine sufferers in Russia, to be disbursed through the American Relief Administration, has been passed by the House by a vote of 181 to 71. Senate leaders planned to speed the passage of the bill.

Win $2500 FOR NEW YEAR

FUN FOR ALL
FREE for Everybody
15 CASH Prizes

Larger Copies of Picture Sent Free

FIND ALL THE OBJECTS BEGINNING WITH "D"

IN the picture are a number of objects beginning with "D" like dog, darky, devil, etc. See how many you can find. The person who sends in the largest, nearest correct list of "D" words wins first prize, $20.00. Of course you would rather compete for the larger cash prizes that we have offered to introduce our new odor, De Do, as used in our new toilet preparations

How To Win $2500.00

A $1.00 purchase—see list of offers—makes your answer to the picture eligible for the $500.00 prize; a $2.00 purchase makes it eligible for the $1,000.00 prize, and a $5.00 purchase makes it eligible for the $2,500.00 prize. We are offering a small fortune, more than the average person can save in a lifetime, to make everybody acquainted with these delightful preparations for the toilet.

De Do Exquisite Requisites for the Toilet

Exquisite is the only word that really tells how wonderful these preparations are. They are the highest quality that can be made and are put up in charming packages. You could find nothing that will surpass them for gifts or personal use.

Sold Under Absolute Guarantee

Heinrich Products, including De Do preparations, of course, are sold under an absolute guarantee. You are entirely safe in buying them. We see that every purchaser is completely satisfied in every instance.

List of Offers

$1.00 One full size box of De Do Face Powder [white, flesh or natural (brunette)] Prepaid for.....$1.00

$2.00 One each of large jars of De Do Night Cream and Day Cream. Prepaid for.....$2.00

$5.00 One box of De Do Face Powder, one jar each of Night Cream and Day Cream (as above), one $1.50 bottle of exquisite De Do Toilet Water, one 25c box of Nail Polish, and one 35c can of De Do Talcum Powder. Total $5.10. Prepaid for.....$5.00

LIST OF CASH PRIZES

| | If No Purchase Is Made | If $1.00 Purchase Is Made | If $2.00 Purchase Is Made | If $5.00 Purchase Is Made |
|-------------------|------------------------|----------------------------|----------------------------|----------------------------|
| First prize..... | $20.00 | $500.00 | $1,000.00 | $2,500.00 |
| Second prize..... | 10.00 | 250.00 | 500.00 | 1,250.00 |
| Third prize..... | 5.00 | 125.00 | 250.00 | 625.00 |
| Fourth prize..... | 5.00 | 75.00 | 150.00 | 375.00 |
| Fifth prize..... | 5.00 | 50.00 | 100.00 | 250.00 |
| Sixth prize..... | 3.00 | 40.00 | 80.00 | 200.00 |
| Seventh prize.... | 3.00 | 30.00 | 60.00 | 150.00 |
| Eighth prize..... | 3.00 | 20.00 | 40.00 | 100.00 |
| Ninth prize..... | 2.00 | 15.00 | 30.00 | 75.00 |
| 10th to 15th.... | 2.00 | 10.00 | 20.00 | 50.00 |

Wonderful Opportunity for Workers

Start in business for yourself. Be your own boss. Supply Heinrich products to your community, either town or country, and make $1.00 every hour you work. Write for list of open territories and full particulars.

Heinrich Chemical Company

1907 East Hennepin Ave.

Minneapolis Minn., U. S. A.

De Do Toilet Water $1.50

De Do Talc. 35c

De Do Night Cream $1.00

De Do Day Cream $1

De Do Face Powder $1.00

De Do Nail Polish 25c

"Save the Chicks"

incubator Tycos thermometer

For any make of incubator. Free booklet tells all about hatching chicks. Send for it.

Taylor Instrument Companies
1466 Rochester, N.Y. U.S.A.

Cuticura Talcum

Fascinatingly Fragrant

Always Healthful

Sample free of Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass. Everywhere 25c.

Resolve to Make 1922 a Bible Study Year

It will enrich your own soul—it will enable you to do better service for your Lord, and you will enjoy your Christian work more. Nothing is so embarrassing as to be in a company of Christians and not be intelligent about the important subjects that are being discussed during these times.

Not the least of these is the subject of prophecy and interpretation of the Scripture in the present day world movements. Such help can be secured by subscribing to the

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE MONTHLY
$2.00 a Year

Rev. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Editor Moody Bible Institute Monthly

Dr. James M. Gray, D.D., Dean of Moody Bible Institute, is the Editor. He keeps abreast of the times and his editorials are timely. The contributions also deal with Bible study, interpretation, missionary notes, besides departments devoted to exposition of the Sunday School lessons, Young People's topics, evangelistic notes, etc.

If you do not want to subscribe for a whole year, take a three months trial subscription for 50 cents. Use coupon below.

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE MONTHLY,
152 Institute Pl., Chicago, Ill.

Enclosed find 50 cents for 3 months trial subscription.

Name.....

Address.....

PARK AVENUE HOTEL
4th Avenue from 32nd to 33rd Streets, New York
Subway entrance at door

One of the best known hotels in the metropolis. Convenient to shopping, theatres and in the heart of the wholesale district.

Less than 50 cents taxi fare (one or more persons) from either railway terminal. Surface cars pass door.

PRICES FOR ROOMS

| | |
|------------------------|---------------------------|
| 50 Single Rooms | $2.25 per day |
| 100 Single Rooms | $2.50 per day |
| 250 Double Rooms | $4.00 per day and upward |
| Single Rooms with Bath | $4.00 per day and upward |
| Double Rooms with Bath | $5.00 per day and upward |

POPULAR PRICE CAFETERIA AND REGULAR RESTAURANT

GEORGE C. BROWN, Proprietor

OUR MAIL-BAG

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters, nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

MRS. H. A. O'DON, Ind., and many other readers who have written us about the need of a simple Family Prayer Service for daily use, will find their desire gratified in the Christian Herald. In next week's issue we begin the publication of "The Family Altar," which includes a very simple home daily Service, such as can be adapted to the needs of any household and which will take very little time. We believe this short Service will be cordially welcomed in a great multitude of homes and that it will be a means of blessing to many. Tell your friends about it, and invite them to begin the New Year by setting up the Family Altar and uniting in the nation-wide Praying Circle of the Christian Herald.

Missionary I. L. Shaver, of the M. E. Church (South), Hiroshima, Japan, writes to the Christian Herald: "Missionaries in Japan during the past forty or fifty years have been teaching the Japanese to observe the Sabbath as a day of rest and worship. Missionaries have preceded business men as the Gospel has preceded trade and commerce in almost all the countries of the world. But today, many business men and athletes from Europe and America come and, disregarding the law of the Sabbath and violating the teachings of the Christian missionaries and of the Word of God, carry on business, play games and attend social receptions on the Sabbath Day. We have had examples of this recently here in Japan. A party of business men and women from the western part of the United States attended a reception given by the Japanese in Kobe on a recent Sunday, instead of attending a religious service at a Christian Church to which they had a special invitation. And in Hiroshima, on Sunday, November 6, a baseball team from a certain university in the Northwest, according to previous arrangements, played a game of ball. We who are engaged in Christian work out here regret very much that such things occur, and pray that men coming from America to Japan in the future may reverence God, respect the teachings of Christian workers, and remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy."

G. F. B., Akron, O. When in doubt concerning the propriety of any course of action—as to its being right or wrong—the best advice we can give is to let it severely alone.

C. M. A., Conde S. D. writes: "I would like to know why it has in so many instances become necessary for the Church to resort to inventions of men in order to entertain people and draw them to the places of worship these days. Has the old Gospel lost its power or isn't it preached from the pulpits of the average church? Christ said: 'If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto Me.' What the Church needs today is to get back where the early Church was—get more life and less of all that will hinder the work of the Spirit."

J. W. W., Newark, N. J. writes: "Reading an item in The Christian Herald of 5,000,000 unemployed, it seems strange that the motion-picture houses should be getting rich. They are run mostly by foreigners, and Christian people attend them on the Sabbath. This is only one of the many drawbacks Christian people are up against. There are enough pleasures without these motion pictures being allowed on the Sabbath. I think if we had better mayors, this could be remedied. But the mighty dollar is the cause."

Mrs. G. L., Roxville, N. Y., writes: "I like your paper very much and would be lonely without it now. In last week's paper there was a plea for help for unemployed men in the city. It seems to me it would be better to help them to find employment. The country is very short of laborers. Farmers would hire a good many men if they could get them. They could give good board and a good bed and wages, according to what the men could earn. We want no men that want to lie in bed until breakfast is ready, and then work until 5 p. m. at $3 or $4 per day. Farmers have to rise before daylight and work until dark or after. Men with a desire to earn their living would be very welcome in a farming community, for here in our neighborhood in the past week, women have helped to cut corn and to make up help enough to fill silos. There are potatoes to dig, and men with no experience at farming could surely dig and pick up potatoes. If men would leave the 'bright lights' of the city behind and be willing to work hard for what they eat and wear, this country would be much better off."

A Reader in Little Rock, Ark., writes: "Please let me know through Our Mail-Bag if a book has ever been written exposing loan sharks. We have two breeds here—the three-ball shark and a lower breed that lends to colored people only. The lower breed will lend a negro say $10 for one month, for which they charge $3.75 interest. It is seldom that a negro can get $10 together at the end of month. As a matter of fact, the lender is in hopes that he can not, as he would prefer that the negro raise the $3.75 interest. Some negroes have been known to pay as much as $100 or more in interest, and finally get to the place where they can't raise the interest. Then the loan shark will go to their homes and take every piece of furniture from them. The negro lenders pay the city of Little Rock $50 a year and the three-ball sharks $600 per year. The latter charge 10 per cent. a month on loans. Do you think it possible for me to get information from some of the leading citizens as to the City License and the amount of interest charges?"

It should be possible to deal with these people through the District Attorney of your city. There are laws for the curbing of usury, and if you can submit proper evidence in legal form, he will know how to apply the remedy. The City License Bureau will probably be able to give you the information you want as to the license and loan regulations in other cities. We know of no book on the subject. Let us hear how you succeed.

J. J. S., Corsicana, Tex., writes: "Some years ago I received from you the book, 'Forty Future Wonders.' I have been much interested in its pages, and still think the interpretations of the prophecies as therein explained, to be the best I have read. Will you please tell me if there are any late notes from the Rev. Baxter?"

Mr. Baxter passed away several years ago. As far as we know, he left no unpublished literary work. As you, like many others, are deeply interested in prophecy, we would advise you to get an early copy of Dr. Patch's new book, "Prophecy Explained," which is just being issued by the Christian Herald. It is the most enlightening and edifying work on prophecy we have ever had the opportunity to issue, and will be in wide demand.

G. A., Saratoga Springs, N. Y., writes: "With no desire for controversy, and with some hesitancy in advancing an opinion contrary to what is characterized as the general interpretation, the writer feels impelled to give a version of 1 Peter 3: 19, 20, differing from that given in your issue of Aug. 20, in reply to M. H., Coffeyville, Miss. By Isaiah 47: 7 and 62: 1 it would seem that we are to understand that those who are bound by sin are in a sense captives, therefore in prison. To proclaim liberty to the captives was one of the motives of our Saviour in coming to this earth. But in 1 Peter 3: 20 is pointed out, what we all know to be a fact, that those in darkness—imprisoned by sin, so to speak—are not always willing to be set free, and reference is made to the antediluvians, that the same was true in their day—that only a small number accepted freedom. This version of these passages is based on what is regarded by some as an almost infallible rule, that Scripture should be interpreted by Scripture. The writer believes the two verses from 1 Peter are thus in harmony with the general trend of Gospel teaching."

A. F. C., New York City, writes: "Prohibition is part of the Constitution and can not be nullified, but seems to be difficult of enforcement, especially in this locality. To me, that is because the law is one-sided. The maker and the seller of liquor are penalized, but not the buyer or the drinker, without whom the first could not be. If the user were held equally responsible and guilty with the seller, I think we would be much nearer real Prohibition than we are now. Why is this inequality of punishment for equal guilt?"

Are You A Vegetarian?

NATURE places in fruits and vegetables certain elements which help to keep the human body healthy. Those who eat an abundance of such foods seldom suffer from indigestion, sour stomach, biliousness, constipation, headaches, and the endless train of distressing symptoms which such disorders cause.

You may not always be able to choose your diet carefully or to avail yourself of the benefits of a scientifically-selected variety of foods, but you can give your system the benefit of the same vegetable laxative properties contained in vegetable foods.

Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) is made entirely of concentrated vegetable ingredients which are therapeutically the same as Nature furnishes in the most healthful of foods. That is why millions of persons use this pure, mild, natural aid to health in preference to anything else.

Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) does more than a laxative. It tones the stomach, increases the assimilation and elimination, helps to cleanse, purify and enrich the blood by aiding nature to re-establish the vigorous and harmonious functioning which makes the body feel like new.

All Druggists Sell

The Dainty

25c. Box

of

NR Tablets

Used for over 30 years

Chips off the Old Block

NR JUNIORS—Little NRs
One-third of regular dose. Made of same ingredients, then candy-coated. For children and adults. Have you tried them? Send a 2c. stamp for postage on liberal sample in the attractive blue and yellow box. A. H. LEWIS MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

RESINOL

Soothing and Healing Gives Speedy Relief to Babies

Tortured by Skin Trouble Will not irritate the tender skin

The little matter of 15 cts. (coin or stamps) will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is a cheerful illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center for people everywhere, an independent home paper that tells the story of the world in an interesting, understandable way. Now in its 29th year. This splendid National weekly supplies a long-felt want, it costs but $1 a year. If you want to know what is going on in the world, this is your best means. If you want a paper in your home which is reliable and wholesome, if you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, entertainingly, briefly—here it is. Splendid serial and short stories and miscellany. The Question Box answers YOUR questions and is a mine of information. Send 15 cts. to show that you might like such a paper and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15 cents does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Try it for 13 weeks. Address: The Pathfinder, 619 Langdon St., Washington, D. C.

WURLITZER 200 YEARS INSTRUMENT MAKERS

Free Trial
Any musical instrument sent on a week's free trial with complete outfit, case, self-instructor, etc. No obligation to buy.

Monthly Payments
Easy terms, only a few cents a day.

Send for Catalog
Shows all instruments. Trial blank enclosed.

Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., Dept. 6757
117 E. Fourth St., 700 W. Jackson Blvd., 120 W. 42nd St.
Cincinnati, O. Chicago, Illinois New York, N.Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by the Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Graham C. Patterson, President and Treasurer; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President; Rae D. Brink, Secretary.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES: $2 a year in advance. Remittance should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE: For copies mailed to Canada and fifty cents; outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price. Canadian remittances accepted at par.

CHANGE OF DATE: It takes at least three weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION: The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. For example, Dec. 1 signifies that subscription expires with the last issue of December 1921.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS: It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, the CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Copyright, 1921, by Christian Herald.

Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office at New York, N. Y.

Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada.

FORD OWNERS!

Learn about wonderful new power maker. Eliminates spark lever—stops misfiring—adds power and speed—saves gas and in waterproof. It is a wonderful new ignition system now in use on several of America's high-grade motor cars. Priced low. Ask about Free Trial Offer.

A. B. M. Co., Box 1289, Brightwood, Mass.

"A valuable aid to the study of the Bible"

"PROPHECY EXPLAINED"

By GEORGE H. PATCH

A book showing that we are living in times of prophetic fulfillment

Vol. 12mo. Cloth
7½ x 5 ins.)
Pages of

The following is a condensed list of contents

PART ONE. INTRODUCTORY. THE THEME AND PERSONNEL OF PROPHECY

1. Life. The Great Theme of the Bible.
2. Satan. The Destroyer.
3. The Holy Spirit. Author of Prophecy.
4. Jesus. Prophet, Priest, and King.
5. The Prophets. Through Whom God Spoke.
6. Israel. The Chosen People.
7. The Church of Christ. His Bride.
8. The Kingdom of God. The Kingdom of Heaven.
9. The King. King of Israel; King of Kings.

PART TWO. SOME FULFILLED PROPHECIES

10. Tyre and Sidon.
11. Egypt.

12. Broken Vows.
13. Israel's Idolatry.
14. Israel in Exile.
15. Israel's Enemy.
16. The Death Blow.
17. The First Advent.
18. The Final Dispersion.

PART THREE. WORLD EMPIRES

19. A Great Dream.
20. Four Great Beasts.
21. The Ram and the He-Goat.
22. The First Beast Slain.
23. The Seventy Sevens.
24. Daniel's Great Vision.
25. Antiochus Epiphanes.
26. The Time of the End.

PART FOUR. THE JUDGMENT DAY

27. The Day of Jehovah.
28. Jesus the Judge.
29. Letters from Jesus.
30. The Laodicean Church.
31. A Vision in Heaven.
32. The Seven-Sealed Roll.

33. The Conqueror Crowned.
34. The End of the Age.
35. Separations and Sealings.
36. The Seventh Seal Opened.
37. The First and Second Woes.
38. The Challenge.
39. Joy in Heaven.
40. The Closed Door.
41. A Great Sign.
42. The Two Beasts.
43. The Lamb on Mount Zion.
44. The Seven Last Plagues.
45. The Great Harlot.
46. Babylon the Great.
47. King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

PART FIVE. THE MILLENNIAL AGE

48. The Repentant Wife.
49. Millennial Thrones.
50. Millennial Palestine.

PART SIX. AGES OF AGES

51. The Final Consummation.
52. The New Jerusalem.

Covers the whole field of Prophecy and clears away all difficulties

"This excellent book appears opportunely at a time when, more than in any previous period in modern history, Prophecy is uppermost in the minds of thoughtful men and women throughout the world. This is a wonderful book on Prophecy. It will be welcomed by Christian men and women everywhere. It brings solace and consolation and reassurance.

"Mr. Patch has shed a flood of light on Prophecy and especially on Revelation. His work cannot fail to be commended by Bible students and Christian people wherever the Bible is read and studied. It is the most important book we have ever published on Prophecy."—Dr. George H. Sandison.

Special Money Saving Offer

Anyone may order a copy of "Prophecy Explained" and a copy of this Red Letter Bible, both postpaid for $4.00 when ordered at one time.

We will send the Christian Herald for one year, 52 weeks, and a cloth bound copy of "Prophecy Explained," both for $3.00

We will send a copy of the book free of charge to any one sending us $4.00 for two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald. Extra copies of "Prophecy Explained" may be had, postpaid, for $1.50.

Bible Classes may order 10 copies or more at $1.20 postpaid.

The Famous Christian Herald RED LETTER BIBLE

What Is a Red Letter Bible?

1. In the Old Testament the passages, quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are Printed in Red.

2. In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of the Saviour are Printed in Red.

3. A Red Star (*) immediately following a verse in the Old Testament indicates that the verse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah.

The Christian Herald Red Letter Bible Contains 919 pages for the Old Testament
284 " for the New Testament
32 " Bible Readers' aids and helps
16 Maps in colors

1251 Total Pages

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter Bible is the Authorized or King James' Version unchanged save for the variation of the color in the type. Two colors (Red and Black) are employed, in accordance with the simple plan devised by the late Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the Red Letter principle to the Holy Scriptures.

The text is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and very durable, weighs only 20 ounces. It is bound in American Bible Leather, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, with silk ribbon marker, and makes altogether the handiest and most satisfactory Bible now on the market.

We send this Superb Bible, together with The Christian Herald for one whole year, both for $5.00

This Bible is sold separately, postpaid, for... $3.50

Printed on American Bible Paper

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Cleanliness brings Good Cheer

A Merry Christmas
and
A Happy New Year

your
"Old Dutch"

